State Senator Ted Dalton, Republican of Radford, said: "It is gratifying to see that our State is coming gradually to a pupil assignment plan administered by the localities. The sooner we get there the safer our schools will be. Too, I know that educators will be relieved to see the compulsory school attendance laws reinstated."

Representative Tuck, Democrat of Virginia, said, "We need more resistance, not less."

Mr. Tuck said the report carries "many of the earmarks of State Senator Ted Dalton's campaign platform which was repudiated by the people in November, 1956," when Senator Dalton ran for Governor.

Edward R. Carr, chairman of Fairfax Country-Falls Church Committee for Public Schools, said:

"The report attempts to provide the framework for a diversity of solutions to the current school problem in order to offer alternatives based on varying local conditions. . . ."

State Action Due Soon on Perrow Data

RICHMOND, Mar. 28 (AP)—Virginia's General Assembly will reconvene its special school session Tuesday but is not expected to come to grips with the Perrow commission's top secret proposals for another week.

It appears virtually certain the Assembly merely will go through the formality of meeting at noon Tuesday and then will recess again until April 6.

This will permit printing of the education commission's proposals and give the legislators a chance to delve into just what the commission and the Governor want them to enact as new legal deterrents to classroom integration of the races.

Capitol sources said there is doubt the commission recommendations will be ready for distribution to the Assembly Tuesday — assuming the 40-member commission gives its final approval to the report at its meeting Monday afternoon.

Challenges Anticipated

Clerks of both the House of Delegates and Senate advised members of their temporary legislative staffs living away from Richmond they would not need to be present Tuesday. The few exceptions included key aides to the clerks.

It still appears the commission will not recommend any action on repeal or amendment of the constitutional section requiring the State to operate a public school system. Instead, informed sources say the recommendations will be geared to some form of local option in coping with desegregation.

On whether the new recommendations designed to supplant the now defunct massive resistance to integration laws would be subject to constitutional challenge, one commission source commented:

"I think it would be safe to assume that anything the Legislature enacts designed to contain school integration at token levels will be challenged."

When the Perrow commission—appointed by Gov. Almond and headed by Senator Mosby G. Perrow jr. of Lynchburg—launched its assignment early in February, it generally was expected to come up with some proposal to give localities an escape from the requirement of operating public schools as now required by the constitution.

Local Option Considered

As the commission met at the State capitol during the past week, it became apparent thinking was against any constitutional change in the immediate future. Instead, commission sources indicated there might be a proposal to allow reduction of State school appropriations to the financial minimum provided in the constitution. This would amount to a drop in the bucket compared with the present totals.

Localities would be given the equivalent of the present allotment in school funds, but the money would not be earmarked for schools. In effect, this would give the localities the option of full or limited public school operation.

When the Assembly convened its extra session January 28, the Governor told the Legislature he would ask the commission to study the constitutional questions, as well as such matters as disposal of surplus school properties; pupil enrollment, transfer and attendance; pupil transportation; teacher retirement and sick leave; and the tax situation, including the long range impact of tuition grants and the imposition of a sales tax.

The commission is not expected to touch on the tax problems in its forthcoming report to the Governor.

Along with its recommendations ill go some 15 to 20 bills designed to carry out the proposals. The Governor will make his recommendations to the Assembly, probably in a personal appearance.

Political realities indicate some members of the Assembly would prefer to defer any action on controversial legislation in the package the Governor sends down until after April 15. That

Assembly to Get Plan on Schools

The lawmakers yesterday recessed their special session until Monday after witnessing a demonstration of about 5,000 die-hard segregationists urging them to continue the path of massive resistance.

This was after the Perrow Commission on Education handed Gov. Almond the result of its eight-week study of new ways to contain or minimize the effects of Federal court-ordered desegregation in Virginia. The commission approved the report by a 31 to 9 vote.

Copies of the report were not made available to the legislators yesterday but were put in in the mail last night. The Perrow Commission's findings are to be announced in the press tomorrow.

Almond Address Monday

Gov. Almond will address a joint session of the House and Senate on Monday, conveying his own recommendations on the commission report.

He declined an invitation of the 5,000 demonstrators on the South Portico of the State Capitol to appear before them. They in turn declined his invitation to send a dozen or so spokesmen to his office on the top ffoor of the building.

The group converged on Richmond under the title of "Bill of Rights Crusade." Headed by Benton Coiner of Waynesboro, the group's executive committee voted to organize a permanent Virinia Committee on Constitutional Government.

Speaking from the steps of the one-time Capitol of the Confederacy, Mr. Coiner told an enthusiastic but orderly crowd:

"Constitutional government in Virginia is in jeopardy because some of her leadership has degenerated to political expediencies. Many in high office no longer lead but rather . . . bow to illegal Federal decisions with token resistance."

"End of Rope"

Gov. Almond had told General Assembly before it's recess on February 2 that Virginia had reached the end of its legal rope in staving off Federal court orders to desegregate. Advance indications of the Perrow Commission's new "freedom of choice" program indicate that this must be accepted as a fact which cannot be escaped.

Mr. Coiner sounded the keynote of the Assembly when he told the gathering: "We are calling on our elected representatives to interpose the sovereignty of this Commonwealth against the tyranny of the Federal Government."

Edward J. Silverman, a Blackstone newspaper advertising official, noted the absence of Gov. Almond whom he called a great orator and citizen.

Sees Surrender

"But," Mr. Silverman added, "his voice no longer rings out against Federal tyranny and it appears he wishes this legislative body to surrender and submit to the ruthless might of Washington."

The crowd was noisy in its applause but presented no problems to the 17-member Capitol police staff assisted by a number of State police troopers.

At the end of Mr. Silverman's talk somebody in the crowd called "where's the Governor" and there was a shout of "drag him out." The Governor was in his office overlooking the South portico.

Mr. Silverman quickly called on the crowd to do nothing to reflect on the organization or themselves. He then asked a minister to close the session with a prayer.

Senator W. F. Stone of Martinsville said the mass meeting "was one of the most inspiring incidents in my public career.

Senator Harry F. Byrd, jr., of Winchester, said he couldn't remember a larger crowd in Capitol Square. He said the people were exercising the fundamental right of cittizens to petition their elected representatives.

Senator E. E. Killey of Richmond remarked that Mr. Silverman said a lot of things "we'd like to be able to do. It's just a question of somebody showing us how to get it done."

Attorney General A. S. Harrison, jr., said he thought the group was made up of dedicated Virginians who made the suggestions in good faith and in an effort to help.

An aide said Gov. Almond would spend most of today reading the new legislative proposals and drafting the special message he will deliver to the Assembly on Monday.

Choice Expected

While details of the commission report remained secret, authoritative sources had indicated in advance that it would recommend that no change be made in the State Constitution which requires Virginia to maintain a system of free public schools.

Advance indications also have been given that localities and individual parents would be given a choice of accepting court - ordered integrated schools or State funds for tuition in private schools.

Federal and State courts have struck down the key provisions of Virginia's old massive resistance laws which refused to recognize racial integration anywhere in the State.

As a result, 51 Negroes have been ordered admitted to 11 formerly all - white public schools in Arlington, Alexandria, Norfolk and Warren County. At least 12 Negroes are due to be admitted to two white schools in Charlottesville in September.

Perrow Unit's School Plan Meets Delay

Racial Proposals Due to Come Up in Assembly Monday

By ALEX R. PRESTON
Staff Staff Writer

RICHMOND, Mar. 31—The General Assembly today was due to put on until next Monday consideration of a "freedom of choice" substitute for Virginia's discarded massive resistance laws dealing with public school desegregation.

Approximately a three-to-one agreement was reported reached by the 40 members of the Perrow Education Commission in a secret session to put final touches on their legislative report last night.

The commission was scheduled to meet behind closed doors again today, one hour before a special session of the General Assembly reconvenes. The assembly has been in recess since February 2, awaiting the commission's report. Today's commission meeting was set for members to sign the report.

Copies of the new legislative approach to the racial problem, however, could not be printed in time to go to each of the 140 members of the Legislature today. Leaders were prepared to ask the lawmakers to take a second recess to come back and begin work on the new laws Monday.

Release Due This Week

The Perrow Commission recommendations will be released to the public and members of the General Assembly later this week, probably on Thursday.

Designation of the program as "freedom of choice" came from an administration source who said that Gov. Almond was highly pleased with the reported majority approval the plan has been given.

Indications already revealed are that the majority report will recommend retaining a section of the State constitution which requires Virginia to maintain a public school system.

About a score of new bills have been drafted revising the present tuition grant program for private schooling and setting up new legal procedures for localities to deal with their own particular racial problems.

The basic concept would be to allow a city or county freedom of choice in maintaining a public school system or switching to tuition grants for private education. It also contemplates that individual parents would be allowed a freedom of choice in sending their children to segregated or desegregated schools.

Minority Report Planned

A minority report on the Perrow Commission's studies also was due to be sent to Gov. Almond, along with the majority's findings. A member of the minority group said "10 or more" members of the 40-member group would sign this report.

When the commission began its deliberations on instructions from Gov. Almond in February, it reportedly was divided between 24 "moderates" and 16 in favor of pursuing massive resistance.

The courts, however, already had overthrown the kay laws in the State's massive resistance approach which refused to recognize integration anywhere.

Schools in Arlington, Alexandria, Warrent County and Norfolk were desegregated last month by Federal court decrees. In Warren, however, all white students have remained out of the desegregated school.

Meanhwhile a number of massive resistance-minded citizens, principally from Southside Virginia, were planning a demonstration at the State Capitol today. The group, called the Bill of Rights Crusade, is headed by C. Benton Coiner of Waynesboro.

The crusaders claimed in advance they would have several thousand here from at least 70 counties and 11 cities in the State.

Gov. Almond has informed the group he would meet a delegation of 10 or 12 of their number in his office later today.

Virginia Tries Again

The recommendations of Virginia's Perrow Commission add up to a sincere attempt, we believe, to make the best of an extremely difficult situation.

At the outset, the commission was faced with a formidable array of conflicting pressures. It had to accept, and it did accept, the Supreme Court's ban on racially segregated public schools. It had to contend with a strong, but probably a minority, sentiment in the State which opposes any integration anywhere. This was shown by the fact that nine of the 40 commission members turned in an unyielding dissenting report, while five others signed the majority report with "reservations." It also was evidenced by an extraordinary spectacle in Richmond—5,000 people cheering a so-called Bill of Rights Crusade speaker who said that legislators permitting any integration were "traitors." At the other end of the equation, the commission was faced with what we believe to be the dominant sentiment in Virginia—an unwillingness to abandon the State's public school system, at least at this time.

In an effort to reconcile these conflicting interests, the commission has come forward with an elaborate plan which is bottomed on the principle of local option. Broadly speaking, each locality is permitted to decide whether it will have an integrated public school system, segregated schools, or, if the issue is forced, private schools on a tuition-payment basis plus a skeletonized public school system for Negroes.

This certainly is not an ideal solution of Virginia's problem. It may be improved, or it may be made worse, when the General Assembly receives the program next week. But one thing is self-evident—those who would condemn the Perrow Commission's effort should be ready to come forward with a better answer to this most difficult problem.

Negroes May Ask U. S. Court To Open Schools in Virginia

By Robert E. Baker
Staff Reporter

RICHMOND, Jan. 21—A Negro attorney said today the Federal court will probably be asked to force the reopening of closed schools in Norfolk, Charlottesville and Warren County if the school boards fail to reopen them soon.

The attorney, Oliver W. Hill of Richmond, said the school boards should be given a "reasonable time" to comply with Federal court desegregation orders, now that the State's "massive resistance" laws have been knocked down by Virginia and Federal courts.

Nine schools were shut down in the three communities by Virginia's school closing law to thwart desegregation. But that law and other anti-integration laws were invalidated by court decisions on Monday.

This placed the school boards in the position of being under Federal court order to desegregate schools which now have no legal reason for remaining closed.

The boards were put under pressure to keep them closed by Gov. J. Lindsay Almond in a speec hlast night. He vowed unyielding resistance to any desegregation and urged continuance of private schooling.

Gets Byrd Support

Today the Governor got unsurprising support for his stand from Sen. Harry F. Byrd (D-Va.), architect of "massive resistance," who predicted that Almond's "notable" speech "will further stiffen resistance."

Almond received about 500 telegrams today, and his aides reported they supported the Governor by a 15 to 1 margin.

The Governor apparently has assembled a list of legislators whom he will appoint to a commission to draw up further defenses against desegregation.

He checked the Senate appointees with Lt. Gov. A. E. Stephens today. will check the House appointees with Speaker E. Blackburn Moore on Thursday and probably will announce his selections on Friday.

The commission membership was being readied amid increasing reports that a short special session of the General Assembly will be called almost immediately to resurrect the disabled tuition grant laws, and then adjourn while the commission works on a program for submission to a later special session.

The present tuition grant laws for private schooling were declared invalid by the State Supreme Court because they would be financed by funds withheld from closed public schools.

Board Not Affected

Closeted with the Governor today was the three member State Pupil Placement Board. Almond issued a statement later saying the meeting was called because of inquiries about the Board's status in the wake of the court decisions.

"These decisions," said Almond, "did not pertain to the Pupil Placement Board which is operating as it has done since it was established."

In Virginia's desegregation cases so far, the Federal courts have consistently refused to recognize the State Pupil Placement Board as a factor and have held local school boards responsible for pupil assignments.

Meanwhile, the Arlington School Board, which has faithfully but reluctantly followed the massive resistance program, fought another legal battle before the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals sitting here today.

Arlington is appealing an order of Alexandria Federal Judge Albert V. Bryant admitting four Negroes into Stratford Junior High Schol on Feb. 2. In a cross appeal, Negro attorneys are appealing the rejection of 26 other Negro applicants who sought to enter Arlington white schools.

The three-judge court took the case under advisement after hearing arguments. A decision is expected shortly.

Negro attorneys insisted that the Arlington School Board's pupil assignment can be judged legal only if applied fairly to all transfer students, white and Negro.

The primary contention of the Negroes is that the school board applied the five criteria —attendance area, scholastic achievement, overcrowdedness, phsycological problems and adaptability only to the Negro applicants.

"No matter how you cut it," said Frank D. Reeves of Washington, "it is clear that they were treated differently, in a manner related solely to the factor of race."

"We would not object," he said, "if the criteria were applied to all the students applying for transfer and applied fairly."

The outcome of that argument is significant. If upheld, it would set a precedent for the use of pupil assignment plans elsewhere in the South.

In his decision, Judge Bryan supported the School Board's rejection on the Negro applicants who failed to meet the standards of attendance area, scholostic achievement and overcrowdedness. He did not rule on those rejected for phsychological reasons because they also had been rejected for ther reasons.

The four pupils which he ordered enrolled had been rejected by the School Board under its "adaptability" standard. The Judge ruled the School Board did not present sufficient evidence to support the reiections.

VIRGINIA PASSES KEY SCHOOL BILLS

Almond's Plan for Easing Integration Is Approved —Extremists Active

By HOMER BIGART
Special to The New York Times.

RICHMOND, Va., Jan. 31—The Virginia General Assembly completed action today on the emergency program of Gov. J. Lindsay Almond Jr. designed to soften the impact of school integration.

But the extreme segregationist bloc, by permitting quick Senate action on the Governor's bills, won an Administration promise that the special session of the Assembly would continue through Monday.

These members want to be ready to renew pressure for the closing of all public schools in the event of any disorders in Norfolk and Arlington, where the state's first integrated school classes are scheduled to open Monday.

Hopes for peaceful acceptance of token integration in those communities are being clouded by preparations of extremist groups. In Arlington, where four Negro students are scheduled to enroll in Stratford Junior High School, the Defenders of State Sovereignty and Individual Liberties will picket the school, urging white students to boycott the classes.

Picketing Planned

Jack Rathbone, executive secretary of the Defenders Arlington chapter, said that forty pickets would parade near the school grounds. He said that other Defenders in automobiles would follow the school buses, calling on children to "stay home and let the General Assembly solve it."

"We will have signs for the kids to carry," he said.

The program approved by the General Assembly implies acceptance of token integration but encourages a boycott of integrated schools. One bill repeals the compulsory attendance laws; another makes tuition grants available for children shifting from an integrated public school to a private non-sectarian school.

The Administration's tuition plan bill, which the House approved yesterday, was passed unanimously in the Senate this afternoon after it had finally been freed by the Finance Committee.

Closure Bill Killed

The committee, in executive session, first killed, 19 to 7, a bill by Senator Gordon Gray that would have the effect of closing all integrated public schools. It had the support of the most ardent segregationists, including State Senator Harry Flood Byrd Jr.

The Governor's bill to repeal the compulsory school attendance law was approved 36 to 3.

Senator Ted Dalton, Republican leader, warned that the Assembly was "striking a blow for ignorance in Virginia."

He said that repeal of compulsory attendance invited 900,000 Virginia school children to "loaf on the street corners or hitchhike around te country" and that juvenile delinquency was certain to increase.

It took many years for Virginia to adopt a compulsory school attendance law as "the bedrock of the public school system," Senator Dalton said. Now, he said, it is being thrown out in what he called a desperate and futile attempt to prevent the mixing of races in school rooms.

He warned that the Virginia economy would be adversely affected by failure to maintain the schools.

'Forced on Us'

Administration speakers retorted that the repeal action, while "unwise in normal conditions," had been "forced on us by this tremendous crisis."

Senator Edward L. Breeden of Norfolk, where seventeeen Negroes are to enroll Monday in six public schools, said that he hoped parents would keep the childern off street corners by placing them in private schools.

The Senate also passed a bill aimed at preventing an expected flurry of bomb threats to integrated schools.

Still awaiting action was a number of bills and resolutions from last-ditch segregationists for eleventh-hour action to prevent any integration on Monday. Among them is a resolution asking the State Board of Education to close all schools next week pending action by the General Assembly to insure "peace and tranquility."

Sex Separation Urged

Another bill introduced in the House would enforce segregation of school children by sex. Any teacher who permitted the mixing of sexes in a racially integrated school would be discharged and could not be rehired by any other school in the state.

Collins Denny of Richmond, counsel for the Defenders, was the chief spokesman for the extreme segregationists at a public hearing of the Senate Finance Committee on the Administration's tuition grant bill.

Mr. Denny supported the substitute Gray bill, which would cut off funds to any integrated school.

Defending the Administration bill, Attorney General Albertis Harrison warned that unless the tuition grant program appeared free of the taint of racial discrimination it would be quickly struck down by the Federal Courts.

21 Negroes Peacefully Enter 7 White Schools In Virginia; Only Minor Incidents Occur

Police Out In Force, But Unneeded

By DOUGLAS B. CORNELL
Associated Press Staff Writer

Richmond, Va., Feb. 2.—Virginia gluttony gave way to racial integration Monday and hesitantly took 21 Negro children into seven white schools.

The Negro pupils came and went unmolested at schools in Norfolk and Arlington County. In each community a few white children who refused to attend school with them picked up their books and left.

Special police details turned out to maintain order. But they didn't have to work at it. There were no commotions, serious incidents, or even any catcalls—only the usual loud chatter of teen-agers.

President Pleased

White House press secretary James C. Hagerty said in Washington that President Eisenhower had been following the integration process in Virginia quite closely and "thinks it is a fine thing that it has been orderly."

Arlington school officials reported after classes were over for the day that an anonymous telephone call, apparently from a woman, had come through about noon saying a bomb had been planted in Stratford Junior High and timed to go off at 1:30 p.m.

A quick search turned up nothing. In the belief the call was a hoax, authorities ruled out evacuating the building.

3 Boys, Girl Sent Home

Firecrackers flipped out a window were the nearest thing to a bombing. Three white boys were sent home for that. A white girl was sent home, too, for uncomplimentary remarks about the school principal.

Between the white pupils and the handful of Negroes who joined them there apparently was a minimum of ill will.

Yet it was with grimness and discontent that the Old Dominion watched the ancient ramparts of segregation start tumbling down in a state that once paced the Southland in "massive resistance" to the mixing of races in the schools.

21 Negroes Enter

Through the gaps 17 Negro youngsters filed into six junior- and senior-high schools in Norfolk, the state's largest city. Another four entered Stratford Junior High in Arlington County, a prosperous suburb of Washington.

"This," said Delegate Sam E. Pope, "is one of the blackest days Virginia has faced since Reconstruction."

"The rape of our constitutional rights is an accomplished fact," said Senator Mills E. Godwin. Both Pope and Godwin are from the Southside, the area most heavily populated with Negroes.

Search for A Way Out

Segregationists in the Legislature still hunted hopefully, but with slim chances of success, for some new device to halt integration. One rallying point, a new school-closure bill, was defeated in the Senate.

Governor J. Lindsay Almond, Jr., and legislators alike voiced gratification that the transition to integration was peaceful.

The Negro newcomers offered no complaints at their treatment. Demonstrations against them were lacking, even though camaraderie was lacking, too.

Yet bespectacled Lewis Cousins, the one Negro admitted to Maury High in Norfolk, said he "made a few friends, mostly in the halls."

Norfolk's six secondary schools had been closed since last summer. They never opened in September after federal courts ordered the 17 Negroes admitted and Virginia brought into play a now dead law to close them automatically.

In the interval most of the pupils went into other public or private schools or tutored classes.

The expected enrollment last fall would have been 9,950. Monday's belated enrollments totaled 6,443—about 1,000 less than school officials had expected. Whether this difference measures the extent of protest against integratiotn was impossible to say

Precautions Not Needed

In every instance the arrival and departure of the Negroes at the schools was without incident. Police watched unobtrusively, mainly from cruise cars.

In Arlington, precautions were far more elaborate but equally unneeded. A hundred police, equipped for riots, surrounded Stratford School.

They blocked off streets and a large area around the school grounds, refusing entry even to parents.

The four Negro pupils arrived by car and went into a rear entrance.

Proud of Peacefulness

The County school administration said 73 of the 1,076 white pupils were absent—fewer than usual—and that "no particular tension was present."

School authorities both in Arlington and Norfolk exulted at the smoothness of the change-over to a measure of integration.

John J. Brewbaker, superintendent of Norfolk schools, commented:

"Virginia and the entire nation should be proud of the manner in which our city has shown the fine caliber of its citizens."

But police in both cities were under instructions to stand by indefinitely, as long as school officials want them on hand.

And Arlington put a ban on any events at night in the school—even meetings of civic and parent-teacher organizations.

In new race meetings—

Virginia suffers double setback

RICHMOND, Va., Jan. 24—(AP)—Two federal courts in separate rulings struck new blows at Virginia's anti-integration program Friday by strengthening desegregation orders for Arlington and Norfolk schools.

The U. S. Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals ordered Arlington County officials to admit four Negro children to the all-white Stratford Junior High School Feb. 2 — the start of the new term.

THE RULING UPHELD U. S. District Judge Albert V. Bryan's Sept. 2 decision that the transfers of four of the students from a Negro school was denied on the basis of race. The appeals court withheld for further study a decision on the transfer of 26 Negro pupils turned down by Bryan.

At about the same time, a special three-judge federal court issued a permanent injunction prohibiting state officials and Norfolk school authorities from closing any public school or grade solely because of integration while other schools are kept open on a segregated basis.

The injunction was the outgrowth of the court's ruling Monday that struck down the state's school-closing law. That ruling coincided with decisions by the Virginia Supreme Court that knocked all the key statutes of the state's massive resistance anti-segration program.

THERE APPEARED to be an inclination on the part of school authorities in both communities to allow desegregation. But members of the Arlington School Board indicated an appeal will be made and a stay sought. And the Norfolk situation was confused because of a city council proposal to cut off funds for all grades above the sixth to both white and Negro schools.

Under the school-closing law, nine Virginia schools—six in Norfolk, two in Charlottesville and one in Warren County—have been shut down since September.

Gov. J. Lindsay Almond Jr. said "the situation is very serious." He has been holding an endless series of conferences with legal aids and legislators on a new program of resistance. He must be convinced that such legislation will be effective and not futile," Almond said regarding an early special session of the General Assembly. "It cannot be approached on an overly hasty basis."

VIRGINIA SCHOOL ENTRY ORDERED

Admit Negroes in Arlington, Says U.S. Court

The appeals court deferred further consideration of 26 other Negro applications for admission to white schools in the northern Virginia county, just across the Potomac River from Washington. The court said these applications "require further examination of the relevant circumstances before final conclusions can be reached."

EARLIER ENTRY ORDER

The 26 other Negro applicants were denied admission to white schools under various criteria applied by the school board.

The case involved a cross-appeal. The Arlington School Board appealed that section of Bryan's order directing the admission of the four Negroes, while the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People took issue with the section rejecting the applications of the 26 other Negroes.

The four Negroes ordered admitted to Stratford Junior High passed all the tests set up by the school board, save an adaptability text.

'SHOULD BE ADMITTED'

In its ruling, the appeals court confined its discussion to these four successful applicants. It said, "We are in accord with the conclusion of the district judge that they should be admitted at the beginning of the second semester which is now imminent."

Oral arguments in the case were heard by the circuit court earlier this week.

Until now, in situations where school boards were faced by final orders to admit Negroes to white schools, the state has stepped in and closed the schools to prevent race mixing.

However, the school closing law under which shutdowns were effected was ruled unconstitutional Monday by both the State Supreme Court and a special three-judge federal court in Norfolk.

High Courts Bar Racial Maneuvers By Virginia Schools

Rulings Hit Holdup on Integration

Order to Admit Four Negro Students on Feb. 2 Upheld

RICHMOND, Va., Jan. 23 (UPI)—Two high federal courts late today struck down legal maneuvers of Arlington County and Norfolk to postpone public school integration.

The U.S. Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals upheld an order directing Arlington County, the big suburban area just outside Washington, to admit four Negro students to all-white Stratford Junior High School.

A few minutes later, a special three-judge federal constitutional panel sitting in the same courtroom killed the Norfolk City Council's plan to close its entire secondary school system to avoid integration.

The decisions may doom hopes of the two Virginia localities to avoid integration. School boards in both places have pledged to open the schools, integrated if necessary, if given an opportunity.

Thirty Turned Down

The four Arlington Negro students, along with 26 others, were turned down last summer by the county school board on the basis of a locally administered assignment plan. U.S. District Judge Albert Bryan of Alexandria, Va., ordered four of the students admitted, however.

"We are in accord with this finding, for it is clear that the transfers were denied on the basis of race," the circuit court said.

Norfolk's locally adopted plan of "massive resistance" was killed in the same order which destroyed Virginia's school-closing law.

The three-judge constitutional court, the same one that knocked the heart out of the state "massive resistance" laws, prohibited Norfolk authorities from carrying out their plan to shut down Norfolk's entire secondary school system. The move would have left more than 17,000 children without public schooling.

Norfolk Enjoined

The court enjoined Norfolk from "engaging in any evasive schemes or devices looking to the cut-off of funds for schools or grades affected by the mixing of races or the closing or elimination of grades in such schools."

The order also permanently enjoined Gov. Lindsay Almond and other officials from closing a school to avoid integration.

The injunctive order against Norfolk was tacked on to what was expected to be merely a formal declaration of Monday's ruling.

The appeals court deferred ruling on Judge Bryan's refusal to order Arlington to admit 26 other Negroes to white schools. The court, in its brief opinion, said it had not had an opportunity in the two days since the case was argued to review the grounds on which the Arlington School Board rejected the students.

Joint Meeting

The Arlington County Board and School Board met in joint session last night and pledged to 500 Stratford parents that the school would be kept open, regardless of the circuit court's opinion, and would admit the Negroes if ordered to do so.

A four-point resolution also ruled out the possible transfer requests from white Stratford students, declaring that disapproval of integration was no grounds for transfers.

Arlington School Superintendent Ray Reid was given instructions to do what he deems necessary to maintain the operation at Stratford. The two boards voted to automatically suspend any student creating a disturbance at the school and, in effect, bar newsmen and others not on school business from Stratford.

Gov. Almond spent the day conferring with legislative leaders to complete plans for a special commission to draft new anti-integration measures.

Mixing Ordered In Virginia School

The appeals court deferred further consideration of 25 other Negro applications for admission to white schools in the northern Virginia county, just across the Potomac River from Washington. The court said these applications "require further examination of the relevant circumstances before final conclusions can be reached."

The 26 other Negro applicants were denied admission to white schools under various criteria applied by the school board.

The case involved a cross-appeal. The Arlington School Board appealed that section of Bryan's order directing the admission of the four Negroes, while the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People took issue with the section rejecting the applications of the 26 other Negroes.

The four Negroes ordered admitted to Stratford Junior High passed all the tests set up by the school board, save an adaptability test.

In its ruling, the appeals court confined its discussion to these four successful applicants. It said, "We are in accord with the conclusion of the district judge that they should be admitted at the beginning of the second semester which is now imminent."

Oral arguments in the case were heard by the circuit court earlier this week.

Until now, in situations where school boards were faced by final orders to admit Negroes to white schools, the state has stepped in and closed the schools to prevent race mixing.

However, the school closing law under which shutdowns were effected was ruled unconstitutional Monday by both the State Supreme Court and a special three-judge federal court in Norfolk.

The Arlington County School Board said earlier Friday there would be no automatic shifting of white pupils to avoid integrated classes in the junior high school.

It also announced that any pupil creating a disturbance at the school would be suspended automatically.

The board's statement was made to a meeting of 500 persons —mostly parents of Stratford pupils—in advance of the court ruling.

Shortly after the court's opinion was released, a three-judge U.S. District Court issued a permanent injunction to keep Gov. J. Lindsay Almond, other state officials and Norfolk school authorities from closing any public school or particular grades in Norfolk solely because of the assignment or enrollment of children of different races or colors" while other schools are kept open on a segregated basis. The court on Monday held the school closure law was invalid. Friday's order implemented that decision.

VIRGINIA WILL GET INTEGRATION PLAN

Legislative Group Supports Option for Private Schools or for Mixed Classes

RICHMOND, Va., April 1 (UPI) — A legislative commission recommended Wednesday that communities and individuals in Virginia receive the greatest possible "freedom of choice" in coping with future school integration.

Those willing to accept Negro students in previously white classrooms may do so.

Those insisting on continued segregation will get state financial aid to help set up a private school system.

"We believe that under present conditions these proposals will produce results more acceptable to the people of Virginia than abolition of all public schools," a formal report of more than fifty pages said.

It was signed by thirty-one of the forty legislators who spent nearly two months drafting it for persecution to the General Assembly, which begins its debate on the proposals next Monday.

Nine stanch segregationists who dissented urged that the state abolish its public schools rather than yield to more integration orders.

Thirty-four Negroes entered previously white schools in Norfolk, Arlington and Alexandria last February, following court decisions striking down the state's uncompromising stand of "massive resistance" against integration.

Gov. J. Lindsay Almond Jr., in naming the commission to draft new segregation safeguards, told the Assembly that the state now found itself in an indefensible position to challenge new integration attempts.

The commission—noting that it opposed integration — said that it felt its local-option type program was the best solution and that to maintain total segregation, every public school in the state would have to be closed.

It invited anyone with a "better plan" to come forward and it would be supported "with all the vigor at our command."

School Setup Is Realigned in Falls Church

3-2 Board Ruling Moves 7th Grade to Elementary

The Falls Church School Board voted unexpectedly last night to take the seventh grade out of high school and put it back in elementary schools.

The surprise grade realignment, adopted over the protests of the superintendent, will take effect next September.

Instead of the present set-up of six grades in elementary schools and six in high school the city will have a division of seven grades in elementary school and five in high school. The six-six system has been in effect in Falls Church for nearly a decade.

Only six citizens attended the meeting at which the unannounced change was decided. One school board member, Chairman Thomas H. Lewis, was absent.

Board members Mrs. Jane Dexter, acting chairman, and Francis J. Acosta, jr., strongly opposed the action. Members Lytton H. Gibson, H. P. Stropl and Joseph R. LeMoine supported the motion proposed by William R. Pierce.

Held 'Irresponsible'

The plan was branded a "massacre" of the school system by Mr. Acosta. "It is a step backward for the Falls Church schools," argued Mrs. Dexter in a heated exchange with the board majority. "I've sat here for five years," she said, "and I've never heard such irresponsible proposals the entire time."

Both Mrs. Dexter and Mr. Acosta scored their colleagues for acting in the face of strong public reaction expressed at earlier meetings and in opposition to the superintendent's recommendation.

They pointed out that the current departmental teaching would have to be dropped; that the motion's backers were unequipped with plans to administer the change, and that the city's successful school system would be jeopardized.

Mr. Pierce defended the move as the most effective means of relieving anticipated overcrowding at George Mason Junior-Senior High next year. Furthermore, he said, the seventh graders will "get better education" than they are currently receiving at the high school.

Would Add Rooms

He explained that his proposal would divide the seventh grade among the three elementary schools, with the construction of two or three rooms on Mount Daniel School if necessary. Plans for a two-room addition to the Thomas Jefferson School already have been adopted by the board.

Superintendent Irvin H. Schmitt said the realignment "will be a mess to work." He warned that some George Mason teachers have threatened to resign rather than to teach at the elementary level. Moreover, he said, there isn't enough classroom space in the elementary schools for the seventh grade.

"It is better to overcrowd the elementary schools than the high school," retorted Mr. Gibson.

Mr. Schmitt had proposed a lengthened high school day as a temporary overcrowding relief measure.

At the conclusion of the stormy two-hour session, Louis T. Olom, chairman of the Citizens for a Better Council group said, "The CBC will do everything in our power to reverse the beginnings of massacre of the school system."

He said he would investigate possible remedies "to defeat the arbitrary and capricious action of the school board."

An appeal to the Circuit Court of Fairfax was mentioned as a possible step.

The Virginia Test

THE DEMOCRATIC primary in Virginia this week is of more than passing interest. It is the first chance the voters have had to directly express their feelings on their General Assembly's actions in meeting the school crisis.

When Virginia's program of massive resistance was felled by the courts and it became clear that the issue was some integration or no public schools at all, the legislature shifted all possible responsibility from the state to local governments. Gov. Lindsey Almond told Virginians that the problem no longer was one of stopping integration but controlling it.

Since then, some communities have accepted integration. Others, where the problem is acute, are more reluctant. Prince Edward county for instance, where Negro students outnumber whites, has replied to a court order to integrate by announcing no taxes will be collected to support its public school system.

Gov. Almond's legislative fight to keep the schools open was won by the narrowest of margins and brought down the wrath of the powerful political machine of Sen. Harry Byrd on his handsome, silvery head.

The upcoming elections will indicate the future of public education in Virginia as well as the futures of its leading, and contending, political figures.

Virginia Bar Challenges NAACP Law Methods

Evening Star p. B-3
Washington D.C.

RICHMOND, Va., June 30 (AP).—Methods used by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People in promoting school integration cases in Virginia have been challenged in a suit filed by the Virginia State Bar.

A petition filed in Richmond Chancery Court yesterday by Aubrey R. Bowles, jr., counsel for the State bar, asked the court to bar the NAACP and two related organizations from practicing law, directly or indirectly, in the Commonwealth.

Named as defendants with the NAACP were the NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund, Inc., and the Virginia State Conference of NAACP Branches.

Brotherhood Also Charged

A similar suit, charging the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen with unauthorized practice, was filed simultaneously by Mr. Bowles.

In both cases the State bar objected that the organizations—and not the litigants or clients—inspired, directed, controlled and financed the litigation. The State bar is an official arm of the State government responsible for helping the courts administer the practice of law.

The complaint against the NAACP groups said "authorizations are obtained from various individuals, in many cases without explaining to them the nature or purpose thereof." These authorizations, the complaint said, "purport to permit the defendants (the NAACP groups) to commence litigation."

In the lawsuits that follow, the NAACP organizations — through lawyers chosen "without the individual litigation having any choice in or knowledge of the lawyers' selection—maintain absolute and complete domination and control over such litigation. . . ."

Clients Held Not Consulted

The complaint continued: "The lawyers . . . neither communicate with nor accept instructions from the individuals they purport to represent nor do they advise such individuals of the nature, progress or status of the litigation. . . .

The complaint said these things amount to the continuing unauthorized practice of law.

In the complaint against the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, the bar centered its case on the Brotherhood's legal aid department and its relation to cases in which union members were injured or killed in the course of their employment.

Consultation Held Demanded

In such cases, the victim or members of his family were often advised that claims against the employer should not be settled without consulting the regional or legal counsel, the complaint charged.

Regional or legal counsel further makes advances for the support and maintenance of the injured Brotherhood member or the family of deceased members pending settlement of claims that he agrees to handle for them," according to the complaint.

The bar asked that Bernard M. Savage of Baltimore, an attorney for the union, and Norris W. Tingle of Baltimore, a regional investigator for the union, be restrained from the unauthorized practice of law in Virginia.

The bar, in its complaint, said Mr. Savage—while an attorney—was not licensed to practice in Virginia.

Negroes Lose Test In Norfolk

Constitution Atlanta, Ga. Sat 5-9-59

NORFOLK, Va. (AP)—U.S. District Judge Walter E. Hoffman Friday approved the Norfolk School Board's rejection of 134 Negro applications for admission to white schools last September.

The board's action, Hoffman said in a memorandum, "was not arbitrary, capricious or illegal."

And, he added, the standards, criteria and procedures used by the board in passing upon the Negro applications are "not unconstitutional on their face."

In his order approving the board's action, however, Hoffman said his order shall not be construed as limiting the 134 Negroes or any other Negroes from applying for admission to white schools for the school year beginning in September.

At the same time the board rejected the 134 applications, it assigned 17 other Negroes to six white secondary schools.

Attorneys for the 134 applicants later attacked the validity of the standards and procedures on which the applications were denied.

Almond Eyes Air Appeal for Partial Mix

Journal & Constitution Atlanta, Ga. Sun 5-10-59

RICHMOND, Va., May 9 (AP)—Gov. J. Lindsay Almond Jr. indicated Saturday he may turn to the fireside chat technique to try to win wider acceptance of his view that public schools cannot be retained without a degree of racial integration.

Almond said before he left for a week's vacation at a seashore retreat he had been considering going on a statewide radio-TV hookup to explain "the bitter truth" of the choice the state has been forced to make.

In the governor's view the choice lies only between integration, contained or minimized as much as possible, or no public school system—either state or local.

ALMOND MADE no bones about his feeling that those who still contend the state can operate integration-free public schools if it would only assert its authority are doing Virginia a disservice. The broadcast would aim partly at rebutting such a view of state authority.

"The people must be made to understand that no state has the power to stand against the final decree of the federal courts. As I said in my address to the General Assembly the only way to prevent any integration is by complete abolition of the public schools," he said. "To resort to that course smacks of surrender."

ALMOND'S SCHOOL program aimed at containing integration but holding onto the public school system left some scars in the preponderantly Democratic General Assembly which adopted it.

And it also fanned the enmity of some super-segregationists who argued that Almond, once one of the leading spokesmen for massive resistance, had thrown in the towel in the fight for segregation when the going got too tough.

Negro Seeks to Enter School in Lynchburg

Evening Star p. C-3
Washington D.C.
June 10-1959

LYNCHBURG, Va., June 10 (AP).—The first request from a Negro parent to enroll his child in a white school in Lynchburg was reported yesterday.

Dr. Paul M. Munro, superintendent of schools, said that the request came from M. W. Thornhill, jr., who made his request to enroll his 12-year-old son, Murrell W. Thornhill III, in the seventh grade of summer school at John W. Wyatt School.

Dr. Munro said he had been told by the parent of a Negro girl that a request will be made this fall to enroll her in the white Robert E. Lee School in the eighth grade.

The request from Mr. Thornhill will be sent to the Pupil Placement Board in Richmond, Dr. Munro said.

School officials said that John W. Wyatt School "might be" a few blocks nearer the street where the boy lives, than Dunbar High School where summer courses are offered to Negro pupils. Actual travel time on a bus would be just about the same, they said.

Dr. Munro said there were summer courses for Negro students at Dunbar and that these courses contained the subjects which the Thornhill youth seeks to study.

Negro Transfer Bids Due in Floyd Today

Evening Star p. B-2
Washington D.C.
June 6-9-59

FLOYD, Va., June 9 (AP).—The Floyd County School Board meets today to receive a number of Negro transfer requests which could result in school closure this fall as an alternative to integration.

The county has only 28 Negro pupils of high school age and at least 14 of these were expected to petition for transfer to Floyd's three white high schools.

On the eve of the school board meeting, the county supervisors yesterday cleared the way for a fund cut-off that would shut down the schools by placing the county budget on a month-by-month appropriation basis.

No Negro High School

Floyd County at present has no high school for Negroes. Negro students of high school age are sent to Christiansburg Institute in adjacent Montgomery County. The county has facilities, however, for notice by the simple expedient of declining to appropriate funds for their operation.

The board appropriated $12,500 for county schools in July and $22,294 for operation of the the county government. They will appropriate funds for August at a meeting next month.

The transfer petitions to be laid before the school board today, drawn up by Reuben Lawson of Roanoke, lawyer for the Negro applicants, are the first to be submitted in southwest Virginia — where the Negro population is small. Mr. Lawson said several weeks ago, in announcing that the transfers to white schools would be sought, that if they were rejected, a desegregation suit would be filed.

Negroes of elementary school age, and it was not anticipated that transfer requests would be made to the school board on behalf of any pupils in the lower grades.

A school board spokesman acknowledged that the board had received the Negro petitions yesterday but said they would not be formally considered until today's meeting. It was hinted broadly that the board probably would forward the applications to the State Pupil Placement Board in Richmond for processing.

On Monthly Basis

The board of supervisors yesterday placed the county budget on a monthly basis without debate effective immediately. Should integration occur and should the supervisors choose to do so, they could effectively close all the county's schools on 30 days'

Bi-Racial School Group In Virginia Is Urged

By CASPAR NANNES
Star Staff Writer

NORFOLK, June 10.—A Statewide bi-racial commisison to recommend methods of gradual school desegregation was requested yesterday in a resolution by the Virginia Methodist Conference.

After overwhelmingly urging preservation of a public school system, the nearly 1,000 delegates approved with negligible opposition the commission proposal made by the conference's Board of Social and Economic Relations.

Gov. Almond was requested to appoint the commission "to make a thorough study and recommend methods, in keeping with the law, to effect slowly but consistently the consummation of the Supreme Court directive in this integration problem. . . ."

The resolution suggested that "educators, ministers and other public spirited citizens of both races" make up the commission.

Key to Action

The key to the action was a move by Nelson R. Thurmond of Vinton, Va., a member of the Virginia House of Delegates, substituting recommendations for those originally proposed by the board.

Mr. Thurmond said, "it seems to me that a more moderate and reasonable approach with which most of us can go along is desirable. This is no time to make a further breach between the races in our State, but rather to keep open the lines of communication between them."

Major points in his amendment were:

1. "We stand insistent upon the preservation of a system of public education and we caution against the use of public school funds to pay the tuition of any pupils who choose to attend private schools.

2. "We firmly believe that the complete abolition of our compulsory school attendance law will result in the weakening of our public school system.

3. "We commend the tolerant and law-abiding spirit shown by the people of Virginia in communities where long-established customs affecting the operation of our schools have suddenly been changed."

2 Other Points

Dr. Garland Evans Hopkins, of Herndon, Va., proposed incorporation of points 1 and 5 of the board's original report in Mr. Thurmond's amendment. Point 1 reaffirms the 1958 Virginia conference statement opposing the use of church buildings for private schools. The other urges the Governor to appoint a bi-racial commission on school integration.

Both Dr. Hopkins' addition and Mr. Thurmond's amendment were passed with only a scattering of "woes."

The delegates also approved without dissent a resolution calling on Methodists to aid in the fight against pornographic literature on the newsstands and elsewhere. This section also appeared in the Board of Social and Economic Relations report, of which the Rev. J. William Hough, pastor of Fairfax Methodist Church, was chairman.

The committee on world peace today will submit a report terming the increased "industrial and military power of Communist China" and the indifference of American citizens to foreign problems major threats to peace.

Denver Delegates Chosen

Three Washington area Methodists were among the 10 lay delegates elected yesterday to attend the General Conference of the Methodist Church to be held in April, 1960, at Denver, Colo.

They are Dan L. Grantham of Clarendon Church, Arlington, a lawyer and lay leader of the Alexandria District; Mrs. R. G. Pullen, wife of the pastor of Franconia Church, president of the Women's Society for the Virginia Conference, and John H. Rixsie of Trinity Church, Alexandria, an engineer with the Agriculture Department.

The Rev. Harold Hughes, pastor of Arlington Church, was one of six ministers elected to the conference yesterday. Two, including Dr. Roland C. Ridick, superintendent of the Alexandria District, were chosen Monday.

The Virginia Annual Conference, largest in the national Methodist Church, will close its four-day meeting tomorrow when Bishop Paul Neff Garber of Richmond reads the ministerial appointments for the coming year. The conference has 332,667 members in 1,198 churches.

11 Negroes Assigned To Two White Schools

CHARLOTTESVILLE, June 13 (AP).—School officials assigned 11 Negroes to two white public schools for the fall term yesterday, bringing their court-approved assignment plan into play for the first time.

Nine of the 11 were plaintiffs in the Charlottesville desegregation case and were ordered into white schools by Federal Judge John Paul.

The other two gained admission to Lane High and Venable Elementary schools by satisfying requirements of the assignment plan, which specifically excludes race as a consideration.

Judge Paul ordered 12 Negro children admitted to Lane and Venable last year, precipitating the closure of these schools under Virginia's massive resistance to integration laws. The 12 Negros stayed out of school during the first semester.

Delay Approved

When State and Federal courts tossed out massive resistance early this year, Federal courts granted Charlottesville a six-month delay of integration. The stay was granted with the understanding the school board would submit for approval a racially nondiscriminatory assignment plan, and the 12 Negroes would be tutored sufficiently to bring them up to their normal grade levels by September.

Last March 30, Judge Paul approved the assignment plan, the two key provisions of which are geographical school districts and pupil-teacher ratios. NAACP attorneys went along with the plan to "give the school officials an opportunity to demonstrate their good faith."

Assignment of the 11 Negroes to the white schools for the September term was announced by the school board in a prepared release. The children were notified by a stamped form on their report cards, mailed yesterday.

Of the 10 Negroes ordered into Lane by Judge Paul, one—Olivia Ferguson, daughter of the local NAACP president—is being graduated. The other, John E. Martin, has been reassigned to Lane.

John Martin will be joined in the white high school by his brother, Donald, who has completed the seventh grade at a Negro school.

Two Negroes entering school for the first time applied for white schools. The application of one was approved. The other was turned down.

Expects Appeals

Ray Bell, public relations chairman for the local NAACP chapter, said he definitely expected some Negro children to appeal their assignments to Negro schools under the procedures provided in the assignment plan.

Generally, the plan calls for assignment of elementary school children in the districts in which they reside. But assignments across district lines are possible.

June 25 is the deadline set by the school board for appeals.

Charlottesville would be the fourth Virginia community to desegregate its schools.

Token integration occurred in February in Norfolk, Arlington and Alexandira. Warren County High School opened its doors to both white and Negroes in February, but only 21 Negroes turned up. Prince Edward County, ordered to desegregate a white high school this fall has gotten out of the public school business.

IN NORTHERN VIRGINIA

13 Negro Students End First Integrated Term

Thirteen Negro students of Northern Virginia today are ending their first semester of desegregated education.

School officials and persons close to the students said integration at four schools in Arlington and Alexandria have proceeded smoothly and calmly.

The 13—four in Arlington and nine in Alexandria—were among the first group to enter white schools in Virginia. In Arlington four were admitted Stratford Junior High School. In Alexandria two entered Ficklin Elementary, first went to Rasmsay Elementary and two entered Hammond High.

The four at Stratford, who will pick final report cards Monday are expected to be promoted from the seventh to the eighth grade.

Five Do "Well"

In Alexandria, Supt. T. C. Williams said that five have "done well," one is a borderline case and three have made failing grades. He declined to give more specific information because it might "identify the individuals."

Frank Reeves, one of the Negro attorneys involved in the Northern Virginia desegregation suits, said the students "were not selected on the basis of their scholastic ability. Their success or failure will depend on their individual capabilities."

An Arlington white woman who has been tutoring the Negroes attending Strafford, said they are "working hard and seem to be happy" in their new school.

Get Helping Hand

She said the Negroes have adjusted well and are getting a helping hand from many of the white students.

"When they firfist came to me they were uncomfortable and didn't do any of the things kids usually do," the woman said. "Not long after they started to Stratford, they came to my house one Saturday and one of the boys pinched the little girl. I knew the pressure was off then. They were more comfortable. I am sure they have made a good adjustment."

She said the four are "B" and "C" students. Two of them received a D grade in mathematics the first report period, but have bettered their marks since then, she said.

Attorney Reeves said that reports he gets indicate that the Negro students are "being accepted just like any other new students."

White Pupils Gave Help

Mrs. George Turner, mother of three of the nine Alexandria students, said that in some instances white students "have gone out of their way to be helpful."

Arlington Supt. Ray Reid said some extracurricular activities were cut out at Stratford to "elminate the possibility of any incidents." The ninth-graders were allowed to have their graduation prom since one of the Negroes was in that grade.

Stratford is still off limits to all but students and school personnel.

Supt. Williams said that no orders have been given to curtail activities at the three Alexandria schools. He said that to his knowledge the "normal activities" at all three schools have been carried out without incident.

14d(1) 1959 VIRGINIA

ALEXANDRIA, VA.
GIVEN INTEGRATION ORDER

ALEXANDRIA GIVEN INTEGRATION ORDER

ALEXANDRIA, Va., Jan. 14 (UPI)—A Federal judge today ordered the Alexandria School Board to stop using race as a factor in assigning students.

United States District Judge Albert V. Bryan issued an injunction against the Alexandria board on behalf of fourteen Negro students, ordering an end to racial discrimination in school assignments.

He did not, however, pass on the validity of the city's pupil assignment plan, which considers such factors as mental maturity and academic achievement in considering transfer requests.

Judge Bryan said the injunction would become effective Feb. 4, the start of the second semester, pending "the application of fair, just and valid administrative rules and regulations."

In Norfolk, Archibald Boswell, a lawyer representing a group dedicated to keeping public schools open, said he would ask a Federal court to enjoin the city council from closing Norfolk's secondary school system to avoid integration.

Mr. Boswell said the action would be based on the ground that the Norfolk City Council violated the United States Constitution when it voted 6-1 yesterday to close all grades in the city above the sixth if the state's anti-integration laws were overthrown, as is expected in court tests due for rulings this month.

VIRGINIA YIELDS MORE GROUND

Alexandria Schools To Integrate With 9 Negroes Enrolling Tuesday

RICHMOND, Va. (AP)—Virginia reluctantly gives up more ground in the school integration dispute Tuesday through the court-ordered enrollment of nine Negro children in white schools in Alexandria.

The Alexandria School Board, like its counterparts in Arlington and Norfolk, found itself without suitable legal remedy at hand to halt integration, even temporarily. A last-ditch appeal for a stay of the desegregation order failed Saturday at Baltimore. Chief Judge Simon E. Sobeloff of the U.S. 4th Circuit Court of Appeals said he could find no reason to give the school board more time to prepare for racial mixing.

For the third time in eight days Virginia was due to see its traditional "separate but equal" policy of educating white and Negro children breached. The massive resistance program that managed to keep that policy intact for so long collapsed with court rulings last month.

Last Monday Arlington admitted four Negro children to a white junior high school. Some 200 miles distant, in the thriving port city of Norfolk, 17 Negro youngsters entered six white schools, reopened for the first time since last June.

As in Arlington and Norfolk, state and local officials hoped Alexandria's admission of nine Negro children to the white school system would be a peaceful transition.

Plans for integration were proceeding. School Supt. T. C. Williams, Commonwealth's Atty. Earl F. Wagner and School Board counsel John Barton Phillips said there were no plans to appeal to the U.S. Supreme Court, a step taken by Arlington officials two weeks ago without success.

There was no word Sunday of any special precautions being ordered in advance of the Negro enrollments at Alexandria. A heavy police cordon was set up at neighboring Arlington's Stratford Junior High School with the start of integration last week.

Alexandria's integration is due on the eve of a gathering of state lexislators in Richmond. The 40-member special school study commission appointd by Gov. J. Lindsay Almond Jr. meets Wednesday to chart a long-range program aimed at containing or minimizing the spread of school integration.

Almond, according to his close associates, would go before the commission with proposals aimed at preserving a state system of public education while resisting with all legal weapons any wholesale race mixing.

The governor was said to be firmly opposed to any plan that would permit junking of the entire public school system. Strong segregationists, expressing their views in no uncertain terms during the past week, favor such alternatives to even token integration.

While most of the attention will be focused on Alexandria in the northern section of the state, U.S. Dist. Judge John Paul will be convening court at Harrisonburg Tuesday to hear a new plea from plaintiff attorneys for immediate integration of 22 Negro children at the Warren County High School at Front Royal.

The Warren County School Board has decided it should not reopen the school until September. Oliver Hill of Richmond, chief legal counsel for the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People in Virginia, asked Paul for the new hearing.

The Warren County school, like the six at Norfolk and two at Charlottesville, shut down in September under the state's school closure laws. The two white schools at Charlottesville reopened segregated last week pending submission of an integration plan to Paul.

Front Royal mixing ordered—

First elementary schools integrated

ALEXANDRIA, Va., Feb. 10—(AP)—Nine Negro children entered three previously all-white public schools in this historic Southern city without incident today.

They were admitted under court order and backed by a display of police force but there was nothing to indicate any need for the guard.

Alexandria thus become the third Virginia community to accept racial integration since the collapse of the state's "massive resistance" program and the failure of last-ditch court efforts to obtain at least delay.

Previously 17 young Negroes in Norfolk and four in Arlington County adjoining Alexandria had been admitted to junior and senior schools. Seven of the nine in Alexandria were the first to get into former white elementary schools.

IN HARRISONBURG U. S. Judge John Paul today ordered the reopening of Warren County High School on a desegregated basis Wednesday, Feb. 18.

The school at Front Royal in Northern Virginia — the county's only high school—was the first to be closed under the state's now defunct massive resistance program.

Paul turned down the plea of W. J. Phillips, Warren school board attorney, to defer desegregation until next September. Phillips argued a shift from private facilities to the public school at this time would be disruptive and harmful.

Two others entered Theodore downtown section. Another two were admitted to Hammond High School.

Authorities had prepared for the possibility of a disturbance. As predicted, however, nothing happened.

Between 60 and 65 police were deployed in the vicinity of the three widely scattered schools.

AT FICKLIN School James Edward Lomax, 8, and his sister, Margaret Irene, 6, were accompanied by their mother, Mrs. Hazel Lomax. Two friends walked to the school grounds with them but only Mrs. Lomax was admitted to the building.

Most of the other Negro children at other schools also were accompanied by parents.

Patsy Ragland, 14, and James Ragland, 13, brother and sister, quietly entered Hammond High School. The children were brought to the school by a clergyman and dropped out at the front entrance.

There was a notable lack of attention from other students.

AT WILLIAM Ramsay Elementary the five entering ranged in age from Kathryn Turner, 11, to her first grade brother, Gerald Turner, 6. The others were Jessie Mae Jones, 8, Sarah Ragland, 8, and a third Turner child, Sandra, 7.

After the nine Negroes had entered the three schools Raymond F. Sanger, assistant superintendent of schools of Alexandria told reporters: "It was a normal situation all around."

Alexandria, with an estimated population of about 35,000 has a school population of about 14,000 of whom 4000 are Negroes.

The only excitement any of the white pupils displayed was an expressed hope they might get their pictures in the papers. A battery of photographers were snapping away as the Lomax children marched into the school.

SEVENTEEN police officers were on duty at the school but had nothing to do but tell reporters and photographers where they must station themselves.

The size of the police guard and the atmosphere in general contrasted with that at Stratford Junior High in Arlington last week when the first Negro children were admitted to previously all-white classes in Virginia.

Nearly 100 policemen, wearing battle helmets and carrying riot equipment, patrolled the Stratford grounds and vicinity. There were no incidents.

IN ALEXANDRIA today the police were more relaxed and carried only standard equipment service revolvers and night sticks.

In all, seven grade school and two high school pupils had been ordered admitted to Alexandria schools.

WARREN COUNTY Atty. Phillips noted 780 of Warren High's 1000 pupils now attend private classes in Front Royal.

But Paul said those in private classes were not getting all the advantages that would be available to them in private schools. He said also consideration must be given to 100 white children not now attending any school as well as to the 22 Negro children for whom no educational provisions have been made.

Oliver W. Hill of Richmond, NAACP counsel who represented the Negro pupils, based his argument for reopening the school on the state's constitutional requirement for public schools and on recent state and federal court decisions invalidating the closure laws.

Phillips said he was now in a position to promise that the school would be reopened next September on a desegregated basis and that the school board was making every effort to plan for orderly integration at that time.

BUT PAUL, noting that the Virginia General Assembly reconvenes in Richmond March 31 to try to map a program to contain integration, commented:

"The Legislature may devise some futile laws as they did in 1956. My feeling is that you want to wait until next Fall in the hope that some way to avoid integration will be found."

Court Balks Alexandria Delay Plea

Federal Judge Rules Schools Must Admit 9 Negroes Tuesday

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RICHMOND, Va. — More racial integration in Virginia's public schools next week appeared inevitable Saturday as a federal judge refused to stay an order admitting nine Negro children to three white schools in Alexandria.

Six schools in Norfolk and one in Arlington enrolled 21 Negroes without disturbance last Monday in an historic breach of Virginia's traditional "separate but equal" policy for teaching its white and Negro children.

LAST-DITCH PLEA

In Baltimore, Chief Judge Simon E. Sobeloff of the U.S. 4th Circuit Court of Appeals heard Saturday a last-ditch plea from the Alexandria School Board for more time in which to prepare for integration.

Sobeloff turned down the plea after telling the school officials he would grant a stay only if the board could show how the lower court's desegregation order "would cause you grave and irreparable damage."

Sobeloff, who rejected a similar petition from Arlington authorities 11 days ago, lectured school boards for seeking "guidance from the courts" and further delays in school desegregation edicts.

"School boards," the chief judge said, "should work out some plan to comply with the sense of the law. It shouldn't be how you can stave it off but how you can comply."

NO ANNOUNCEMENT

There was no immediate announcement from Alexandria officials what, if any, extra precautions would be adopted in the interest of peaceful integration at the three facilities. Alexandria, like Arlington, lies in the shadow of the nation's capital in a section of the state where anti-integration sentiment is less pronounced.

Police and school officials greeted last Monday's initial crossing of the school color line with a cautious and ready eye. But there was little else to do but watch.

PLACID AFFAIR

The entry of 17 Negroes at six white schools, including three big high schools at Norfolk, and four Negro children to a junior high school in Arlington was a placid affair.

The first week of mixed schools ended on a note of optimism and gratitude sounded by city and school officials in both communities.

Mayor W. Fred Duckworth of Norfolk congratulated everyone concerned for "making the change with as little friction as possible."

Dr. Herman M. Williams, assistant school superintendent at Norfolk, said integration had been conducted "in an orderly, calm and dignified manner." He called this "a tribute to teachers, students and parents who faced the situation with sanity and understanding."

School Supt. Ray Reid of Arlington, noting the police guard around integrated Stratford Junior High might be withdrawn next week, said things at his school had gone "very well" and that "adjustment seems to have been made nicely."

Another community, Warren County, faces new pressure next week to admit 22 Negro children to the white high school at Front Royal in the northwest corner of the state.

AT ALEXANDRIA, VA.

NINE NEGROES ENTER SCHOOLS

ALEXANDRIA, VA. (AP) — Nine Negro children entered three previously all-white public schools in this historic Southern city without incident today.

They were admitted under court order, and backed by a display of police force but there was nothing to indicate any need for the guard.

Alexandria thus became the third Virginia community to accept integration since the collapse of the state's "massive resistance" program and the failure of last-ditch court efforts to obtain delay.

Seventeen Negroes in Norfolk and four in Arlington County, adjoining Alexandria, previously had been admitted to junior and senior high schools. Seven of the nine in Alexandria were the first to get into former all-white elementary schools.

Five youngsters, ranging in age from 6 to 11, walked quietly into Ramsay Elementary School.

Two other entered Theodore Ficklin Elementary in the downtown section. Another two were admitted to the Hammond High School.

Authorities had prepared for the possibilty of a disturbance but nothing happened.

Between 60 and 65 police were deployed about the three schools.

Alexandria, with an estimated population of about 95,000 has a school population of about 14,000 of whom 1,800 are Negroes.

Both Arlington and Alexandria are Washington suburbs. Many of their residents work in the nation's capital.

The Alexandria integration went into effect as a fourth Virginia area was put under court pressure. In Harrisonburg, U. S. Dist. Judge John Paul arranged to hear a plea for the immediate reopening of Warren County High School at Front Royal.

9 Students To Enter Va. School

RICHMOND, Va. (UPI)—Virginia slipped quietly into the second week of public school integration Monday with an orderly reception predicted for nine more Negroes who enter white classrooms in Alexandria Tuesday.

Alexandria, historic suburb of Washington, will join neighboring Arlington County, and Norfolk in carrying out court-ordered integration.

Twenty-one Negro students, 17 in six previously white schools at Norfolk, and four in an Arlington junior high, continued classes as calmly as they began one week ago.

Attendance at the three high and three junior schools in Norfolk rose by 150 students Monday over that at the end of the first week of integration. City school officials said the attendance, 7,018, was 2,380 shy of the enrollment when the schools closed last June. Many students are in private classes, others have moved and others have quit school. The six Norfolk schools had been closed since September.

Arlington's Stratford Junior High reported its attendance had remained about normal since four Negroes entered the seventh grade.

City and school officials predicted a calm beginning of racially-mixed schooling in Alexandria which will be the first Virginia city to enroll Negroes in a white elementary school.

Police Chief Russell A. Hawes said more than 50 officers would be stationed at the three schools, Hammond High, Ficklin and Ramsay elementary schools. Crowds would not be permitted to gather, he said, and no parking will be permitted near the schools.

Hawes said he did not anticipate any organized trouble.

At the same time Alexandria lowers its racial bars Tuesday, a court effort will be made to force a Tourth locality to reopen another school disclosed last Fall under Virginia's "massive resistance" laws.

NAACP attorneys will ask Federal District Judge John Paul to order Warren County to comply immediately with an order to enroll 22 Negro students in the county's only high school at Front Royal.

Court Asked to Order Desegregation Plan

Evening Star p. 3-B
Washington D. C.

Attorneys representing Negro children are trying to persuade a Federal court to force Arlington County to adopt a comprehensive new plan for school desegregation.

They asked Judge Albert V. Bryan in Alexandria yesterday to order the county school board to submit such a plan by July 27 and to put it into effect promptly.

Tues. 6-30-59

Judge Bryan has scheduled a hearing on the motion for next Tuesday.

The surprise request came as 22 Negro pupils, whose applications twice have been rejected by the Arlington board, renewed their legal fight for admission to white schools.

Four other colored students have abandoned efforts to enter white schools in Arlington, according to their lawyers.

The motion filed yesterday urged Judge Bryan to require the school board "promptly to implement an adequate and comprehensive plan to effectuate an orderly transition of Arlington schools into a racially nondiscriminatory school system."

Asks Admission Order

It also asked him to order the school board not to deny the 22 Negroes admission to white schools next fall.

It further requested that the board be presented from "regulating the admission or assignment of all others on the basis of racial considerations."

The attorneys accused the school board of racial discrimination and charged that it will persist in an illegal policy of segregation unless the court intervenes.

The 22 children were among 30 Negroes whom the school board rejected when they tried to enroll in white schools last fall.

Judge Bryan refused to reverse the rejection of 26, but directed that four of the pupils be admitted to Stratford Junior High School.

The United States Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals in March told Judge Bryan and the school board to reconsider the remaining 26 applications.

Board Decision

The board did so, but last week again rebuffed the Negroes, citing lack of scholastic achievement by the pupils as its primary reason.

Attorneys for the pupils charged yesterday that the latest school board action demonstrates that it "is continuing and will continue the unlawful policy and practice of racial segregation in the public schools" unless the court acts.

Referring to Supreme Court decisions, they asserted that Judge Bryan is empowered to direct Arlington to draft and submit for his approval a plan for desegregating the school system.

They also said he may order a child admitted to a white school if he thinks the pupil has been discriminated against because of race.

Adequate Plan For Arlington School Desegregation Urged

World Birmingham, Ala.

ALEXANDRIA, Va. — (NNPA) — Attorneys for the NAACP have asked the Federal District Court here to order the Arlington County, Va., School Board to adopt an "adequate and comprehensive plan" for desegregation of the county's public schools.

Wed. 7-8-59

The motion they filed requested Judge Albert V. Bryan to require the county school board to submit such a plan by July 27 and put it into effect promptly.

It also asked that Judge Bryan restrain the school board from refusing to admit 22 colored children to white schools this fall.

The applications of the 22 children, on whose behalf the motion was filed, have twice been rejected by the Arlington school board. The children have renewed their legal fight for admission to white schools.

The motion urged Judge Bryan to order the school board "promptly to implement an adequate and comprehensive plan to effectuate an orderly transition of Arlington schools into a racially nondiscriminatory school system."

It also requested that the board be enjoined from 'regulating the admission or assignment of all others on the basis of racial considerations."

BOARD ACCUSED

The attorneys accused the school board of racial discrimination and charged that it will persist in an illegal policy of segregation unless the court intervenes.

The 22 children were in a group of 30 students whom the school board rejected when they tried to enroll in white schools last fall.

Judge Bryan upheld the rejection of 26 but ordered that four of the applicants be admitted to Stratford Junior High School.

The United States Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals in March directed Judge Bryan and the school board to reconsider the 26 applications.

The board did so, but two weeks ago again turned down the colored students, giving lack of scholastic achievement as its reason.

POLICY CONTINUES

Attorneys for the pupils charged Monday that the latest school board action demonstrates that the board "is continuing and will continue the unlawful policy and practices of racial segregation in the public schools" unless the court acts.

Wed. 7-8-59

Referring to Supreme Court decisions, they said Judge Bryan is empowered to order the Arlington board to draft and submit for his approval a plan for desegregating the school system.

They also said he may order a child admitted to a white school if he thinks the pupil has been discriminated against because of race.

26 Fairfax Negroes Apply at White Schools

Evening Star p. 2-B
Washington

The Fairfax County School Board has received 26 applications from Negro students seeking admission to eight white county schools next September.

Tues. 6-23-59

George Pope, an assistant superintendent, said the board previously had received applications from two of the students listed yesterday. One of these, for the first grade at Flint Hill Elementary School, has been rejected by the school board because the applicant lived closer to a Negro school. The other application has not been disposed of.

Mr. Pope said the 26 applications were "mimeographed requests." Pupil placement

Mr. Pope said the 26 applications were "mimeographed forms were not used, he said. Existing Virginia law requires that assignments be made by the State Pupil Placement Board, but court decisions have left the board's status uncertain.

Mr. Pope said a letter from Attorney Otto L. Tucker, enclosed with the applications, asked for notification of action within 14 days.

Mr. Pope said the school board was not scheduled to meet until July 7. He added that he did not know whether a special meeting would be called.

He said further that he did not know whether the use of mimeographed requests instead of placement forms would make any difference in handling the applications.

The schools involved and the number of pupils applying are: Flint Hill, 2; Belvedere Elementary, 12; Hollin Hall, 2; Parklawn Elementary, 1; Devonshire Elementary, 3; Groveton High School, 1; James Madison High, 3, and Annandale High, 2.

The applications at Belvedere include one the school board had received previously.

Fairfax County had received no integration applications until this year, and so far is not involved in race litigation.

26 Negroes Rejected Again in Arlington

Evening Star p. 2-B
Washington D.C.

The Arlington County School Board yesterday again refused to assign 26 Negro children to predominantly white schools.

It rejected applications of the same pupils last fall, but was ordered by a Federal appeals court to reconsider its decision.

In a statement submitted to Federal Judge Albert V. Bryan in Alexandria, the school board declared that 21 of the students lacked sufficient academic accomplishment.

Tues. 6-23-59

It said it was rejecting the other five because Washington-Lee High School is overcrowded, because they did not live within the attendance district or because they probably have psychological problems.

The board also cited some of these latter reasons to justify its rejection of some of the pupils it called academically unqualified.

The 26 Negroes were among 30 that requested transfer to all-white schools last fall.

Using an assignment plan with most of the same criteria cited yesterday, the school board originally rejected all 30.

Attorneys representing the Negroes went to court and Judge Bryan ordered four of the pupils admitted to Stratford Junior High School last February. Stratford has been the county's only integrated school with enrollment of the four students.

Attorneys appealed on behalf of the remaining 26 and the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals subsequently directed the school board to review their applications. The appeals court sent the case back to Judge Bryan.

24 in Negro Schools

School Board Attorney James H. Simmonds said that 24 of the pupils have been attending all-Negro schools, and one is enrolled in a private school, and that one has moved to Philadelphia.

Attorney Frank Reeves, counsel for the applicants, reported he would consider another appeal to the court.

He said Judge Bryan has granted him a week in which to file an objection to the school board action, and has agreed to conduct a hearing July 7, should there be any appeal from the school board's decision.

Last Meeting Sunday

The board acted on the applications at several closed-door meetings, the last of which was held Sunday, the day before the deadline.

A board spokesman said Chairman Robert A. Peck, Mrs. Helen S. Lane and L. Lee Bean voted to reject all 26. James G. Stockard, who maintains that overcrowding of classrooms and proximity of the student's home to the school in question should be the determining factors, voted approval of eight of the applicants on those grounds. Dr. Barnard Joy voted for one child rejected by the majority for academic reasons, the spokesman said.

Negroes Assail Closed Schools

By Jean M. White
Staff Reporter

DANVILLE, Va., Oct. 9 — Closed schools will offer Southern communities no escape from complying with the Supreme Court school desegregation decree, delegates to a Virginia Negro parley were told here today.

Speakers emphasized that the ballot box and the courts will be the principal weapons in the push by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People for "first class citizenship" for Negroes.

At the State NAACP Conference, they called for continuing pressure to break down discrimination in housing, employment, unions, hospitals, and civil rights. But first priority was given to school desegregation.

Prince Edward County's closed schools came up again and again in speeches and workshop sessions. The Southside Virginia community has cut off all funds for its public schools in the face of a court order to start desegregation this fall.

Some 1500 white students are attending parent-financed private classes. The 1700 Negro pupils have no schools.

Gloster B. Current, national director of branches for the NAACP, told the delegates, "Massive resistance has failed. Closed schools are not the answer."

If white and Negro Virginians cannot sit down together and work out ways of complying with the Supreme Court order, he said, the NAACP has no choice but to continue the fight in the courts.

He singled out school placement laws as one legal target. These, Current emphasized, give "prejudiced officials" a device to keep Negroes out of white schools. Ultimately, he added, they will be declared unconstitutional.

In his welcoming address this afternoon, Dr. Philip Y. Wyatt warned against complacency in the fight for integrated schools.

The victim of one-room schooling, he said, may be tempted to look out on a "beautiful, segregated half-million-dollar school and say: 'Segregation doesn't seem so bad. Look what we have.'"

The modern, segregated school, Dr. Wyatt said, is just as wrong and harmful as the segregated one-room school with its utdoor toilets and underpaid teachers.

Other speakers at an afternoon workshop included Dan Bowers, executive director of the Virginia Council on Human Relations. One of the jobs for Negroes, he said, is to encourage white citizens to take a stand against racial discrimination.

Funds Provided Ft. Royal Schools

FRONT ROYAL, Va. — (NNPA) — The Warren County School Board was assured money to operate desegregated schools for the full year Wednesday night when the County Board of Supervisors voted to provide school funds on a yearly basis.

The action rescinded previous quarterly appropriations of county school funds and renewed them on an annual basis for the year ending June 30, 1960.

The move was interpreted as evidence that the Supervisors felt assured that the desegregated public high schools would operate smoothly.

The favorable 3-2 vote for the yearly appropriation came at a public hearing at which the four Supervisors became deadlocked on the issue, and sharp contrast to the harmony in the audience of about 80 persons.

The issue was resolved by Howard Duncan, the official tie-breaker, who voted with two of the supervisors for the yearly appropriation.

Enrollment in the public high school is 421, including 20 colored pupils. An additional 451 white students are attending a private high school sponsored by the Warren County Educational Foundation.

The Supervisors acted after the Rev. Carlton Blankenship, who favored the private school, asked that $80,000 be set aside for tuition grants to children attending it.

John G. Bowman of Front Royal, a Supervisor, said he would not object to the tuition grants, but argued that if the grants were to be provided on an annual basis, school appropritions should also be made annually.

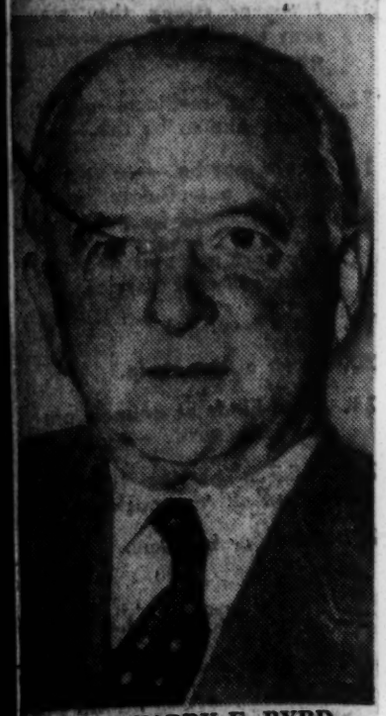
His position was backed by H. E. McVay, plant manager of the American Viscose Corp., which employs about 2200 people. The Supervisor set aside $118,000 for tuition grants and made available $78,708 for the public schools for the rest of this year.

Virginia Votes Tuesday With Mixing Big Issue

'Total Resisters' Drive to Control Legislature, Stop Integration Now

By HAROLD DAVIS
Atlanta Journal Washington Correspondent

RICHMOND, Va., July 11—Virginians go to the polls next Tuesday to elect the members of what may be the most important session of their Legislature since the Old Dominion seceded from the Union in 1861.



SEN. HARRY F. BYRD
He Remains Silent

Tuesday's Democratic primary is the last chance for the "total resisters" to stop racial integration in Virginia before it becomes more widespread. The unyielding segregationists, called "massives" here, will never have another opportunity as clear-cut as this one.

The roots of the present situation go back to last Jan. 19 when all of Virginia's "massive resistance" laws were wiped off the books by a pair of court decisions.

Gov. J. Lindsay Almond Jr. called a special session of the Legislature to write new laws and a legislative committee headed by Sen. Mosby G. Perrow Jr., of Lynchburg, did the spadework.

THE PERROW committee's recommendations vastly displeased the "massives." Mr. Perrow acquiesced in the small degree of integration which had already taken place in three Virginia communities (Arlington, Alexandria, and Norfolk), and he put forth a "freedom of choice" program for Virginia.

The program is very complicated. In essence it lets each community decide how much of a public school system it wants to run. Localities like Arlington and Alexandria are left free to run their schools with integration if they like. Segregationist counties like Prince Edward's are at liberty to abolish their public schools (except for a tiny skeleton which must be retained).

This flexible program will lead to increasing amounts of integration in those sections of Virginia which apparently do not mind it, while it will protect those very conservative communities which evidently cannot stand it.

THE RICHMOND newspapers, bulwarks of "massive resistance," editorially endorsed the Perrow plan, although with reluctance. They said Sen. Perrow and his committee came up with the best practical plan that could be devised for keeping the public schools open while maintaining maximum segregation.

The Perrow recommendations, embodied in 15 bills and a resolution, passed the special session of the Legislature last spring. The margin of approval was hairline thin.

In the House, which has 100 members, the measures were taken up separately and cleared by nine to 15 votes.

IN THE 40-member Senate, the vote was 20 to 19. One solon, Sen. Robert F. Baldwin of Norfolk, was in Europe and did not participate.

Today, three days before the election which will name 100 representatives and 40 senators, the "massives" have one overpowering objective—to knock off enough Perrow backers to gain control of the Legislature. Since Gov. Almond gave his all-out support to the Perrow proposals (they are sometimes called the Almond plan), the "massives" seek a Legislature which will be hostile to the governor, and which will undo his school program.

Virginia politics are unlike the politics of most Southern states. They are infinitely more complex.

In some parts of this state, there are relatively few Negroes and segregation is usually not an important issue, mainly in the mountains and the Shenandoah Valley. In other places, the social atmosphere is somewhat cosmopolitan (Alexandria, Arlington, and Norfolk), and these people, too, are comparatively calm on the subject.

AND THROUGHOUT Virginia, about 30 per cent of the voting population are openly and proudly liberal. They would tend to back Mr. Perrow and Gov. Almond.

That leaves what is called the "Southside," a great tier of counties across the bottom of Virginia where Negroes are plentiful. The white people there are unbending on the subject of integration. They don't want any, anywhere, any time.

The spokesmen for the "massives" in Virginia today are the officials of the Defenders of State Sovereignty and Individual Liberties, which has headquarters on East Franklin street in Richmond. The Defenders, as they are called, are masterminding the move to unhorse enough Almond-Perrow supporters to get control of the Legislature.

ADMITTEDLY, they have their problems.

"What we have to do is fight fatalism," said Robert Crawford, state president of the Defenders. "It might appear we have lost some battles but the war is not necessarily lost."

Mr. Crawford, like most people in or on the fringes of politics, is an optimist. He expects to win the Virginia Senate by a small margin. He thinks the "massives" may also take the House, but concedes the prospects are slimmer.

The Defenders had a hard time rounding up strong candidates to run against the Almond-Perrow people.

In fact, many are unopposed for re-election. Sen. Perrow himself, even though he comes from the Southside, has no opposition.

BUT SEVERAL strong "massive" contenders are in the field and some of them may pick off Almond senators, or Perrowtroopers, as Mr. Crawford calls them.

The "massives" are fully mobilized in an assault on four Almond-held Senate seats in particular: one in the city of Richmond, one in Norfolk, one in Alexandria, and one in the 29th Senatorial District which lies in northern Virginia along the Potomac.

On the other side of the coin, one "massive" senator is being fought down to the wire by a man who, if elected, will probably be an Almond-Perrow backer.

Further complicating the issue, another Almond supporter (Sen. Stuart B. Carter of Botetourt) has quit politics. He is being replaced by a man who is an unknown quantity

THERE ARE OTHER Senate contests in Virginia, but in them the school question is not an issue, or is a subordinate one.

So as the situation stands three days before election, the "massives" are strongly challenging four Almond-held Senate seats; the Almond people are putting up a fight for one "massive" seat; one Almond senator has quit and is being replaced by a question mark, and the senator who was vacationing in Europe is home. He is counted as an Almond man sure to be re-elected.

The contest for the upper chamber could go either way, but the Almond people believe they have a slight edge. They also think they definitely will keep control of the House, and most of the newspaper reporters covering the races full time agree with them in the latter particular.

Gov. Almond, who is not up for re-election, is keeping hands-off the race although he is making a series of appearances around Virginia talking on what his staff calls "issues." Likewise, the great friend of the "massives," U.S. Sen. Harry F. Byrd of Berryville, remains silent.

SOME SEE the struggle as an undercover fight between Almond and Byrd, but there are no outward and visible signs of this.

At a recent political rally in Alexandria, one of the Almond senators who is being hard-pressed by a "massive" was asked what he thinks the "massives" will do if they win the Legislature.

"THEY WILL repeal the Perrow laws and revert to massive resistance," State Sen. Armistead Boothe replied.

In Richmond, Defender President Crawford said that is correct.

Two "massive" bills were introduced in the special session last spring but they got nowhere, he recalled.

If the "massives" win, he said, the sponsor of the measures, State Sen. Edward O. McCue Jr. of Charlottesville, will drop them in the hopper again.

In essence, they transform the Legislature of Virginia into a pupil-assignment board. A standing committee of the Assembly would be created to put white pupils into white schools and Negro pupils into Negro schools, with the whole Assembly taking responsibility for the action.

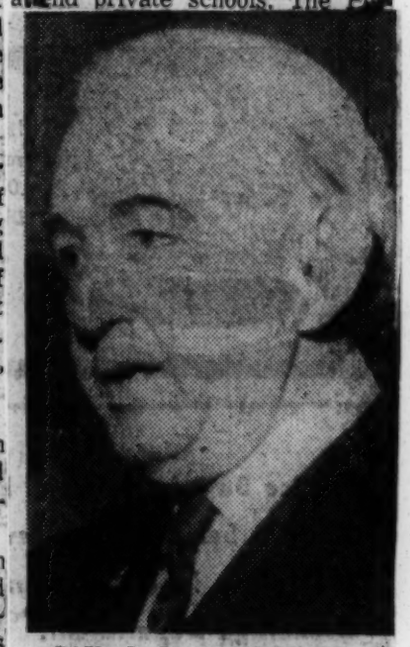
MR. CRAWFORD said if the federal government doesn't like it, the only thing it can do is put 140 Virginia legislators in jail. He doesn't think Washington will want to go that far.

"This is a sort of applied interposition," the Defender leader asserted.

If the "massives" win, Sen. McCue will also present a new tuition grant law to help pupils attend private schools. The Perrow laws include a grant provision but evidently Mr. McCue and the "massives" prefer their own.



GOV. J. L. ALMOND JR.
Called Special Session

The professional political manipulators in Virginia are playing the race cautious. They see an unusual number of "ifs" involved.

AMONG THEM are the following assumptions, none of which is entirely safe: That all the newcomers to the House and Senate will join the "massives"; that the House and Senate will vote on substantially the same issues next January that they voted on last spring; that if they do, the re-elected legislators will vote the same way in January as they did last spring; that there will be no new round of court decrees to change radically the present situation, and that the new school term in September will open quietly and in good order.

With so many "ifs" involved, the more cautious of the politicians are not even sure they will know next Wednesday morning whether the Perrowtroopers or the "massives" have won the election.

Gov. Almond asks for public schools

By RUFUS WELLS

FRONT ROYAL, Va.— We cannot secede from the nion. We cannot overthrow the federal government, and we cannot reverse the final decree of a federal court . . .

With these words Virginia's Governor J. Lindsay Almond took a stand in support of public schools Tuesday night. It marked a complete turnabout for the white-haired politician who last year ordered nine public schools closed under the state's 'massive resistance' laws.

Speaking at commencement exercises for 18 graduates of the Warren County Educational Foundation, Almond called on Virginians to support him in his fight to maintain the state's public school system "before it is too late."

THE EXERCISES were held in a downtown theater. The Foundation is an improvised private school facility for white children established last fall when the county's only high school was closed by state law. (The massive resistance laws have since been declared unconstitutional by the federal and state courts.)

It is believed that the Foundation will be dissolved this fall and that the white pupils will return to the county high school, where 21 colored pupils are now in attendance.

The foundation's board of directors is now functioning on a stand-by basis until the general membership decides whether to operate private schools in the 1959-60 school term.

In his most forceful speech to date in favor of public schools, the governor made it clear that desegregation of public schools was inevitable.

"We must save, sustain and support the cause of public education in Virginia," he said.

"NOTWITHSTANDING the claims of some, the General Assembly cannot under the pretense of invoking the police power take over and operate the public school system and thereby negate the final decree of a federal court. People who permit themselves to be fooled by such delusions deserved to be fooled," he continued.

Almond told the graduates and some 900 parents attending the program that the General Assembly "cannot confer upon the Governor, any board, agency or person, any power which it does not itself possess."

"Those who assert to the contrary are the recipients of a long-standing and unaccepted invitation to come forward with a valid plan to accomplish that which the overwhelming majority of the people of Virginia desire.

"THOSE WHO claim the clairvoyance and genius to evolve such a plan should submit it in all of its detail to the scrutiny of the people."

Almond said the only sure way to prevent desegregation anywhere in Virginia "is the total abolition of every public school everywhere in Virginia. If this is what they advocate, the people of Virginia should now be told with complete clarity and frankness.

"I tell you now that we cannot secede from the Union; we cannot overthrow the federal government, and we cannot reverse a final decree of a federal court."

Almond said Virginia cannot afford "to destroy or suffer the catastrophe of permitting the public school system to be destroyed."

"THE TIME has arrived to take stock, not of theory, and indulgence in wishful thinking, but in actual conditions and realities, and the laborious and soundest procedures within the limits of our genius to devise for the present and future welfare of Virginia.

"We must not allow the welfare of our children and the future of our state to be victimized by the bitterness of disappointment, the pang of frustration, the demon of hate, the threat of political purge . . . and the stirring of emotions productive of violence and disorder."

The governor said no mistake could be more costly than to "succumb to the blandishments of those who would have Virginia abandon public education and thereby consign a generation of children to the darkness of illiteracy, the pits of indolence and dependency and the dungeons of delinquency."

VIRGINIA MUST bear in mind that there are some 800,000 children in the state's public school system, he said. There are only 112 sectarian schools with a total enrollment of 26,610 and 110 non-sectarian schools with a total enrollment of 10,325.

"This points up the magnitude of the problem of accommodating children denied access to public schools," he said.

"In considering any such transition, we must walk with measured steps, with full appraisal of the consequences."

"Abandonment of public support of education would constitute an open invitation to the federal government to assume that function," he warned.

The federal government "in the exercise of its power of eminent domain could acquire public buildings adaptable to its purpose," the governor added.

"IT WOULD establish federal standards, cover the nation's teaching under civil service, prescribe curricula and integrate both faculties and schools."

"We would do well to consider which is better and which we would prefer — public education administered as a function of the federal government, or public education administered as best we can with state and local support, control and regulation."

Almond praised the people of Warren County for their response to the closing of the county high school last fall.

"You held aloft as a brilliant beacon, for all of the nation to see, the name and honor of Virginia unsullied by the stigma of ugliness and violence," he said.

Governor Almond's speech was widely publicized in advance as a "major" address. It was obviously directed to the state as a whole and was considered a setback for the die-hard segregationists who still seek to resist federal court desegregation orders by abandoning public schools and substituting make-shift private facilities.

Efforts are currently being made in Prince Edward County to raise funds for a private school system for white pupils. The county is under a federal court order to desegregate this fall.

Ironically, Gov. Almond now finds himself on the side of the NAACP which is also working to maintain the state's public school system.

450 Attend First Day

Segregated Classes Opened For Pupils At Front Royal

FRONT ROYAL, Va (AP) —By county school bus and private car, an estimated 450 white students came to segregated classes Thursday as the private Warren County Educational Foundation began its second year of operation.

Students in grades 9 through 12 gathered on the lawn of a restaurant that is to be their school to hear their principal say:

"This is the only time this year I am going to use the word integration or segregation. We are here through free choice."

Glen Sunderlin told the open air convocation students attending Warren County High School also exercised that same free choice. He urged the students to avoid any unpleasantness or friction with the public high school students, who number 430 - 20 of them Negroes.

The foundation came into being last year when Warren County High shut down in the face of a federal court order calling for the admission of Negroes. Virginia's anti - integration laws, since knocked down in the courts, called for the closure of any school in which the races were mixed.

The high school reopened in February but was boycotted by white students who continued to attend the foundation's classes. Twenty-one Negroes attended the high school.

A foundation official said all pupils in the private classes have paid or agreed to pay $220 tuition. The official said another $15,000 is needed.

Declare Va. unable to stop mixing

RICHMOND, Va. (NNPA) — A legislative study commission Thursday told the Virginia General Assembly "that neither the General Assembly nor the Governor has the power to overrule or nullify the final decrees of the Federal courts in the school [illegible]

The 40-man Commission on Education in its report to the General Assembly submitted that it would be necessary "to close all public schools throughout the state in order to prevent any integration."

If the recommendations are approved by the General Assembly, it would mean complete abandonment of the program of "massive resistance" to the 1954 decision of the Supreme Court outlawing racial segregation in public schools.

THE BASIC FORMULA of the recommendations is "freedom of choice." Under the proposals, local communities might desegregate their schools without their being padlocked by the state and without losing state funds.

Localities would control pupil assignments and to a large degree school appropriations.

Localities would be allowed wide discretion in dealing with desegregation. The localities could, in effect, evade the desegregation decree, leaving schools with meager state support in communities that refuse to put up money for racially mixed schools.

The commission submitted these proposals to the General Assembly:

1. MAKE STATE and local funds for scholarships available to children who prefer to attend private, non-sectarian schools. All students in private schools would be eligible and not just those who pull out of public schools to avoid desegregation.

2. Reenact the compulsory school attendance law on a local-option basis.

3. Return to local school boards the responsibility for assigning pupils to specific schools with a new appeals procedure spelled out.

4. Allow voters to force the sale of surplus school property in localities that may abandon public education.

5. Change local budget procedures so that appropriations could be made on a month-to-month basis.

ALSO PROPOSED is a bill to permit any locality to close its public schools whenever Federal troops are present.

The commission's report was approved by a vote of 31 to 9. Five of those signing the majority report did so with reservations.

The minority report said the majority report "makes it legally possible for a locality to proceed with as much integration as that locality desires.

"We are not willing to strive simply for containment; we are not willing to accept a little or token integration," the report read, adding:

"THE PEOPLE OF Virginia, and not the General Assembly, ultimately will have to decide how massively they wish to resist integration in our public schools. We must not now meekly surrender."

But the majority report said, "Regardless of how unsound we may regard the 1954 decision of the Supreme Court of the United States... we are compelled to recognize the existence of that decision and the overwhelming power of the Federal Government by the use of force to carry out Federal court decrees."

So far, colored pupils have been admitted to previously all-white schools in Arlington County, Alexandria and Norfolk and others are to be admitted to white schools in Charlottesville in September.

"Under the recommendations, no child will be forced to attend a racially mixed school," said the commission which made an eight-week study under the chairmanship of State Senator Mosby G. Perrow Jr. of Lynchburg.

VIRGINIA COUNTY LOSES SCHOOL TEST

U.S. Appeals Court Orders Integration in September at Prince Edward Classes

RICHMOND, Va., May 5 (AP)—A Federal Appeals Court pushed the reluctant state of Virginia farther along the school integration road today.

In a reversal of a District Court decision allowing Prince Edward County a seven-year grace period, the United States Fourth Circuit Court ordered the rural county to prepare to admit qualified Negroes to white schools in September.

Officials in the county have pledged to abandon public schools for private classes rather than accept integration.

The Prince Edward case, which has been in the Federal courts since 1951, was one of the five that figured in the United States Supreme Court's desegregation decision of May 17, 1954.

Gov. J. Lindsay Almond Jr. who conceded in January that total segregation could only be kept by abandonment of public education, said today:

The Legislature last month enacted Governor Almond's freedom of choice program designed to contain or minimize integration while continuing the public school system.

Expresses Gratification

Oliver W. Hill, counsel for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, expressed gratification at the court action. He said:

"We hope that this case has finally awakened Virginia to the fact that massive resistance and the latest method of evasion will not solve the problem."

The court order did not necessarily mean that integration would start or that public schools would be abandoned in Prince Edward next September. More likely it meant additional rounds of litigation on whether state pupil placements were being made solely because of race.

The court noted in its opinion that other Virginia communities—Norfolk, Arlington and Alexandria—had proceeded with a degree of integration but that no move had been made by officials of Prince Edward to comply with the desegregation order.

It sent the case back to District Judge Sterling Hutcheson and directed him to issue an order forbidding the school authorities to take any action affecting the enrollment, admission or education of Negro children on a racial basis.

The order applies to Negro applicants for high school in September. It also requires the school board to ignore race in considering applications for elementary schools but it set this for "the earliest practical day" rather than at the start of the next term.

'No Argument Needed'

Reviewing the long history of the litigation and the "total inaction of the school board" the court said these proceedings "speak so loudly that no argument is needed to show that the last delaying order of the district judge cannot be approved."

Referring to the Supreme Court decision in the Little Rock case, it said:

"Law and order are not here to be preserved by depriving the Negro children of their constitutional rights."

In his comment on the decision, Governor Almond also took another jab at the Supreme Court. He said its assertion that the principles it had laid down in the desegregation opinion were to be "assessed and elucidated by the district court was nothing more than idle verbiage and was never meant to have any rational meaning."

Other early comment came from the Prince Edward County man who heads the strongly pro-segregation Defenders of State Sovereignty and Individual Liberties. Robert B. Crawford of Farmville said there would never be integrated schooling in the county. He said Prince Edward was ready to turn to the private classroom system it had set up in reserve for several years.

The judges who reversed the District Court were Circuit Judges Morris Soper and Clement F. Haynsworth Jr. and District Judge Roby C. Thompson

Races Prefer Segregation Board Finds

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) — The State Pupil Placement Board said Tuesday its experience in 2½ years of operation "is convincing demonstration that voluntary segregation is the wish and desire of the overwhelming majority of both races."

The board said this is borne out by the fact that no appeal has ever been filed with it, though the board has placed almost 420,000 students in Virginia public schools. In no case has a Negro child been assigned to a white school, or vice versa.

VALIDITY QUESTIONED

Constitutionality of the legislation setting up the placement board has been questioned, but never finally established.

Under state law, the board has sole authority to assign students to public schools. Local school boards are divested of this power. However, in several instances in desegregation cases, federal judges have advised Negro plaintiffs they need not fill out placement applications, thereby bypassing the placement board.

In issuing a statement explaining its opposition and policies, the board said it always has recognized it could not "forbid a Negro child from entering an all white school on the sole ground of race or color."

NO COURT CONCERN

But, the board added, the Supreme Court did not "decree integration." "It is recognized by [illegible] tion of the races in the public schools is of no concern to any court . . . ," the statement continued.

"Upon these two basic propositions, the board is under no duty to take any positive action to mix or accelerate the mixing of the races in the public schools. The board does not intend to propose any plan for the mixing of the races in the public schools."

order passed in an emergency to preserve the right of the plaintiffs to a public school education."

The suit was instituted by a number of white children and their parents to prevent the closing of certain grades in Norfolk's public schools, which would have deprived more than 17,000 pupils of public education.

The complaint charged the City Council was engaged in an evasive scheme to nullify integration orders issued by the district court.

The suit against the City Council was heard on Jan. 28, shortly after the Virginia Supreme Court of Appeals knocked down the state's package of massive resistance laws. On the same day the state court acted, Hoffman announced the decision of a three-judge court in the other Norfolk suit, holding the state school closure law unconstitutional

The Appeals Court said the District Court was justified in its conclusion that the City Council action was taken as part of the plan of massive resistance adopted by the state Legislature in 1956 to retain public school segregation.

"A glaring inconsistency is manifest between the earlier action of City Council and that which was taken later when it became apparent that the plan of massive resistance had failed," said the Appeals Court.

Appeals Court Frees Norfolk School Fund

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) — The U. S. 4th Circuit Court of Appeals today upheld District Judge Walter E. Hoffman's order restraining the Norfolk City Council from withholding public schools to avoid integration.

In a 15-page opinion written by Circuit Judge Morris A. Soper, the Appeals Court said it understood Hoffman's injunction was not a final adjudication but "rather an

Must Be Authentic

American Negro History Considered For Schools

Fri 7-10-59

By OTIS PERKINS
News and Courier Staff Writer

The Charleston City School Board indicated yesterday it has no objection to teaching of American Negro history in Charleston Negro schools. But the board has one qualification: The history should be authentic.

Board members discussed the subject after Acting School Superintendent Thomas A. Carrere presented a "guide" for Negro teachers to use in conjunction with regular history classes.

The teaching guide, prepared by local Negro educators, would be used by the teachers to interpolate history to show Negro contributions to American history, Carrere said.

Previously the board approved in principle the teaching of Negro history in local schools if an authentic text book could be found and approved by state and local school officials. No such text book was located. The board then authorized drawing up of the guide.

But on preliminary examination yesterday, board members said the guide—drawn up in workbook form—had many generalizations and comments which were not qualified as to whether they were based on fact.

The board also took some precedent-setting action regarding admittance of a student who is married and has a child. The student, Mrs. Linda D. Smith, requested permission to return and complete senior year requirements for her high school diploma.

Some members expressed fear that marriage and motherhood may not mix well with academic studies. Others said her family may have a settling influence. On the basis of tentative approval, Mrs. Smith apparently will be allowed to enroll.

The board confirmed the appointment of Edward T. Simmons as principal of Buist School for the 1959-60 school year. He had been named earlier to fill a vacancy left by John R. Collins.

It also approved appointment of these teachers:

Jean Wade Carter and Rebecca Clayton, teachers for Rivers High School and Mitchell Elementary School, respectively; Harold Bradford, Rebecca Manigault and Juanita Washington, teachers at Burke High School, and Britanna Bright, Buist School.

Carrere announced these teachers have resigned: Mrs. Mare Rogers of the High School of Charleston; Mrs. Ruth Mallard of James Simons School and Mrs. B. K. Green of Burke High School.

Miss Caroline Black was granted a leave of absence because of illness. She will be replaced during the coming school year by Miss Carter.

The board turned down a request from Russell Wragg for permission to set up a piano studio on a rental basis in the Craft School building. Board Chairman Charles A. Brown commended Wragg for community activity but expressed the opinion the board shouldn't set a precedent by approving rental of school building space, especially for individual enterprises.

Action on proposed policy for allowing — or prohibiting — fund drives in schools was deferred. It was discussed at a May 13 meeting and held over for study.

Negro Pupils' Plea Balked In Virginia

FLOYD, Va. (AP) — The Floyd County School Board Tuesday refused to take any action on a petition requesting the transfer of 14 Negro pupils to the southwest Virginia county's three white public high schools.

In a statement issued at the end of a closed session, the board said no action was taken because the petition was not accompanied by official transfer applications from the pupils' parents or guardians and were not on the forms prescribed by Virginia law.

If proper applications are received from the Negro pupils and their parents, the board said, they will be turned over to the State Pupil Placement Board in Richmond.

The county has only 28 Negro pupils of high school age.

The county supervisors Monday cleared the way for a fund cut-off that would shut down the schools by placing the county budget on a month-by-month appropriation basis.

Floyd County at present has no high school for Negroes. Negro students of high school age are sent to Christiansburg Institute in adjacent Montgomery County. The county has facilities, however, for Negroes of elementary school age.

The board of supervisors placed the county budget on a monthly basis without debate, effective immediately. Should integration occur and should the supervisors choose to do so, they could effectively close all the county's schools on 30 days' notice by the simple expedient of declining to appropriate funds for their operation.

RICHMOND, Va., May 23—(AP)—Former Gov. Marvin Griffin of Georgia, credited in some quarters with a major role in triggering the Little Rock integration crisis, Saturday night called on Virginians to stand fast on the race issue.

"Don't falter and don't let us down," he said in a speech prepared for delivery to a meeting of the defenders of state sovereignty and individual liberties.

"The people of the Southland are looking to Virginia, the oldest state in the union and the 'mother of presidents,'" Griffin said.

The Georgia governor, who kept his campaign vow that during his term no schools in his state would be integrated "come hell or high water," addressed a Citizens Council rally in Little Rock shortly before the school integration controversy erupted there.

Blamed by Hays

IN HIS SPEECH, Griffin referred to the fact that former Rep. Brooks Hays blamed him for some of the strife.

While denying responsibility for racial strife, Griffin said "If I stirred them up I will say that I am glad. And if they were getting ready to stick their heads in an integration noose without protest, they needed stirring up." But, he added, he was sure that was not the case.

Griffin declared he was not in Richmond to tell Virginians how to run their business but to "volunteer my services and join with you in keeping alive and promoting a general conscience for the preservation of constitutional government, the rights of states, the rights of individuals and the system of free enterprise."

Praises Warren patrons

THE GEORGIAN, who formerly taught school in Virginia and whose wife is a Virginian, praised the patrons of Virginia's Warren County white high school as "people of courage who refused to be browbeaten, intimidated or coerced by the long arm of the federal courts which are bent and determined to destroy every vestige of state sovereignty and set up the first American reich in our great nation."

Griffin warned that "we need to watch the defectors in our own states," and said "If we are ever trampled under by federal boots in the South, it will be because some of our people opened the gates and let the enemy in."

Negroes in [illegible]

RICHMOND, Va., Oct. [illegible] (AP)—Negro pupils outnumbered whites in the 1959-60 school registration here for the first time in history. The record showed 19,204 Negro children and 17,749 whites in the city's 57 public schools.

Integration Effective Today In 4 Virginia Communities

Fri, 9-4-59

RICHMOND, Va., Sept. 7 (AP)—Schools in four communities will admit sixty Negro students along with white pupils tomorrow as Virginia expands racial integration under Federal court edicts.

For Charlottesville and Warren County, the mixing of students in the public schools will be a new experience.

In Prince Edward County Thursday, there will be still another test of the state's new "freedom of choice" school policy when a private organization opens facilities for virtually all the county's white children.

Norfolk to Admit 21

Norfolk and Alexandria will resume integrated operations when classes begin tomorrow. Both cities admitted Negroes for the first time in February after the collapse of the state's school closure and other anti-integration laws in the courts. Norfolk will admit twenty-one Negroes to seven white or predominantly white schools. Nine Negroes are to be admitted to three schools in Alexandria.

Parents of 2,600 children in Charlottesville and Warren County must decide whether to send their children to racially mixed public schools or segregated private schools.

The Charlottesville Educational Foundation will open classes tomorrow for children who object to integration. Twelve Negroes will be admitted to two public schools.

More Private Classes

The Warren County Educational Foundation will offer private segregated classes again this year but has set no opening date. Eighteen Negroes have enrolled in the public high school.

The Prince Edward School Foundation will conduct all-white private classes in lieu of public schools abandoned by the county government. There have been no plans for schooling the county's 1,750 Negro pupils.

Afro Baltimore, Md.

ROANOKE, Va. (NNPA)—At least 14 colored students have won the right to attend Floyd County and Galax public schools at the beginning of this year's second semester.

Federal Judge Roby C. Thompson ordered them admitted but denied an injunction which would have admitted an additional six students from Grayson County to Galax High School.

He said that they must first apply for transfers. Galax and Floyd county have small colored populations. Judge Thompson delayed the start of desegregation to give the localities time to adjust.

IN ARLINGTON, Federal Judge Albert B. Bryan ordered seven more colored students admitted to predominately white schools. At first 16 colored students applied for admission; nine were turned down by the school board which took no action on the other seven. The rebuffed students were denied on the grounds of either residence or academic background.

Of the other seven, however, Judge Bryan says the record "gives no ground for denying" their admission. Thus there will be 23 colored students in formerly all-white schools.

NAACP attorney Otto Tucker delivered the judge's order to school officials after Supt. Howard Bowen said: "We will proceed to enroll the students as soon as we get the court order."

The students are: Oliver Brown Jr., 11; Jacqueline B. Huggins, 12; Brenda B. Fagg, 11; Joyce Battle, 11; Bernard C. Hamm, 11; Dennis E. Spinner; and Sheila A. Eldridge, 6.

IN FARMVILLE, About 1,500 white students entered a system of private schools set up by the Prince Edward School Foundation. No provision was made by local citizens for the 1,750 colored students. Some, however, are attending schools elsewhere.

IN FRONT ROYAL, the Warren County Educational Foundation opened its second year of private school operation. Students were warned to avoid friction with public school students where 20 colored children are enrolled.

The public high school opened on a desegregated basis in February. White students who had been attending Foundation private schools refused to return to the public school.

However, in September, 410 white students returned.

End Of School Placement Laws Seen By Current

Daily World
Atlanta, Ga.

FARMVILLE, Va. — A high N. A. A. C. P. official predicted here this week that school placement laws will be declared unconstitutional by the U. S. Supreme Court because of the way they are being used.

Speaking before the Virginia State Conference of NAACP branches, Gloster B. Current, director of NAACP branches, declared that "this law gives prejudiced officials a device with which to deny admission of Negro pupils to previously all-white schools."

These laws permitted "only a token number of schools to be desegregated in North Carolina, Virginia and Arkansas," he said.

Mr. Current then called on more Negro parents and pupils to make applications for admission to local schools in order to receive the best education afforded in their communities.

"We must prepare our children for the new opportunities which exist," Mr. Current continued, "and motivate them to earn better grades and strive to even higher standards of performance."

The Virginia State Conference of NAACP branches was holding its 24th annual meeting attended by delegates from the 85 branches throughout the state.

Virginia, like other NAACP state conferences, is in the midst of a national NAACP drive for 500,000 members during 1959, Golden Anniversary year of the NAACP.

P-TAs in Virginia Reject Segregation Resolutions

Post
Washington, D.C.
10-15

ROANOKE, Va., Oct. 14 (AP)—Two resolutions opposing desegregation of public schools failed to gain approval of the Virginia Congress of Parents and Teachers convention today.

A resolution favoring the separation of races in public schools and urging the use of "every legal means to preserve such separation," was voted down without debate.

A similar resolution was withdrawn. It would have asked the P-TA to "urge the Governor and the General Assembly to do everything within their power to resist integration of the races anywhere in the Commonwealth of Virginia."

The second resolution said desegregation would place Virginia's public school system "in grave danger of extinction."

The delegates approved a resolution calling on Gov. J. Lindsay Almond and the Legislature to oppose "any course of action designed to weaken the present state constitutional and legislative guarantees of public education, including adequate financial support thereof."

Virginia, faced with Federal court orders to stop public school segregation, has repealed its compulsory attendance law. Some localities have adopted their own.

One county, Prince Edward, has closed public schools rather than submit to a Federal court desegregation order. Public schools are desegregated in five other localities.

PTA Meets in Virginia, May Shun School Fight

Evening Star, Wash., D.C.
Mon. 10-12-59. p. B-2

ROANOKE, Va., Oct. 12 (AP).—Some 1,000 parents and teachers assembled for their annual convention here today, many of them wondering if a spark exsited to touch off another prolonged fight over the school issue.

Many members of the Virginia Congress of Parents and Teachers apparently felt, however, the school matter would tae a back seat to the question of Federal aid to education.

This will be the first convention since the special session of the General Assembly early this ear which fashioned the "freedom of choice" school pan. It is a more moderate program than the defunct massive resistance laws which automatically closed schools.

It was generally felt that any resolution calling for indorsement of the new program of for return to massive resistance policies could be the spark to touch off long debate such as filled the 1958 session. Some resolutions dealing with the school segregation issue are expetced to be submitted before the deadline tomorrow morning.

Any resolutions indorsing the Perrow Commission program or calling for a return to close-the-schools resistance certainly will bring a fight because the delegates reflect the complexities of public opinion throughout Virginia.

A resolution advocating "local option," the heart of the Perrow Commission freedom-of-choice program, squeezed through the 1958 convention by two votes after the delegates split 557 to 557 on a resolution indorsing massive resistance.

Convention resolutions will go through a resolutions committee headed by Hershel Gardner of Mount Solon. Other members are Mrs. Charles Duncan, Radford; Mrs. G. L. Morrow, Jarrett; Mrs. C. B. Coe, Hamption, and Hugh Davis, Richmond.

District PTA meetings in southside counties, where massive ressistance has its deepest roots, have adopted resolutions calling on the Governor to do everything possible to prevent mixed schools.

And out of Northern Virginia have come distrcit resolutions urging the Governor and the General Assembly to make sure no child in Virginia is denied an education.

This year's convention comes with Prince Edward County, one of the defendants in the 1954 United States Supreme Court decision, having shut down its public school system rather than accept integration.

The convention may get resolutions calling for support of private school movements. Others might be critical of the General Assembly for repealing the State's compulsory school attendance law.

The convention resolutions committee will make its report Wednesday morning.

Meanwhile, the State PTA legislative program has won adoption by a majority of the 20 districts within the organization. This program includes provisions backing public schools and compulsory attendance laws. No further action is necessary on the 12-point program.

A program geared to strengthening the State's public school system is the overall convention goal.

More Legal Attacks Seen on Virginia Segregation

By a Staff Reporter

DANVILLE, Va., Oct. 10 Oliver W. Hill, Chief Legal Officer of Virginia's National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, promised continued legal attacks on school pupil assignment plans today.

While Virginia has been making progress in school desegregation, Hill emphasized, it has been "just token . . . due to the fact courts have given a certain validity to pupil assignment plans."

Hill spoke at a workshop session for delegates attending the 24th annual convention of the Virginia State NAACP Conference in this South-side community. The 3-day conference will wind up Sunday with a freedom rally in the City auditorium. The speaker will be James M. Nabrit Jr., Dean of the Howard University Law School.

Hill warned the delegates that they shouldn't expect to win equal footing in civil rights by court action alone. Negroes, he said, must work as citizens in their communities instead of adopting a "waiting-for-Johnny-to-do-it attitude."

One of the big questions at this session has been what legal action the NAACP will take to try to force reopening of the public schools in Prince Edward County. Hill refused to be pinned down publicly on this question and would say only that some "legal problems" have caused a delay in testing program inaugurated this year, he indicated, might possibly be used for the purpose of "containment" of school desegregation in the state. Both Henderson and Robert B. Johnson, Virginia Union University professor, urged all Negroes to work to widen their cultural horizons so they will not be "embarrassed" when segregation breaks down.

The speaker at the Jackson Memorial Dinner tonight was Ruby Hurley, secretary of the Southern Region of the NAACP. Sunday morning new officers will be elected and committee reports presented.

going to the courts to date.

In Prince Edward County the Board of Supervisors refused to levy taxes to operate the schools when faced with a court order to begin desegrating the schools this fall. White students are attending private classes but the 1700 Negro pupils there are receiving no education.

Vivian C. Mason, chairman of the State NAACP Education Committee, told the workshop audience that Negroes must keep applying to enter white schools or else the number of eligibles would be slowly reduced by the "process of attrition" and all recent progress in school desegragation would "fall into oblivion."

This year, Mrs. Mason reported, 86 Negroes are enrolled in formally all-white schools in Norfolk, Charlottesville, Warren County, Alexandria and Arlington.

Another speaker, Thomas Henderson, Dean of Virginia Union University, said Negroes must keep working to close the gap between the average test scores of their youngsters and white pupils. A state-wide

Negro Files Racial Suit In St. Louis

Sat. 10-10-59.

ST. LOUIS (AP) — A suburban Negro doctor is seeking to get his two children into the all-white Maplewood - Richmond Heights school district.

The physician, Dr. Harold G. Russell of Richmond Heights, has filed a writ of mandamus at St. Louis County courthouse in Clayton in behalf of his children, Lillette, 5, and Harold Jr., 8.

Named as defendants were the school district, E. R. Adams, school superintendent, and Floyd S. Heffly, principal of West Richmond School, in which the physician seeks to enroll his children.

Dr. Russell contended in his petition that he tried to enroll his children in the West Richmond School but was told by Heffly to apply for enrollment with the board of education.

This he did, Dr. Russell said, and the children were directed to go to the all-Negro Lincoln School about a mile from their home. Dr. Russell said the West Richmond School is about 10(yards from his home.

The petition contended that the Russell children "solely because of their race were denied" the privilege of attending the West Richmond School.

DIXIE ROUNDUP

Judge Tells County Five Years Long Enough To Get Schools In Order

ROANOKE, Va., Sept. 10 — (UPI) — Federal District Judge Roby C. Thompson said today Grayson County had done nothing in five years to prepare its teachers, students and citizens for school integration.

Thompson, hearing a suit seeking to admit eight Negroes to the all-white high school at Galax, seemed to grow impatient with the arguments of attorneys that Negroes who travel 43 miles to a Negro high school in Wytheville, Va., were better off than they would be at Galax.

Grayson county does not have a Negro high school.

County School Supt. Alonzo Monday told Thompson the county needed more time to prepare its people for integration.

Thompson observed that the school board had had five years to do this but had failed to come up with any plan to handle the six Negroes it sends to Wytheville.

Judge Thompson Tuesday heard arguments on a request to admit 12 Negroes to two all-white high schools in Floyd County which sends the Negroes to the Negro Christiansburg Institute, 45 miles away.

Rev. L. Francis Griffin, president, declared in a statement this week.

The county board of supervisors refused to vote funds for school operation this term, thus forcing the closing of all public schools. White pupils in the county are attending private, segregated classes.

EXCEPT FOR about 50 seniors and juniors sent to the high school department at Kittrell (N. C.) college, and others who have managed to continue in public schools outside the county, colored pupils have no schools this term.

Rev. Mr. Griffin said that the association, which has no interest in sustaining, encouraging or lending support to segregated public or private schooling, is busy forming permanent committees to expand its work.

THE PRIMARY objective is restoration of public schools in the county. It will seek to coordinate the efforts of the NAACP,, other organizations, groups and individuals in its drive to reopen the schools which were closed when a court order was issued for integration.

Another goal is providing the manpower necessary for an all-out poll tax, registration and voter campaign.

AMONG THE immediate crisis objectives are placement of junior and senor high school pupils in accredited schools, setting up study - play groups for the remaining children and conducting an educational and cultural program designed to elevate and broaden the perspective of Prince Edward citizens.

Vote Drive Among Its Objectives

Placing Junior And Senior Students Is One Immediate Task

FARMVILLE, Va. — The Prince Edward County Christian association, born as a result of the public school closing crisis in the county, will expand into a permanent organization "after the county has returned to spiritual, politic al and educational sanity," the

1 Area Pupil Quit School Under Law

A compulsory school attendance provision which allows parents, with "conscientious objections" to keep their children home has been used by parents of only one student among the 79,160 in Arlington, Fairfax, and Falls Church public schools.

Arlington school officials reported yesterday that one of 23,505 students had left school by invoking the "conscientious objection" clause. Superintendent Ray E. Reid refused to disclose which school was involved.

In April, the Legislature, which had repealed the statewide attendance law, allowed localities to adopt their own truancy ordinances. The Legislature required localities to include the "conscientious objection" clause so that no parent would be forced to send his child to a desegregated school.

The Alexandria School Board in refusing Wednesday night to recommend the truancy law, said the clause would make it meaningless. Superintendent T. C. Williams said the law could not be enforced. He added that Alexandria does not have a truancy problem.

Arlington, Fairfax, and Falls Church have adopted local attendance laws. Fairfax and Falls Church school officials said yesterday that no student in their areas has used the "conscientious objection" clause.

Negroes Appeal School Decision

Ten Arlington Negro students applying to schools for white pupils said yesterday they would appeal the July 25 decision of Federal Judge Albert V. Bryan, who upheld the County School Board in rejecting them.

Their attorneys filed an appeal notice in Alexandria so that the case can be reviewed by the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals.

Bryan said the School Board's rejection of the 10 was valid because they live closer to Negro schools. The Judge also agreed with the Board that two of the 10 also could be turned down on academic grounds.

Perrow Report In

Gloomy Outlook Seen For Va. Public Schools

(Journal & Guide)

RICHMOND, Va.—Now that the report of the Perrow Commission has been handed the Governor and General Assembly, the citizens of Virginia find themselves standing squarely at the crossroads as regards to public education. They can either accept the recommendations of the commission and retain a system of public education in which some consideration will be given federal court desegregation orders or they can take the path the state's Southside has already indicated willingness to follow: destruction of the public schol system.

The Perrow Commission report, in the main, puts the decision up to the localities. And the commission offers but three programs to the localities. They can 1) abandon their public schools and switch over to "private" classes with state aid; 2) abide by the letter of the law of the desegregation decisions or 3) forget all about education.

SAGE OBSERVERS cannot help but feel that Virginia is ready to launch another generation of illiterates if it follows the program proposed by the 9 dissenters to the finally-released Perrow report.

On the other hand, it is felt that if the report—in whole—meets approval and its recommendations are followed, the sorry spectacle would arise in which a locality could operate both a "private" and public school system both with public tax funds. The public system in this case—it is feared would eventually become a "colored" one or one serving indigent whites or "traitors" to southern superiority concepts who are willing to abide by the law of the land.

Two recommendations of the committee bear special scrutiny. These deal with giving localities ability to dispose of "surplus" school properties and the re-assignment of placement powers to the local boards.

TO THE CASUAL view, the proposals are harmless, but study of them shows the Commission to be playing into the hands of "private" interests. One recommendation says that the locality can sell school property whenever that property becomes "surplus" by lack of use by students. Conceivably, public school enrollment would fall off as students accept private school grants, making the building surplus. Proposals of the commission as to how these "surplus" sites may be purchased make it extremely easy for private foundations to acquire them.

And returning placement powers to local boards is an empty gesture. The local board would first make the assignment with the student being given appeal powers to the State Education Board, then to and through the state courts and into the federal courts. A child seeking to enter a first grade "of choice" could — through using the remedies which would be opened by the commission's proposals—be fifth or sixth grade age by the time they are exhausted.

A PACKAGE of some 15 bills are embodied in the report calling for legislation which would:

1) Allow the use of state and local funds for pupils who want to attend "private" schools;

2) Give localities the right to make up their own minds concerning desegregation (a definite turn-about from "massive resistance");

3) Let localities determine whether or not they want compulsory atendance laws;

4) Return pupils placement (now "pupil enrollment") powers to local school boards;

5) Keep teachers' contracts operating on a 30-day basis;

6) Allow use of public transportation by pupils attending "private" classes; and

7) Throw out all "massive resistance' 'statutes already outlawed by state and federal courts.

Recommendations

THE COMMISSION laid groundwork for consideration of these legislative proposals by stating:

"We recommend that scholarships be made available to children in every locality to attend non-sectarian private schools.

"WE RECOMMEND a flexible pupil placement plan, to meet the varied conditions throughout the State.

"We recommend a compulsorry attendance law with adequate safeguards which may be used by any locality that desires to do so.

"WE RECOMMEND local budgetary changes which will give the local tax levying body full control over local expenditures to the end that a locality faced with an intolerable situation can constitutionally withhold local support from public schools by the simple method of not levying taxes or appropriating money.

"UNDER THESE recommendations no child will be forced to atend a racially mixed school."

Viewed together, the proposals of the Perrow Commission have the appearance of being "buck passing" devices . . . to wit: passing the state's responsibilities over to local bodies. But it is unlikely that evasive schemes by localities can be operative. The Jan. 19, 1959 3-judge federal ruling on the state's school closure law says, "In the event the State of Virginia withdraws from the business of educating its children and the local governing bodies assume this responsibility, the same principles with respect to equal protection of laws would be controlling to that particular county or city . . ."

THE JAN. 19 ruling outlawed fund cut-off and the closing of certain grades because of integration, among other devices.

It is to the Commissions' credit that it recognized the fact that "All in authority in Virginia have exhausted every legal means of preventing any integration in our schools." The Commission also revealed its close scrutiny of the situation by noting that it is "of the opinion that it would be necessary to close all public schools throughout the State in order to prevent any integration."

IT CANNOT BE denied, however, that Perrow Committee proposals can be considered a re-hashing of "massive resistance" leanings which place the actual act of "resisting" upon the locality instead of upon the state.

Thus the program offered is still considered by many to be "buck passing" and the state now looks at the General Assembly for what promises to be a rough and tumble session.

Bombed School Tribute To Democracy

By DREW PEARSON

OSAGE, W. Va. — One year ago this week I stood before a gaping hole in the concrete floor of a schoolhouse in West Virginia. A bulge was punched into the ceiling above. Twisted school lockers, torn textbooks, broken plaster, splintered glass, desks and chairs were piled topsy-turvy.

Pearson

A hate-monger had stolen into the school on a Sunday night, carefully placed a case of dynamite in the hall, meticulously run a wire through the gymnasium, over the transom of the gym door to a car outside. From its safety he had blown up the school.

The man who wreaked vengeance on children was not caught. But the people of Osage and Monongalia County have not been idle. From the rubble and ashes they have rebuilt the school. It had looked as if it could never be rebuilt, but they rebuilt it.

And last week, the boys and girls of the Osage school band, decked out in green and white uniforms, sat in that same gymnasium, once littered with broken glass and broken plaster, to play the Star Spangled Banner during a ceremony rededicating the school.

OSAGE is not exactly a metropolis. It has a population of 1,000, most of them coal miners, and most of them out of work. It has seen tragedy before. It saw 57 bodies, wrapped in gunny sacks, carried out of the Christopher mine in 1942.

Tragedy and poverty are why the people of Osage long ago learned to live with each other. They learned, working underground that white coal miner has to rely on black, and vice versa, in a rescue operation. There is no color line underground. They learned also to govern their town by electing three Negro city councilmen and three white councilmen.

So when the Supreme Court ruled that Negro children had a right to study with white children, Osage, W. Va. had one of the first schools to integrate. There were 80 Negro children enrolled when the school was blown up one year ago.

SITTING in the gymnasium, as I did last week, listening to the very simple ceremony of rededicating the school, it seemed to me this was a historic occasion. It punctuated a period in American history when we suffered great setbacks, both at home and abroad. It was Oct. 4, 1957, while U.S. troops were occupying Central High School in Little Rock, that Russia first occupied outer space. It was one year later, Oct. 5, 1958, that the schoolhouse in Clinton, Tenn., was blown up. Four weeks later, the Osage school was shattered.

During this two-year period, 84 schools, churches, synagogues, or homes were dynamited in a war of hate. The committee of Americans against bombs of bigotry, headed by Gov. Pat Brown of California and Charley Taft of Ohio began mobilizing public opinion against the outrages, tried to raise money to repair the damage. It was not easy. National organizations usually outgiving in generosity, shied away. Too much political bitterness was involved.

MEANWHILE, in the race with Russia, we also fell behind. There was little cohesion in Washington, more concentration on budget-cutting than on progress-making. Instead of catching up in the conquest of outer space, we suffered defeat after defeat.

But in the little town of Osage there has been a historic victory. The shattered school was rebuilt.

This week, after the rededication ceremony, a reception was given in the home economics room. One year ago, its electric ranges had been blown into chaos. But in the middle of the room, untouched by the dynamite's blast, was a plate of biscuits. A little girl had baked them on Friday before the hate-monger had come in to wreck the building, and they sat there, surrounded by wrecked china closets, fallen chandeliers, and shattered glass.

This week, instead of the biscuits, Mrs. Merle Miller presented me with a cake.

LAST YEAR I had picked up a book: "Our Environment: How We Use and Control It," by Wood and Carpenter. The people of Osage had been trying to control their environment, and had made progress. But they had not been able to control hate.

On the wall, a year ago, hung a picture of Abraham Lincoln who once proclaimed a nation "dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal." He looked down from that picture on the broken plaster, the twisted cinder block of a school where children had been studying as equals, but had been forced to disrupt that study by one who disagreed with Lincoln.

This week, Lincoln looked down on a different scene—a brightly painted, freshly repaired school, completed by citizens determined to carry out his declaration regardless of those who stalk in the night carrying dynamite and nursing hate.

Courage Rebuilds Dynamited School

By DREW PEARSON

OSAGE, W.Va.—One year ago this week I stood before a gaping hole in the concrete floor of a school house in West Virginia. A bulge was punched into the ceiling above. Twisted school lockers, torn textbooks, broken plaster, splintered glass, desks and chairs were piled topsy-turvy.

A hate-monger had stolen into the school on a Sunday night, carefully placed a case of dynamite in the hall, meticulously run a wire through the gymnasium, over the transom of the gym door to a car outside. From its safety he had blown up the school.

In the months that passed, the man who wreaked vengeance on children was not caught. But in those months the people of Osage and Monongalia County have not been idle. From the rubble and ashes they have rebuilt the school. It had looked as if it could never be rebuilt, but they rebuilt it.

And last week, the boys and girls of the Osage school band, decked out in spic and span green and white uniforms, sat in that same gymnasium, once littered with broken glass and broken plaster, to play the Star Spangled Banner during a ceremony rededicating the school.

History Is Made

Osage is not exactly a metropolis. It has a population of one thousand, most of them coal miners, and most of them out of work. It has seen tragedy before. It saw 57 bodies, wrapped in gunny sacks, carried out of the Christopher mine in 1942. And it has seen historic events. It saw John L. Lewis stand under a tree in 1922, long before the United Mine Workers were a power in the coal fields, and proclaim that labor had as much right to organize as banks and business had to join together to promote industry. Walter Hart, a young reporter, now editor of the Morgantown Dominion-News, had his notes seized by the district attorney when he reported that speech. The D. A. seriously considered whether John L. Lewis should be prosecuted for treason.

Tragedy and poverty are why the people of Osage long ago learned to live with each other. They learned, working underground, that white coal miner has to rely on black, and vice versa, in a rescue operation. There is no color line underground. They learned also to govern their town by electing three Negro city councilmen and three white councilmen.

So when the Supreme Court ruled that Negro children had a right to study with white children, Osage, W. Va., had one of the first schools to integrate. There were 80 Negro children enrolled when the school was blown up one year ago.

American Defeats

Sitting in the gymnasium, as I did last week, listening to the very simple ceremony of rededicating the school, it seemed to me this was a historic occasion. It punctuated a period in American history when we suffered great setbacks, both at home and abroad. Meanwhile, in the race with Russia, we also fell behind. There was little cohesion in Washington, more concentration on budget-cutting than on progress-making. Instead of catching up in the conquest of outer space, we suffered defeat after defeat.

But in the little town of Osage there has been a historic victory. Thanks to the goading of editor Hart, the energy of school superintendent Charles Stevenson, and the vision of the county school board, the shattered school was rebuilt.

This week, after the rededication ceremony, a reception was given in the home economics room. One year ago, its electric ranges had been blown into chaos. But in the middle of the room, untouched by the dynamite's blast, was a plate of biscuits. ALABAMA A & M COLLEGE

Ala. A. & M. Asks For $4 Million

HUNTSVILLE, Ala.—Alabama A&M College has asked for $4,322,400 from the state in order to remain accredited. A&M teachers are the lowest paid of any Alabama college, and accrediting authorities have told the school to raise salaries, get more doctorates on the faculty or lose accreditation—$3,380,000 of the request is for new buildings and major repairs on existing buildings. AM has 1,245 students this year.

Two Colleges Facing Loss Of Rating

(Courier Press Service)

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — The Montgomery Advertiser said last week that two Negro colleges, supported by the state, face possible loss of their accreditation.

In an article citing the needs of Alabama institutions of higher learning, the article pointed to the recent loss of accreditation of the engineering school of Alabama Polytechnic Institute at Auburn, and a possible loss for the school at the University of Alabama, both white schools.

Then it said: "Two Negro colleges, also, face possible loss of accreditation — and dormitory space is so short, there is student unrest." Negro state-supported colleges in Alabama are: Alabama State College here, and Alabama A&M College at Huntsville, Ala.

There was no further explanation of the report.

Evening Courses Offered At Alabama State College

The arrangement by which ambitious college graduates can use time and energy in learning in the evening while teaching in the day is being improved each year by Alabama State College. Already the college has received more requests than usual for evening courses and it is now in position to report some of the fields in which there has been increasing interest.

In Group A, the professional core, there is demand for Education 500, "The Scneitific Study of Education"; Education 502A. "The School's Community"; Education 502B, "The Community's School"; the investigations courses, which courses are listed in the Education 520 group and 509A, "Planning The Investigations Project."

In Group B, which is an upward extension of the student's academic concentration, the greatest demand, as usual, is for a history elective, with considerable interest being manifested in the "History of the South." This course is enjoying increasing popularity, although other history courses are also in demand. Among the social studies electives Social Studies 510, "Current Economic Problems," and Social Studies 511, "Comparative Economic Systems," have been requested by those whose concentration is in the economic phase of their major field. English 500, "Advanced Communications," is competing with English 509, "Twentieth Century Novel," and English 511, "Major American Writers," for consideration by those whose Group B electives are in this department.

Education courses in Group C are those of sequences that meet the needs and the interest of guidance or in-service teachers. The expressed need is for courses in psychology and guidance with Education 504, "Psychology of Learning," and Education 517, "Vocational Guidance," especially in demand, although there are requests for other guidance courses and for an elective in the field of administration and supervision.

Registration for the evening classes of the graduate division will be held in Paterson Hall on Tuesday, Sept. 15, from 6:30 to 8 p.m. This is the only period set for registration and it is important that the students assemble in Room 14 at 6:30 p.m. for instructions. It may be well for some to remember that those who have not requested courses for the first term should certainly be on hand to make their request in person.

Art Show Will Exhibit Works Of 'Bama State

One of the largest collections of art ever to be shown in one exhibit from Alabama State College was shipped to Atlanta during the past week for the 18th Annual Negro Art Exhibit.

A total of 56 pieces of sculpture, paintings and drawings were submitted by Hayward Oubre, chairman of the art department of the college, for the Atlanta art exhibit. All the creations represent the work of teachers and students of the college and from Carver High School.

The sculpture is done in wire, plaster of paris, and mahogany and cedar wood. The paintings and drawings are in oil, pencil, pen, water color, tempera, scratchboard and charcoal.

Several persons whose works are being shown have been recipents of awards in past shows. Archie Taylor, a former student, won second place in 1955, with a water color painting and honorable mention in 1956. John Feagin, now an art instructor of Carver High School, received honorable mention in 1957. Floyd Coleman, who submitted nine entries this year, received honorable mention in 1958 with water color prints. Herman Bailey, student at the University of Southern California has been contributor to the Atlanta show.

Among faculty members who have submitted art works are Alfred Stevenson who has several contributions this year; Gregory Ridley, currently teaching at Grambling College, Louisiana and Oubre.

Oubre set a record in 1957 when he won a first prize in sculpture and second in pencil drawing. He had won previous placements and honorable mentions.

Members of the group and contributions are: Carl Abner, charcoal; Lennard Banks, water color or painting and one piece of sculpture of cedar wood; Alfred Bell, four paintings; Arthur Britt, six entries in water color, pencil and pen and ink; Walter Bush, five paintings in water color, pen and ink; Floyd Coleman, nine entries of water color, pencil and oil paintings; Willie Ford, three entries of paintings in ink and water color and one piece of sculpture; James Hall, one oil painting; Walker Hayes, a pen and ink drawing; Albert Lee, two scratchboard entries; Eugene Morgan, two paintings in tempera; Elmore Taylor, one painting; J. Warren, one painting; Marzette Watts, one painting, and Herbert Wilson, one sculpture work in mahogany.

For the first time a local high school was permitted to submit entries. Feagin, submitted an oil painting of himself and one plaster of paris sculpture work. Three of his students submitted creditable pieces of sculpture in African and primitive characteristics and designs. These students are Annie Rudolph, Bettye Averhart and Donald Arrington, all seniors.

Stevenson submitted two pieces of sculpture, both done in wood of mahogany and cedar and two works in oil. Oubre submitted one piece of wire sculpture and two paintings.

Dr. Trenholm Attending WCOPP Parley At Capital

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Dr. H. Councill Trenholm, president of the Alabama State College, Montgomery is attending the eighth annual meeting of the World Confederation of Organizations of the Teaching Proefssions (WCOTP) being held here July 26 through Aug. 12.

The reports of the convention, which has attracted some 500 leaders of teacher organizations from 74 countries, is teaching mutual appreciation of eastern and western cultural values.

Most for the convention concerns the National Education Assn. of the United States, the largest professional organization in this country. Dr. Williams G. Carr, executive secretary of NEA, is secretary general of WCOTP. President is Sir Ronald Gould, general secretary of the National Union of Teachers of England and Wales.

In reports they have submitted for the meeting about one third of the WCOTP organizations hold that the schools of their countries are doing satisfactory jobs in teaching mutual respect and appreciation of Oriental and Western cultures. Another third thought that progress in this regard was unsatisfactory, but most noted that progress was being made.

Some countries, such as Nyasaland and Liberia, reported the problem of basic education so overwhelming that they were not yet prepared to consider teaching other cultures. A few, such as Hong Kong and the Philipines, thought that their unique geographical and political backgrounds made it unnecessary for them to make a special project of East-West cultural appreciation.

ALCORN STUDENTS RETURN TO COLLEGE CAMPUS
Spent Afternoon Watching Classmates Come Home

BETTER DEAL IS PLEDGED AT ALCORN

By W. C. SHOEMAKER
Daily News Staff Writer

Classes were expected to open on schedule today for the first time since the entire 900-member student body of the Negro college was sent home Saturday to "cool off" from demonstrations staged last week in protest of dating regulations and dismissal of one student.

Throughout yesterday afternoon students trickled back to the campus. Parents brought many and others came in chartered buses.

The school had reported earlier that classes were to resume at 1 p.m. yesterday but the only gathering was in the college auditorium where President J. D. Boyd addressed students.

OFFICERS ON DUTY

State highway patrolmen and sheriff's deputies had watched the departure of the studen body Saturday and had patroled the area through Tuesday. But none was seen yesterday.

Boyd refused to discuss plans for returning students to class but Dr. E. R. Jobe, executive secretary of the State College Board said in Jackson that "everybody seems to be in a happy frame of mind."

He said student committees were appointed yesterday to work for beter relations with the faculty and that plans are being worked out for additional organized recreation.

The Legislature will be asked to appropriate funds for a student union building, he said.

Jobe said no disciplinary action is planned against leaders of last week's demonstrations. He blamed most of the trouble on the remote location and overcrowding of the school.

It is located on a winding state highway seven miles from Lorman in extreme southwestern Claiborne. Lorman, the nearest town, has three stores. Port Gibson is 17 miles away.

Students last week protested a college rule which says that coeds can't be taken off the campus at night. Others were disgruntled over the dismissal of a male student for drinking.

Some members of the student body said yesterday the demonstrations were staged by only a few persons.

This is the same school where the entire student bodp staged a sit-down strike in protest of pro-segregation writings of history professor Clennon King in January 1957. King was later discharged, arrested when he tried to enroll at he University of Mississippi and has since moved to California.

Student leaders, however, claim last week's demonstrations are "nothing like" the strike which followed the uproar over King.

Alcorn Students Are Sent Home; See No Trouble

ALCORN, Miss. (UPI) — More than 1,000 students at the Alcorn A&M College for Negroes stayed home from classes today—on orders from the school.

The "forced vacation" started when school officials ordered them off the campus Saturday night under a police escort.

A holiday until Wednesday was ordered in the wake of student demonstrations last Wednesday and Friday nights protesting a change in dating regulations and the expulsion of a student who was accused of coming back to campus drunk.

State College Board President E. R. Jobe said in Jackson he didn't anticipate "any drastic actions" against any of the students unless they resume the demonstrations which caused classes to be suspended.

The entire student body left the campus in cars and special busses, the latter provided by the school. Thirty-five state highway patrolmen and county police escorted the students.

The student body cheered loudly Saturday when it was called into assembly and told classes would be suspended and they would be forced to return home for a "cooling off" period. School officials blamed the demonstrations on only 5 per cent of the enrollment.

Pupils Rebel At Alcorn

PORT GIBSON, Miss. (UPI) — Law officers were on duty today at Alcorn A & M College for Negroes following student demonstrations against the school president.

The students were reported rebelling against the discipline administered by Dr. J. D. Boyd.

Highway patrolmen and sheriff's officers were called to break up student demonstrations earlier this week and officers have kept an around-the clock watch on the campus for several days.

Neither Boyd nor officers at the scene would comment on the matter and Boyd said any statement would have to come from the state college board. But no board spokesman was available.

It was reported additional highway patrolmen and officers were rushed to the college Friday night when a recurrence of the trouble threatened.

Gov.-elect Ross Barnett, a militant segregationist, visited the college earlier Friday, but authorities said the trouble had no connection with his visit and Barnett said nothing happened while he was there. Barnett said he discussed improving the college facilities with Boyd.

Alcorn's entire student body staged a walkout two years ago in protest to anti-integration statements made by a professor, Clennon King, who later changed his views and tried unsuccessful integration.

Officials Close Doors

Alcorn Students Cool Off After Rebellion

ALCORN, Miss.—A "cooling off" period was deemed necessary when Alcorn A&M College closed its doors recently because of a student rebellion over dating regulations and a recent disciplinary action.

A squad of 35 highway patrolmen and sheriff's deputies had ushered students off the campus after about 1,000 of them attended an assembly meeting and were told that classes would be suspended for a short while.

The rebellion was believed caused by the expulsion of a student who was accused of coming in drunk, attempting to choke another student and refusing to get a permit for his car.

were called to break up the gathering.

ANOTHER BONE of contention was a reported rule prohibiting male students from taking co-eds off the campus at night.

After the first outbreak, during which a few windows were broken, students attended classes for the remainder of the week, but refused to cooperate with teachers.

Another demonstration occurred later in the week when an electrical wire was cut and police

Although reluctant to talk, one said, "We are adults and want to be treated like adults."

Close Alcorn A&M Over Student Row

ALCORN, Miss. — (UPI) — Alcorn A&M college for Negroes closed its doors for a "cooling off" period Saturday because of a student rebellion over dating regulations and a recent disciplinary action.

The student body, numbering over 1,000 was called to an assembly Saturday and told classes would be suspended until 1 p.m. Wednesday.

Thirty-five highway patrolmen and sheriff's deputies then ushered the students off the campus.

EXPULSION OF STUDENT

The rebellion was believed caused by the expulsion of one student who was accused of coming in drunk, attempting to choke another student and refusing to get a permit for his car.

Another reported item of contention was a rule which prohibited male students from taking co-eds off the campus at night.

The first demonstration was staged on campus Wednesday night, officials said, and a few window panes were broken.

REFUSED TO COOPERATE

Students attended classes for the remainder of the week, but refused to cooperate with their teachers.

Another demonstration was held Saturday night around the campus grill. An electrical wire was cut and police were called to break up the gathering.

State Public Safety Commissioner Tom Scarbrough said he believed "no more than five per cent of the student body has inspired this action."

RELUCTANT TO TALK

The students themselves were reluctant to talk about the trouble. "We are adults and want to be treated like adults," one told a highway patrolman.

In March of 1957 the entire student body at the all-Negro school walked off the campus in protest over a controversial history professor Clennon King, who had written a newspaper article criticizing the National Association for the Advascement of Colored People.

'Vacation' ends; Alcorn students resume classes

ALCORN, Miss. — Students at Alcorn A and M College returned to classes last Tuesday following a 3-day "forced vacation" ordered by officials of the state school.

The entire student body was escorted from the campus last Saturday by 35 state highway and county police following an assembly period during which they were told to go home for a "cooling off" period.

The vacation order followed demonstrations on Wednesday and Friday nights during which the students protested a ban on night campus dating and the explusion of a student who had returned to the campus after drinking.

Dr. John D. Boyd, president of the school, declined comment other than to state that classes had been resumed.

Other faculty sources, however, described the affair as "a minor incident which was blown up completely out of all proportion to what actually occurred."

Alcorn was the scene two years ago of a walkout by the entire student body in protest over the retention of Clennon King, a controversial history professor who had written several newspaper articles criticizing the NAACP.

ALLEN UNIVERSITY

$10,000 Sought In Allen Drive

COLUMBIA, S.C. — Allen University trustees and alumni have announced plans to raise at least $10,000 to qualify for the Danforth Foundation's matching gift of $10,000 by the December deadline.

The trustees, through its chairman, Bishop I. H. Bonner, have pledged to give $100 each at the Youth Congress being held at Allen University in July to launch the drive. These pledges were made during the University's 89th commencement exercises.

J. T. W. Mims, president of the Allen University national alumni association, announced that 40 queens have entered the "Miss Allen University Alumni of 1959-60" contest to culminate in the alumni's financial efforts on November 21, 1959, during the institution's homecoming festivities.

These ladies from throughout the country represent their individual chapters and indications are that they are already working hard to raise enough money to earn the crown.

All alumni who live in areas where there are chapters are urged to support their queen while those alumni who live in other areas where there are no chapters, are requested to send their contributions to A. T. Butler, executive secretary, Box 100, Allen University, Columbia, S. C.

Dr. Frank R. Veal, Allen's president, stated that this is the third year that the institution has been one of the colleges selected for this grant and he expressed hope that the trustees and alumni will meet the challenge by the deadline.

AMA EDUCATORS MEET—Educational leaders of colleges under the supervision of the American Missionary Association of the Congregational Christian Churches met last week at Dillard University, New Orleans, with Dr. Wesley A. ATLANTA UNIVERSITY

Dr. Clement Discusses Conditions In Russia

Rapidly changing conditions in Russia make the task of the commentator on events there almost impossible in the opinion of President Rufus E. Clement of Atlanta University. Dr. Clement, in reviewing John Gunther's "Inside Russia Today" for the Atlanta University School of Library Service, noted that the author who collected the material for the book in 1956, was compelled to revise constantly while the book was in publication.

The people of Russia, as opposed to the government, are friendly to Americans in spite of the fact that they are constantly bombarded with Anti-American propaganda and have no access to foreign opinions, Dr. Clement said. Foreign scientific journals are available in libraries and are even translated into Russian abstracts, but all other foreign magazines and newspapers, although subscribed to by libraries, are kept under lock and key.

Dr. Clement called attention to many of the contradictions of the Russian scene, the fact that in spite of the de-Stalinization movement, there are still more pictures of Stalin than of Khrushchev on display, and almost as many as of Lenin; the exhibition of modern Russian-built cars at the Brussels Fair, contrasted with their absence from the streets of Moscow; the style shows where dresses are modeled which cannot be bought.

In Moscow, there is no telephone directory, no Who's Who, Dr. Clement said, adding that this might be a good thing because Who's Who today may not be Who's Who tomorrow. On the other hand, he found books and libraries everywhere, in schools, in stores, but with great emphasis on Russian culture.

The next book review will be on February 18 when Dr. Thomas D. Jarrett will review the Beat Generation and the Angry Young Men.

Atlanta University Awarded Grant For Trevor Arnett Library

ATLANTA, Ga.—Atlanta university has received a grant from the Association of College and Research Libraries for a special file for periodicals at the Trevor Arnett library. It is one of 76 college and university libraries receiving a grant.

The Atlanta university grant of $250 is from funds contributed to the ACRL by the United States Steel Foundation, Inc. This is the fourth year of the grants program during which $165,000 has been distributed to over 300 libraries.

Atlanta University Given Federal Aid

ATLANTA, Ga.—Atlanta University has received federal support for an institute in counseling and guidance during the first six weeks of the Atlanta University Summer School, according to Dr. Paul I. Clifford, director of the Institute. Fifty such institutes will be held in the United States during the summer.

The institute will explore various techniques which will identify the able high school student from a culturally impoverished background, Dr. Clifford said. Emphasis will be placed on means by which the students may be counseled to take the high school courses which will insure their acceptance by the colleges which they ought to attend.

The University is planning for 50 students in the institute. Participants will be restricted to people under contract to serve as counselors in secondary schools during the 1959-60 session. They must be nominated by the state department of education and come from the following states: Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, or Virginia.

Each student selected will receive a stipend of $75 a week and an additional $15 a week for each dependent for the six-weeks session. Six hours of graduate credit will be given those who successfully complete the course.

Dr. Clement Speaks At Notre Dame Conference

ATLANTA, Ga.—Tolerance, action within the law, acceptance of programs of desegregation which will minimize friction, and recognition that different communities will move at different speeds were urged as responsibilities of the Negro community as the directives of the Supreme Court on school desegation are corried out.

This is the opinion of President Rufus E. Clement of Atlanta university, an elected member of the Atlanta Board of Education, speaking at a conference on public school desegregation at the University of Notre Dame, May 8-9.

"Permanence of change is much more to be desired than is the speed with which the change is attempted," Dr. Clement said.

The conference, sponsored by the school of Law of Notre Dame university, brought together 12 southern leaders including Senator Cooper of Kentucky, ex-Governor McKeldin of Maryland, Superintendent Hanson of the Washington, D. C., schools and Superintendent Omer Carmichael of Louisville and Mayor William B. Hartsfield of Atlanta, who addressed the conference by telephone hook-up.

Dr. Clement emphasized the fact that the Negro is not seeking social associations with others, but merely individual and group freedom, nor did he see school desegregation leading to "destruction of the white race" any more than standing in line at a post office general delivery window or riding in the same passenger coach or airplane.

Recognizing the validity of the criticism that Negro children made poorer scores than white children on "standardized tests," he blamed this on the separate school system in which Negro children had been shortchanged for deades under teachers who had themselves been victims of limited opportunities.

Dr. Clement counseled Negroes to be helpful in reaching agreement on programs which will lead to desegregation with the least attendant friction and greatest promise of community acceptance. Among measures which he would approve are grouping on basis of ability and the establishment of separate high schools for the two sexes, if this would allay fears.

The closing of the schools to avoid desegregation would work to the disadvantage of the average white family as well as to the vast majority of Negro families, since these would be those who could not afford private schools, he said.

'The situation imposes upon the Negro the obligation to work vigorously and continuously at the task of upgrading the group from within,' he concluded. "Jackie Robinson would never have broken the color line in organized baseball if he had not been better than the average performers who were engaged in this great American sport."

Clement speaks on desegregation

ATLANTA— Dr. Rufus E. Clement president of Atlanta University and a member of the Atlanta Board of Education, spoke on public school desegregation at the University of Notre Dame recently.

"Permanence of change is much more to be desired than is the speed with which the change is attempted," said Dr. Clement at the two - day Conference on Public School Desegregation.

He also called for a program which will minimize friction, saying it is the responsibility of the colored community to recognize that different communities will move at different speeds.

THE CONEFRENCE WAS sponsored by the School of Law of Notre Dame, bringing together some 12 southern leaders, including:

Senator Cooper of Kentucky, former Gov. Theodore McKeldin of Maryland, Supt. Carl Hansen of the District of Columbia schools, Supt. Omer Carmichael of Louisville, Ky., schools and Mayor William B. Hartsfield of Atlanta.

As Dr. Clement put it, the colored man is not seeking social association with others, merely individual and group freedoms.

NEITHER COULD he see school desegregation leading "to destruction of the white race" any more than standing in line at a post office or riding the same passenger coach of airplane.

The Atlanta University president recognized that colored children had made poorer scores than whites on "standardized test," but he blamed the separate school system for the shortcomings of the pupils.

He said colored children, under a separate system, had been shortchanged by teachers who had themselves been victimes of limited opportunities.

A. U. Gets Nat'l Science Grant

Atlanta University is one of thirty-three institutions at which the National Science Foundation will support an Academic Year Institute for science and mathematics teachers in 1959-61. The Foundation grants will provide stipends of $2000 for each participant, with additional allowances for dependents, books and travel.

The first institution in Georgia to receive a Foundation grant, Atlanta University has had two summer school programs and is at present offering an Academic Year Institute. The programs are designed for in-service teachers who need to be brought up-to-date in subject matter in rapidly developing sciences.

Dr. K. A. Huggin is director of the Atlanta University program, which will offer work in biology, chemistry and mathematics. Teachers interested in the Institute should address requests for information and application forms to Dr. Huggins.

This is the fifth year of the program and the grants to the colleges and universities will total $9,200,000. It is expected that approximately 1600 will be enrolled in the program.

Auburn Name Change Set

MONTGOMERY (AP) — Alabama Polytechnic Institute bows to its best-known nickname at 10 a.m. Friday when the school gets the official title of Auburn University.

Gov. John Patterson, in a special ceremony then, is scheduled to sign the name-changing bill into law. It was approved by the Legislature Tuesday.

President Ralph Draughon and other Auburn officials will be on hand when the long, tongue-twisting name of Alabama Polytechnic Institute goes out of existence.

AM&N Student Unit Would Oust Evans

Statement Urges Removal Of School's Acting Head

Memphis Press-Scimitar 7-26-59

PINE BLUFF, Ark., July 25. (AP)—A statement urging removal of E. E. Evans, acting president of Arkansas AM&N College, has been issued by student leaders at the Negro school.

Lorenzo McKinney, president of the Student Government, and James Mays, vice president, said they spoke for the 1,300 students.

"The only way for this institution to progress instead of retrogress is by the removal of the acting president," McKinley said.

Mays said Evans had failed "to gain the confidence and support of the members of the college community."

Their criticism followed the departure of Dr. T. C. Cothran, resigning head of the Social Sciences Department, and three other department heads. The others were Dr. J. B. Jones of Student Personnel; Dr. Cleo Hearnton, director of Teacher Education, and Dr. H. B. Young, head of the Business Administration School. They have complained of loss of vacation pay upon resignation.

Evans said their contracts did not entitle them to the pay "without having worked for that contract year."

Lawrence Davis, school president, is on a one-year sabbatical leave. He offered to resign but officials turned the offer down. The school ended the past fiscal year without operating funds.

Courier Pittsburgh, Pa. Sat. 8-1-59

PINE BLUFF, Ark.—A full-blown storm threatens the very foundations of land grant college education in this state as 30 or more members of the Arkansas Agricultural Mechanical and Normal College faculty announce they have resigned their positions for various reasons.

Acting President E. E. Evans, attempting to apply an economic pinch upon the dissenters, has announced that they will not receive their August vacation salary. Teaching under 12-month contracts, they had designated September 1 as the effective date of their individual resignations.

Approximately half of the withdrawing personnel reportedly tie their actions to a belief that Dr. Lawrence A. Davis, Arkansas A. M. and N. president since 1941, was ousted under unethical pressures, and that Acting President Evans is less than satisfactory in educational leadership ability.

Of the approximate total remaining 56 teachers, about half are committed to a watch-and-see attitude. Some are reportedly seeking suitable employment elsewhere, others are attempting to remain neutral and others, for various reasons, find themselves tied to the community.

LISTED AMONG the 30 resigning teachers were the names of A. M. Lovelace, chairman of the music department and director of the noted Arkansas A. M. and N. Choir; Dr. H. B. Young, Harvard-trained chairman of the department of economics; Dr. Cleo Owens Hearnton, elementary education, and Dr. J. B. Jones, educational guidance expert from the University of Washington.

Another is Tilman G. Cothran, Ph. D., University of Chicago, in sociology. The quintet represents more than 70 years of service to the Pine Bluff shrine, and are the persons most frequently requested to serve as public speakers or consultants, before professional groups.

While the real reasons for such an unprecedented upheaval have not been revealed, as yet, speculation is rife. Dr. Davis was the listed president at the September opening, almost a year ago. Fonuded in 1875, the enrollment for the 1958-59 term was 1,164 students.

Close Out Debate Season

Debaters from Duke University and A. and T. College closed out the collegiate debate season with a match held recently at A. and T. College in Greensboro.

Duke University Debate Team Defeats A. & T.

Arguing the subject, "Resolved: That the Further Development of Nuclear Weapons Should Be Prohibited Through International Agreement," the affirmative team from Duke swept to a unanimous decision in the opinion of the three judges.

COMPOSING THE winning team were Steve Braswell, a freshman from Marietta, Ga., and John Koskiner, a sophomore from Ashland, Ky.

Walter Johnson, Greensboro sophomore and Wallace Wortham, a freshman from Chester, Pa., composing the A. and T. team, debated the negative side.

The match marked the conclusion of the debate season for the Aand T. team which this year placed number five in Brooklyn College National Invitational Debate Tournament held in New York earlier this spring. The local group was coached by Mrs. Zoe P. Barbee, Lt. David McElveen and Warmoth T. Gibbs, Jr.

The event was a feature of the "Festival of Living" series being conducted this month at the college.

BENNETT COLLEGE

Three Bennett Students Named In Mademoiselle

GREENSBORO, N. C. — An announcement that three Bennett College students have been named to the college board of Mademoiselle magazine, New York fashion publication, has just been received here.

They are Misses Angela Faison, junior, home economics major, of Dudley, N. C.; Gladys Hemingway, junior, clothing major of Georgetown, S. C.; and Linda Brown, sophomore, French major, of Akron, Ohio.

Selection of the trio was based upon their having successfully performed the first of three editorial assignments made by the magazine. Successful completion of the remaining two will make them eligible for consideration for one of the 20 guest editorships which the publication will assign in the spring.

Guest editors will spend the month of June in New Yok City helping with the preparation of the annual fall college edition. In addition to housing and meals, they will be paid a salary for the period and will be guests at a number of social and cultural affairs to be arranged in their honor.

BETHUNE-COOKMAN COLLEGE

$150,000 Fire Wrecks Dorm At Bethune

14e(1)

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla.—An early morning fire destroyed Curtis Hall, a three-story, 37-year-old brick dormitory building at Bethune-Cookman College. Damage exceeded $150,000. The 84 sophomore and freshmen girl students all escaped without injury. Four firemen were hospitalized during the five-hour fight against the fire, one for a serious injury.

College officials said it was insured for $150,000, plus $15,000 for the college equipment in the building.

FIREMEN SAID the blaze apparently started in a third floor utility room around 4 A.M., but Fire Marshall Frank E. Viall continued his investigation in an attempt to determine the cause.

Fireman Jimmy D. Williams, 24, suffered a fractured spine when his ladder slipped, causing him to fall from the flaming building about two hours after the Fire Department reached the scene. His condition was reported good at Halifax Hospital.

Three other firemen later were carried from the scene of Halifax, overcome by the smoke. Hospitalized for observation were firemen Edgar L. Brogdon, 305 Jackson St.; Francis DeBar, 540 N. Ridgewood Ave., and John T. Clardy, 844 Terrace Ave.

Fire Chief William Terry also had to receive hospital treatmant for smoke burn of his eyes, hospital attendants reported.

THE 84 students alerted by two girls who discovered smoke coming out of the third floor utility room, evacuated into the chilly dawn in their bed clothing, many barefooted.

Mrs. Henrine Banks, dean of Women, said there was no panic as the fire swept through the building. She said the structure was cleared by the students within five minutes. The students lost all their clothing and belongings in the blaze.

But within several hours, a supply of clothing was sent to the college by the college advisory board. An appeal for more clothing was issued, and will be accepted at the City Island Recreation Hall, Mrs. Banks said.

Dr. R. V. Moore, college president, said it would cost at least $290,000 to replace the 55-room dormitory.

BISHOP COLLEGE

Bishop College Joins TV Course

MARSHALL, Texas. — Bishop College, Marshall, Texas, is among some 300 colleges and universities throughout the country participating in the nationally televised college credit course, "Physics and the Atomic Age," on NBC-TV.

Sponsored by the American Association of Colleges for Teacher Education, the series has been called "a truly bold education experiment."

The course is designed primarily for physics teachers to demonstrate techniques essential for effective teaching of basic principals of physics and to provide students and high school science teachers with up - to - date information concerning recent developments in the field. Sessions, which began last October and will extend through June, are conducted Monday through Friday mornings.

Public school teachers and students from other colleges view the telecast on the Bishop campus each morning in the College Grill.

Bishop College Grads To Hear Dr. Martin King

MARSHALL, Texas. — President M. K. Curry Jr. announced this week that Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. will bring the commencement address to graduating Bishop college students this year. The commencement address is scheduled for Friday, May 22, in the Oscar A. Fuller Memorial chapel.

Dr. King received his education from the public schools of Atlanta, his A.B. degree from Morehouse college and the B.D. degree from Crozer Theological seminary. He did further study at the University of Pennsylvania and Harvard university. He received his Ph.D. degree from Boston university in 1955 in the field of systematic theology.

Dr. King currently serves as pastor of the Dexter Avenue Baptist church in Montgomery, Ala. He is also president of the Montgomery Improvement association, the organization which guided and directed the bus protest in Montgomery, Ala. He is also president of the Southern Christian Leadership conference, and vice-president of the National Baptist Sunday School and B. T. U. congress.

Dr. Ernest C. Estell Sr., pastor of the St. John Baptist church of Dallas and president of the Baptist Missionary and Educational convention of Texas, will deliver the Baccalaureate address on May 17.

Mrs. Blanche Strickland makes $7,500 gift to Bishop College

MARSHALL, Texas — President M. K. Curry Jr. announced last week the receipt of a gift in property valued conservatively at $7,500.00 to Bishop College from Mrs. Blanche Strickland, prominent matron of Los Angeles and Dallas. The gift, made earlier this year, was officially received by the Board of Trustees of Bishop College in its annual session held in Dallas, Texas on May 12. Mrs. Strickland was honored as special guest at the Board dinner on that occasion and received special appreciation from Dr. W. R. White, Chairman of the Board and President of Baylor University.

Mrs. Strickland was also a guest of the college at the exercises and shared the platform with college officials and Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., commencement speaker.

LONG A SUPPORTER of Bishop College, Mrs. Strickland, the widow of the late Henry "Pop" Strickland, founder and president of the Excelsior Life Insurance Company of Dallas, Texas, has been very active with the Los Angeles Bishop College Club which is one of the largest alumni groups associated with the college.

President Curry also announced that Mrs. Strickland's gift is being used to match the Danforth Foundation grant of $15,000.00 to the college for the 1959-60 academic year and that she had been named Chairman of Danforth Matching Campaign.

Mrs. Strickland accepted this responsibility and promised to lead in raising another $7,500.00 in "new money" to complete the matching fund upon her return to Los Angeles.

Dr. Ernest Estell Leads Baptists In $400,000 Bishop College Campaign

MARSHALL, Texas. — Dr. Ernest C. Estell, Sr., who has not yet completed his first year as president of the Baptist Missionary and Educational convention of Texas, has announced that plans are being completed for the launching of a $400,000 Capital Funds campaign for Bishop college during the coming fall and winter months.

This will be the initial effort to underwrite the cost of constructing a new campus for the college in South Oak Cliff in Dallas, high on Simpson Stuart Road. Of the total goal, $300,000 has been earmarked for a building on the new campus. The balance will retire conventions Endowment Notes and its share of the cost of the church building purchased last year by four convention bodies.

According to Dr. Estell, the moderators of more than 20 associations affiliated with the Baptist Missionary and Educational convention of Texas, the auxiliary heads including Dr. G. A. Hobart Sheppard of the State Sunday School and Training Union Congress and Mrs. M. E. Colvin, president of the Women's Auxiliary, are joining with him and leading pastors from every section to harness the energies of at least 400 churches in this effort.

Local organizations have already been set up in nearly one hundred churches, and plans are afoot to line up three hundred more by the time the convention holds its annual session in Lubbock, Texas October 12-17.

The Community Service Bureau of Dallas has been retained to give professional counsel and guidance for this effort. The same fund-raising firm will serve in the Dallas campaign for Bishop college later in the winter.

It is Dr. Estell's plan to have the state completely organized by the time the convention meets and to initiate an intensive effort which will culminate around February 1, 1960, just prior to the start of the Dallas campaign. The campaign will be closed at a special convention Victory meeting which the president plans to call in Dallas on that date.

The effort by the B. M. & E. convention is being made at the same time that the American Baptist convention which also supports Bishop college is intensifying its campaign for $7,500,000.00 for its schools. From this campaign, Bishop college expects to receive some $100,000.00 for capital purposes.

According to Dr. Estell, this is the greatest challenge which Negro Baptists have faced in their history in Texas or anywhere else in America. Braced by their success in the effort four years ago to raise the minimum endowment for Bishop college and buoyed by the new enthusiasm everywhere evident with regard to the college and its future, the president predicted an overwhelming victory in this new effort.

CAMPBELL COLLEGE

Campbell College Receives Help

BY EMORY C. DAVIS

President Robert Stevens, of Campbell College, reported in an exclusive interview with this reporter, that the citizenry of Jackson, Mississippi, have come to the aid of Campbell College, as a result of that institution's tragic fire and loss of Tyree Hall, (girl's dormitory) sustained on the night of January 24 at 1 a.m. The building was a total loss, and although it was insured to the maximum, anticipated proceeds from the fire insurance is expected to be only $75,000.00.

When asked, what the President thought it would take to make a modest replacement of Tyree Hall, he stated, that it would take somewhere in the neighborhood of $75,000.00

He further stated, that people from all walks of life, both racial groups, and varying religious groups have sent donations of clothing and cash contributions to aid in rehabilitating the dormitory. Some 30 girls housed in the building lost everything but the clothes on their backs.

President Stevens feels that the area will contribute some $25,000 to Campbell College through the many agencies and organizations who sympathize with the great loss.

This is the second major catastrophic fire the denomination's schools have sustained this winter. The needs of both institutions are great and all concerned will appreciate whatever the many friends of these institutions will do.

Negro Girls Escape At Campbell College

By W. C. SHOEMAKER
Daily News Staff Writer

Not a girl among the 30 who were housed in the two-story building at 1500 Lynch St., reported saving clothing. Some left the building in pajamas, others wore gowns and others had on less.

No injuries were reported. The blaze broke out in the kitchen on the first floor of the building, President R. M. Stevens said.

They notified Lela Bell Nelson, the dormitory matron, and the three aroused the other students.

The entire brick and wood building was aflame within minutes. It burned until 6 a. m. and only a shell was left this morning.

The dormitory usually housed 60 girls, but only 30 were in the building last night. Half of the group completed semester examinations yesterday and were released for the weekend.

Firemen were delayed in reaching Campbell College due to a mixup in reporting the fire.

Assistant Chief Gene Taylor said firemen were first notified by a telephone operator who told them "a college somewhere is on fire". The operator told the fire truck dispatcher she had been notified by a frantic woman.

Firemen started checking to determine the origin of the call and a few minutes later were notified of the location of the blaze.

DINING HALL LOST

Stevens said the building housed the dining hall for Campbell's 202 students. A cosmotology department was organized last week and equipment worth $3,500 had not been unpacked. It was destroyed.

Students were housed in a teacher's dormitory and in the vacant president's home for the remainder of the night.

Girls from Jackson State College offered clothing and this morning Jackson President Jacob Reddix offered use of his dining hall to Campbell students.

Both white and Negro residents of Jackson brought clothing to the school this morning, but Eva St. Amant of Baton Rouge, one of the dorm's occupants, said some students were still not clothed.

Damage was estimated at $150,000 and 10 percent of it was covered by insurance, Stevens said. The building was 45 years old.

Stevens said he returned here yesterday afternoon after pleading with the college's board of trustees in Dayton, Ohio, for funds to replace both the girls' and boys' dormitories at the college.

He said he was unsuccessful.

This was the second dormitory fire in Mississippi in two days.

This was the second dormitory fire in Mississippi in two days. Mississippi State University's Old Main dormitory burned early yesterday. More than 900 students were asleep in it at the time. Seven were reported injured and at least one was missing this morning.

Negro Officials Discount Arson

The dormitory was the second to burn in Mississippi within 24 hours. Old Main dorm for boys at Mississippi State University burned early Friday morning.

By LES BRUMFIELD
Clarion Ledger Staff Writer

Officials of Campbell College for Negroes here Saturday discounted any notion that a blaze which engulfed Tyree Hall, girls dormitory on the Lynch Street campus early Saturday morning, was deliberately set.

In reply to a query if he thought the fire may have been intentionally started, Bishop Frederick Jordan, chancellor of the college and chairman of its board of trustees, said, "No, I would certainly hate to think so. Since we don't know that it was, we won't think so."

Jordan said an investigation to determine the exact cause of the fire would be instigated.

Robert Stevens, president of the African Episcopal Methodist institution, said it is believed the fire began in the kitchen of the 50-year-old, four-story brick and wooden structure, which also housed a dining hall.

The fire which broke out at approximately 12:45 a. m. Saturday was the first in the history of the college, founded in 1890. Some 30 of 60 students who ordinarily live in the dorm were lead from the building by Lela Bell Nelson, house matron of the dorm. No one was reported injured, however all belongings of the students was reported lost.

Bishop Frederick Jordan estimated the replacement cost of the building at $125,000. He said insurance covered 10 per cent of the loss. Jordan said that equipment valued at better than $2000 installed in the building the day before for a cosmotology school was lost. The school was to have opened next week.

Flash Gordon Walker, who lives in Mose B. Salter dorm for boys, directly across a compound from the girls' dorm, said he had just returned to his room at about 12:45 a. m. when he looked out his window and saw the blaze. He said he promptly called the fire department.

DORMITORY LOST — Firemen battle flames as fire destroys the girl's dormitory at Campbell College here shortly after midnight Friday. The building and personal belongings of the 60 Negro students were destroyed.

NEGRO SCHOOL GROWTH IS SET

CM&I Will Expand in Two Fields

The Times-Picayune
New Orleans, La.

By BEN McCARTY

JACKSON, Miss. (AP)—Christ Missionary and Industrial College for Negroes, a 50-year-old institution here in the heart of the segregationist belt, is planning to expand in two fields as it works toward helping students adjust to their surroundings.

CM&I which dropped its college-level work five years ago, hopes to re-enter the field next year and strengthen its work in the high school grades at the same time by adding shop courses for boys.

"We're trying to teach and train the whole child," Principal Frank Moore said, "intellectually, physically and spiritually, so he can better take his place in life."

CM&I has 104 students, who range in age from 6 to 18 in elementary and high school work. Most are from the Jackson area.

The school is sponsored by the Church of Christ (Holiness) USA and is conducted much as public schools except for the addition of a devotional period at 8:30-8:40 a. m. and a chapel at 10:10-11 a. m. daily.

CONDUCT IS GOOD

"The conduct of students at CM&I is much better than at state-supported schoools where I have taught," Moore said.

"We have no major discipline problems. The students know and respect their teachers, and the teacher has full control of the classroom.

"The girls are urged to dress modestly and the boys are asked to appear neat. We have not had any trouble with students leaving school to get married."

The school receives no state support, but uses state-adopted textbooks. It has to buy books, however, for several subjects not in the state curriculum.

At one time the college was recognized by the state as a teacher training institute. In the 1940s, the state raised requirements for such recognition and the school was unable to meet them.

Officials are planning to renew a bible college program leading to a bachelor of science in religious education.

CM&I will seek accreditation by the American Assn. of Schools of Religious Education, which will decide the matter at its Cincinnati session Dec. 29-30.

OFFICIALS LISTED

Howard affiliated with the Church of Christ (Holinesss) USA in 1933 and was elected president of the college in 1946. The church is about 75 years old and has congregations in the principal cities in the Northeast, West and South.

A new building for CM&I was dedicated to Howard last May 24. Built at a cost of $125,000, the building includes an auditorium, and unequipped clinic, four offices, home economics room, unequipped science room, library, two restrooms and seven classrooms.

CM&I is in the northwestern part of Jackson on a 75-acre tract near a modern housing development for Negroes.

The school was founded at the turn of the century by the late Rev. Charles Price Jones of the Church of Christ (Holiness) USA.

Appropriations come from 30 per cent of a general fund collected annually from members of the churches. Special donations are made often at the national convention of the church. Other income is from individual donations.

CM&I plans include a $100,000 project for a gymnasium, dining hall and boys dormitory.

Keep Pushing On, Clark College Told

By CLAUDE GEORGE SR.

"The soul of any institution of learning should never find time to boast of its accomplishments because there is always room for improvement," Dr. Matthew S. Davage said here Sunday.

Dr. Davage, who delivered the 90th Founders Day address at Clark College and who for 17 years served as president, told a capacity audience in the school auditorium that although Clark College has come a long way over the years through many struggles, the college still has to be born again and again as each generation comes along.

Dr. Davage said the need for pioneers in the field of education is just as great today as ever. Each generation requires new operations and new methods of teaching in order to meet the new duties that follow each generation. He told the students, "While you are here celebrating the 90th anniversary of Clark, the contribution made by your parents and foreparents will not relieve you of your duties to the world ahead. The next generation is dependent upon your contributions."

Dr. Davage said the Southern Negro, after he had gained his freedom, was still robbed of his self-direction and self-reliance; but through the aid of Northern philanthropists he has found a way to a better life.

Dr. Davage said in conclusion that these good church-related colleges are here to stay. "They will survive notwithstanding the desegregation of state-supported schools," he said. He was introduced by Dr. James P. Brawley, president of Clark College.

ATLANTA — One instructor, three different languages, ten room practicing different languages at the same time with no resultant discord: This is the situation in which a student of foreign languages will find himself at Clark College's new electronic teaching laboratory in the Department of Modern Languages.

The new laboratory is one phase of a series of new developments in the teaching of foreign languages at Clark which is calculated to make this 90 - year - old institution a center for the study of languages in the Southeast.

Another major aspect of the development is the Junior-Year - Abroad program in which Clark may send one or more students to France, Germany or Spain each year for his third college year. The first student will leave this fall for Aix-en-Provence, France, for study at the University of Aix-Aix - Marseille.
Marseille.

THE LABORATORY itself, the only one of its type in a southeastern educational institution, was installed recently by the Electronics Teaching Laboratory Corporation of Washington, D.C. Similar facilities have been set up by this company for the U.S. State Department during the past ten years throughout the world.

They are at such installations as the Navy Intelligence School, the Strategic Intelligence School, West Point, the Pentagon, the Air Force Academy, and abroad at military posts from South America to Asia in such countries as Brazil, Cambodia, Chile, France Korea and Japan.

Recording tapes are the major tool of the new laboratory. Students sit in individual booths, each equipped with recording equipment, and work with exercises in pronunciation, reading, conversation and diction.

Each student receives attention from an instructor who sits at the monitor panel at the front of the room and can listen to or talk with each student individually or with all students simultaneously.

Students taking foreign languages as a required course are required to spend at least one hour a week in the laboratory. Foreign language majors spend considerably more as a supplement to regular classroom work, which calls for three or more hours per week, and greatly increase teaching efficiency.

DILLARD UNIVERSITY

Dr. C. K. Lawless New Head Of Board At Dillard University

Nashville Globe
Nashville, Tenn.
10-30-59. p. 1

NEW ORLEANS — Dr. Theodore K. Lawless, Chicago physician, was elected president of the Dillard University board of trustees here Friday. He succeeds the late Edgar B. Stern, Sr., who headed the university's governing board from its organization in 1930 until his death on August 24.

The trustees also elected Mr. Stern's widow, Mrs. Edith Rosenwald Stern, to board membership. Although not previously a board member, Mrs. Stern has been closely associated with the university since its founding.

The new president of the Dillard board was born in Thibodeaux, La., and received his undergraduate education at Straight College, which was merged with New Orleans University to form Dillard, and at Talladega College. He did his graduate work at the University of Kansas, Howard University and the University of Freiburg, Germany. He received his M. D. degree from Northwestern University.

In addition to his private practice, he is senior attending physician in dermatology and syphilogy at Provident Hospital, Chicago. He is also president of Gentilly Garden Apartments, an 86-unit model development adjoining the Dillard campus.

Honors bestowed upon Dr. Lawless include the Harmon Award for outstanding work in medicine in 1929 and the Spingarn medal in 1954. Talladega College conferred an honorary doctor of science upon him in 1945, and Bethune-Cookman College gave him an honorary LL.D degree in 1952.

In another action, the board passed resolutions expressing its appreciation of the service rendered the university by Mr. Stern and by Monte M. Lemann, another charter trustee who died on Sept. 13.

Isaac A. Battle, vice president of the General Alumni association, will extend greetings for the alumni and Dean Leedell W. Neyland will speak for the faculty.

The Medallion Of Office

The medallion of office is hung about Dr. Ridley's neck by John C. Bias, president of the Elizabeth City general alumni association. Mr. Bias is a son of the college's second president, John Henry Bias, who served from 1927 until 1939.

Notables On Hand For Inauguration Of Ridley

ELIZABETH CITY, N. C. — There was an aura of important things to come, of genuine goodwill between administration and students, faculty, townspeople, and trustees, and of escape from problems of the past decade at the college as 43-year-old Walter Nathaniel Ridley, scion of one of Virginia's most distinguished families, formally assumed the reins as president of Elizabeth City State Teachers College, one of the 12 units in the state's system of institutions of higher learning.

Greetings and salutations were brought by D. S. Coltrane, assistant director, department of administration, and state budget officer, on behalf of Governor Luther Hodges of North Carolina, Dr. William J. Kennedy, on behalf of the State Board of Higher Education; Mayor Levin Culpepper of Elizabeth City; Miss Barbara Ann Ransom, on behalf of the students; Prof. Edna H. Mitchell, on behalf of the faculty and alumni; Dr. H. Councill Trenholm, president of Alabama State College, Montgomery, on behalf of educational associations; Dr. William C. Friday, president, the Consolidated University of North Carolina, on behalf of North Carolina institutions of higher learning; and Dr. Robert P. Daniel, president, Virginia State College, on behalf of American colleges and universities.

THE FORMAL investiture of Dr. Ridley was presided over by J. W. Davis, chairman of the board of trustees. McDonald Dixon, vice-chairmer of the trustees, presented Dr. Ridley the college charter; Dr. Clifford B. Jones, also a trustee, presented the keys; John C. Bias, alumni president, presented the presidential medallion; Roland L. Garrett, a trustee, presented the mace; and Olander R. Hill, student council president, was the bearer of the symbols of office.

Music and vocal selections were offered by Winston A. Bell, organist, and the college choir under the direction of Director Evelyn A. Johnson. The invocation was by the Rev. Alexander H. Easley, rector, Saint Paul's Memorial Chapel, Lawrenceille, Va.; and the benediction by the Rev. Thomas B. Hargrave, pastor, Antioch Presbyterian Church, Elizabeth City.

THE INAUGURAL ceremonies were preceded by an academic procession, and followed by a recessional of the delegates and others garbed in academic robes.

By direct designation of President Colgate Darden of the University of Virginia, Dr. Louise S. Hunter, wife of Dean J. M. Hunter of Virginia State College, and herself a teacher of note, represented the University of Virginia. She was one of the first three or four of her race to receive a U. V. degree after racial barriers there were lowered.

Other Negroes who were designated as representatives of predominantly white universities were: Yale, Dr. Harry W. Roberts; Martin Luther Wilson, Michigan; Dr. T. Nelson Baker, Oberlin; Dr. John M. Hunter, Cornell; and Thomas W. Young, Ohio State.

$1,200,000 Invested In Two New Fisk Buildings

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Two modern, air conditioned buildings were dedicated at Fisk University recently and a third structure — Park hall was renamed Park-Johnson hall.

Dr. John Hope Franklin, professor and chairman of the department of history at Brooklyn College and a 1935 Fisk graduate, delivered the dedicatory address.

BUILT and furnished at a cost of $1,200,000, the two new buildings — the Adam K. Spence Student union and the W. E. B. DuBois men's dormitory — will stand as memorials to a former principal of Fisk and a distinguished alumnus.

Fisk's new student union building, with two floors, will include a main dining hall designed to serve 900 persons, a book store, a snack bar, a student lounge, campus post office and office space for student organizations.

The new men's dormitory will accommodate 150 students. It is fully equipped with lounge and recreational facilities.

PARK-JOHNSON hall, the university's social science building, was named originally for the sociologist, Robert Ezra Park. It was built in 1955.

On Library Board

Fisk University Librarian, Myrna [illegible] Colby named to the Nashville (Tenn.) Public Library Board. The board administers all public libraries in the city system which consits of the main library with three branches. Two new branches and several in the county are soon to be built. The Nashville public library has been integrated for several years.

John Johnson Named to Fisk Trustee Board

John H. Johnson, president of Johnson Publishing Company in Chicago, has accepted membership on the Fisk University Board of Trustees.

Publisher of Ebony, Tan, Jet and Hue magazines, Johnson was chosen in 1951 as one of the outstanding young men of the year by the United States Junior Chamber of Commerce. He was the first Negro businessman selected for this honor.

Johnson was recently elected to the trustee board of the National Urban League and LeMoyne college in Memphis.

Tan, a women's magazine, has a circulation of 200,000.

On April 21, 1955, Johnson was among 20 businessmen who were invited by President Eisenhower to a stag dinner at the White House. He was also a member of the press group which accompanied Vice-President Nixon on a good will trip to Africa in the spring of 1957.

Johnson is a member of the Chicago Association of Commerce and Industry. He is a director of Supreme Liberty Life Insurance Company. Adult Education Council of Greater Chicago, National Conference of Christians and Jews and is a trustee of Tuskegee institute.

Fisk Jubilee Singers To Give Concert At Dunbar Feb. 1st

The Fisk Jubilee Singers — descendants of the famous singers whose songs saved their school — will give a concert at 4 p.m. Sun., Feb. 1 in the auditorium of the Paul Laurence Dunbar Vocational High School, 30th st. and South Parkway.

The concert is sponsored by the Chicago Fisk Club, which is composed of some 400 graduates of Fisk University, Nashville, Tenn., and the proceeds will benefit the university's scholarship fund.

The Fisk Jubilee Singers are internationally famous for their interpretations of Negro spirituals. In fact, it was the first group of Jubilee Singers who lifted these humble but emotional songs of faith from their native cradles of Southern plantations to introduce them to the musical world.

That was back in 1871, five years after Fisk University first opened its doors to a thousand eager students — newly emancipated bondsmen — who flocked to the school named after Gen. Clinton B. Fisk, the distinguished soldier-educator.

General Fisk, who was at the time in charge of the Freedom's Bureau in Tennessee, had secured quarters for the school in barracks formerly used by the Union Army.

The University, which had opened with such high hopes five years before, now was faced with a seemingly hopeless financial crisis.

The Rev. George L. White, then treasurer of the school as well as professor of music, turned away from the opposition by the school's board of trustees and discouragement from all sides to take a small band of singers on a concert tour to raise money for the school.

To finance the tour, the Rev. Mr. White borrowed money personally, and the band of singers headed to Cincinnati for its October debut.

That debut made history by introducing the Negro spiritual to the musical world. The concert netted $50.00. The great Chicago fire started the same night of the concert.

The Jubilee Singers forwarded that $50.00 to the Chicago Fire Relief Fund and limped along poorly clad and hungry.

It was during this tour that the Rev. Mr. White decided to name the group the "Jubilee Singers" from the Biblical reference to the year of Jubilee in the book of Leviticus.

This first tour lasted three months, established the fame of the Jubilee Singers, and literally saved the university. The Jubilee Singers have been an indispensible tradition with Fisk University ever since.

That first concert tour attracted the attention of Henry Ward Beecher, who publicly sponsored the singers. After that, they began to send the much needed money back to the school. They sang at the World Peace Jubilee in Boston, and packed the house at the Academy of Music in Philadelphia. Later, they were invited to sing in the White House in Washington, D.C.

The Jubilee Singers made their first tour of Europe in 1873, when they were enthusiastically received by large audiences in England, Holland, Scotland, Germany, Sweden and Russia. They sang 52 concerts in one season in Stockholm, a remarkable achievement for any group of musicians. They packed the Salle Gaveau in Paris as no one but Caruso ever did. In England, they sang before the Queen, the Prince of Wales, and the Prime Minister.

There have been a number of Jubilee Singers since that first group made its pilgrimage, but the quality of singing of successive groups has always remained exemplary.

Fisk Women Honorary Chairman Is Named

PHILADELPHIA, Pa. — Mrs. Ida Coker Clark of Yeadon, Pa., Fisk alumna and chairman of the Women's Provisional Committee of Fisk University Alumni Association, has received an acceptance telegram from Mrs. Stephen J. Wright, wife of the president of Fisk, who was invited to serve as honorary chairman of this committee.

Mrs. Clark has named Miss Annetta Baugh, faculty member at State Teachers College, Montgomery, Ala., as co-chairman of this committee.

Miss Baugh will preside at the second annual Women's Day, which will be held at Fisk University, Nashville, on April 25.

Mrs. Clark has the distinction of serving as the first chairman of this Fisk women's group and is now out-going chairman. Mrs. Pearl Creswell, wife of Fisk's comptroller, has been named chairman of the nominating committee.

At this second Women's Day business session, a resolution will be presented asking that Heritage House be designated as Alumni House. This campus house is the former home of Dr. and Mrs. Charles Johnson and has served as the home of other presidents of the university.

The "Fisk Man of the Year" chosen by this committee will be John Work, retired director of the Jubilee Singers. He will be honored at the Gold and Blue Luncheon by Fisk women who will be in attendance.

Fisk Gets $50,000 Gift, To Offer 10 Fellowships

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Ten fellowships of $1,000 each will be granted by Fisk University for graduate study.

Dr. Stephen J. Wright, president of Fisk, said this week a $50,000 grant from the Danforth Foundation will make it possible for Fisk to award ten fellowships for the next three years. These fellowships will be awarded for study in chemistry, physics, psychology, and sociology.

IN ADDITION, Dr. Wright said, the funds will provide research grants for teachers, and the appearance of guest lecturer at Fisk.

The fellowships will cover room, board, tuition and general university fees for a full academic year.

The $50.000 Danforth Foundation grant, one of the largest awarded predominantly Negro institutions of higher education, will improve the quality of graduate students, the quality of teaching, the effectiveness of the university's graduate program instruction, Dr. Wright said.

Miss Baugh will preside at the second annual Women's Day, which will be held at Fisk University, Nashville, on April 25.

Mrs. Clark has the distinction of serving as the first chairman of this Fisk women's group and is now out-going chairman. Mrs. Pearl Creswell, wife of Fisk's comptroller, has been named chairman of the nominating committee.

At this second Women's Day business session, a resolution will be presented asking that Heritage House be designated as Alumni House. This campus house is the former home of Dr. and Mrs. Charles Johnson and has served as the home of other presidents of the university.

The "Fisk Man of the Year" chosen by this committee will be John Work, retired director of the Jubilee Singers. He will be honored at the Gold and Blue Luncheon by Fisk women who will be in attendance.

Fisk Gets $50,000 Gift, To Offer 10 Fellowships

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Ten fellowships of $1,000 each will be granted by Fisk University for graduate study.

Dr. Stephen J. Wright, president of Fisk, said this week a $50,000 grant from the Danforth Foundation will make it possible for Fisk to award ten fellowships for the next three years. These fellowships will be awarded for study in chemistry, physics, psychology, and sociology.

IN ADDITION, Dr. Wright said, the funds will provide research grants for teachers, and the appearance of guest lecturer at Fisk.

The fellowships will cover room, board, tuition and general university fees for a full academic year.

The $50,000 Danforth Foundation grant, one of the largest awarded predominantly Negro institutions of higher education, will improve the quality of graduate students, the quality of teaching, the effectiveness of the university's graduate program instruction, Dr. Wright said.

Courier Sat. 6-13-59
Pittsburgh, Pa.

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Members of the 1959 Fisk University graduating class, 155 in all, were presented the challenge of using their education to "learn the greatest lesson of all . . . how to get along with our fellow-men."

Judge Wade H. McCree Jr. of the Third Judicial Circuit of Michigan and a Fisk alumnus, delivered this message in the packed Fisk Chapel, climaxing a series of commencement activities at the Nashville institution.

He pointed up the value of education as a means of bringing real meaning to the word "brotherhood." He urged the graduates to rid themselves of all conceits and pretensions of "being better than anyone else."

A member of the class of 1910, Mrs. Gaines has served as president of the Chicago and Northern District Association of Colored Women, as president of the Illinois Association of Colored Women, and is honorary president of the National Association of Colored Women's Clubs.

Mrs. Gaines' other activities have included membership on the Hoover Housing Commission, the Commission for Reorganization of Federal Agencies, Republican committeewoman for the First Congressional District of Illinois, a member of the Citizens Advisory Committee to the Chicago Plan Commission, a member of the Advisory Committee on Interracial Activities in Chicago public schools.

Dr. Haynes is a graduate of the class of 1903 and was the first Negro to receive a Ph. D. from Columbia University. He is a former alumni trustee of Fisk University.

Currently, and for the past nine years, Dr. Haynes has been teaching at the College of the City of New York on subjects dealing with Africa in world affairs, and principles and methods of adjustment in white-Negro relations in the U. S. and Africa.

An announcement was made of the election of four new members to Phi Beta Kappa National Honor Society. They are Myrtle Louise Atkinson of Kingston, Jamaica; Esther M. Langston of Orlando, Fla., who were graduated summa cum laude; Joseph A. Johnson III, Fisk junior, and Maize H. Guscotte of Thompson Town, Jamaica, who was gradu-

Fisk Prof To Study In Psychology Program

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — It was announced recently that Dr. S. O. Roberts, chairman of the department of psychology, Fisk university, has been chosen as one of ten psychologists who will be members of the only research participation project in the field of psychology which is being sponsored by the National Science Foundation.

This project has been established in cooperation with the University of Michigan's Department of Psychology for an eight-week period this summer.

Participants in this program will share in two seminars—one on recent developments in the experimental approach to the basic areas of psychology and another on the latest advances in statistical methods and research designs.

In addition, they will have the opportunity to study at first hand the research programs in the Department of Psychology and the related behavior and medical sciences. Each participant will also work on a special topic of his own in collaboration with one of the experts in the given area.

Dr. Roberts will work on the problem of cultural differences in human motivation and learning in association with Dr. William J. McKeachie, director of the Michigan psychology project.

Dr. Roberts has been chairman of the Fisk department for the past ten years and has won support for several undertakings, including a Field Foundation grant and a current National Science Foundation grant for experimental psychology.

He has held several Fisk-Carnegie grants, a Social Science Research Council Grant-in-Aid, and a Ford Faculty Fellowship. The psychologist has served as consultant and lecturer in several institutions, including New York university, Tennessee A&I State university, and Meharry Medical college.

Professors vote Fisk U. censure

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

PITTSBURGH, Pa. — The trustees of Fisk University were censured Friday by unanimous vote of the 200 delegates attending the 45th annual convention of the American Association of University Professors.

The association has 40,000 members nationally.

Censure is the most severe action possible within AAUP rules against any institution. Many outstanding professors refuse to accept appointments at universities on the AAUP censure list.

It was based on the dismissal in 1955 of Dr. Lee Lorch, from Fisk by action of its board and then president, the late Dr. Charles S. Johnson, who acted under pressure from reactionary board members.

THE VOTE CAME after the AAUP Academic Freedom Committee reported to the convention that its thorough investigation disclosed that Fisk authorities were "guilty of serious violations of academic freedom" in this matter.

Delegates expressed the hope that Friday's action will lead to a re-examination of the composition of the trustee board and encourage the new president, Dr. Stephen J. Wright, and the minority trustees to take vigorous action to secure redress for Colored Trustees are in the minority on the Fisk Board. Southern whites have long been the most aggressive members of the board.

THE CASE AROSE when Dr. Lorch attempted to enroll his daughter in the Nashville public school nearest his home after the May 17, 1954 Supreme Court decision. He was immediately summoned by the House Un-American Committee to testify in Dayton, Ohio, 350 miles away.

He denounced the Congressmen involved for attempting to create a "smear and a diversion" to help pull Dixiecrat chestnuts out of the fire. Indicted for contempt of Congress, he was fully cleared in the Federal Courts.

Southern white trustees threatened to resign from the board and create extensive pub-

The AAUP actionis an outcome of thehintensive investigation it conducted into the matter through extensive correspondence and official visits to the Fisk campus.

A special committee published a long, carefully documented report in the March issue of the AAUP Bulletin, a copy of which had been sent to all 40,000 AAUP members well in advance of the convention.

The AFRO published an account of this report April 11 and an editorial calling on the Fisk Board to rescind its action against Dr. Lorch in the April 18th issue.

VANTS SEGREGATION MAINTINED

Beasley Sees No Closing Of A&M Graduate Schools

TALLAHASSEE, Jan. 30 (UPI)—House Speaker-designate Thomas Beasley said today there is no chance the Legislature will seriously consider closing down graduate schools at Florida A&M University for Negroes.

"The people of Florida are willing to pay whatever is necessary to maintain segregation," Beasley declared.

The House leader, an outspoken [illegible] County, expressed surprise that [illegible] LeRoy Collins would suggest [illegible] Legislature consider closing [illegible] schools at A&M to save money. "That would be giving in to pressure being put on the South to force integration," he declared. He said it also would be unfair to Negroes "because many of them are getting an education at A&M University they otherwise would not get."

Collins told the Budget Commission yesterday that the graduate program at the Negro university should be reappraised in the light of Florida's financial plight as well as the racial situation.

He asked for exact figures on student costs, but said he understood that six Negroes had been graduated from the A&M law school at a cost of $60,000 per student.

11 Graduates Since 1950

A&M President George Gore said, however, that the school had graduated 11 students since it opened in 1950. He said he did not have the exact per-student cost, but believed it currently is running about $13,000.

Beasley said abolishment of A&M graduate schools "would create a bad situation."

"I want to see segregation in all phases of education, elementary, junior high, high school, university and graduate level," he said.

Beasley said he saw no particular significance in the fact that one Negro enrolled without incident in the University of Florida law school last fall.

"One got in all right, but if we make it a wholesale proposition it would be a horse of a different color," he said.

Collins and Budget Director Harry Smith referred to graduate schools at A&M in law, pharmacy, education and agriculture. But Gore said pharmacy and agriculture courses are under graduate programs.

He said there are three students working toward a master's degree in agriculture education and 288 studying for masters' degrees in teacher education.

Pharmacy, starting this fall, is a five-year course, but the students get the same bachelor degree offered in the previous four-year course, Gore said.

James Love of Quincy, chairman of the Board of Control of the university system, said the board does not plan to make any recommendation for or against closing the graduate schools.

"We will simply get the cost figures and present them to the Legislature with no recommendation," Love said.

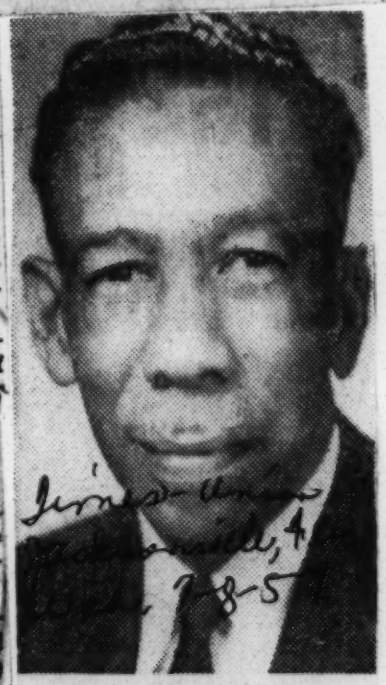
He said he agrees the law college operation should be looked into. But he said the graduate school in education operates less expensively than those at Florida State and the University of Florida.

A&M offers only a master's degree, whereas the white universities give doctorates.

Love conceded the Negro law school is "terrifically expensive."

Dr. Gore said the law school has a staff of six professors, which is the required minimum for national accreditation. "We'd have to have six instructors even if we only had one student," he said.

With the present enrollment in the law college of 18, this provides a ratio of one professor for every three students.



REAPPOINTED

Reappointment of Dr. George W. Gore Jr., president of Florida A and M University, to a four-year term on the Southern Regional Board of Education, has been announced by Governor LeRoy Collins. Dr. Gore's new term which began July 1, continues through June 20, 1963. Previously he had served for one year in filling an unexpired term and on June 30 completed his second consecutive four-year term.

SOLONS ON A.&M. ISSUE:

Segregation Valued Over Fund Savings

TALLAHASSEE, Feb. 4 (UPI)—Key members of House and Senate Appropriations Committees said today they are not interested in saving money at the expense of racial segregation.

Only one of a dozen legislators here for biennial budget hearings had a favorable word for LeRoy Collins suggestion that the Legislature consider closing expensive graduate schools at A&M University for Negroes.

Rep. Ralph Turlington of Gainesville, seat of the University of Florida whose law school was integrated with enrollment of one Negro on court orders last fall, said there is "merit" to the idea of abolishing the Negro law school.

Other Closing Hit

But Turlington said there is no justification for closing the A&M graduate school in teacher education which has a large enrollment and costs the state no more than similar schools at the white universities.

"It might be sound to close the law school, though," he said.

His Senate colleague, Emory Cross of Gainesville, disagreed, as did Sen. Wilson Carraway of Tallahassee, where A&M and Florida State are located.

"Florida knew when it established the graduate schools at A&M that it would be expensive and we were willing to pay the price for segregation," Cross said. "I am still willing to pay it."

Carraway, senate appropriations chairman, said closing the A&M graduate schools would "just be hastening integration at our other universities and I could not go along with that."

Share Views

His views were shared by Sens. Randolph Hodges, Cedar Key, S. D. Clarke, Monticello, and Doyle Carlton, Wauchula. Carlton, usually a Collins supporter, said he would never vote to "encourage" integration.

Rep. W. C. Herrell of Miami Springs, House spending chairman, withheld comment until detailed cost figures are available. But he said he will base his decision on "dollars and cents."

Turlington said no matter what is done about the A&M law school, there probably will always be an average of 3 or 4 Negroes in the law school at Gainesville in the future.

If the Negro law school is closed, he said, it would mean "7 or 8 Negroes at Gainesville instead of 3 or 4, and I can see little difference."

There are 18 students enrolled in the A&M law school now, but Turlington said academic standards are higher at Gainesville and many Negroes could not make the grade.

Handling Of FAMU Funds Hit

TALLAHASSEE, Aug. 10 (AP)—The bookkeeping procedures of Florida A. & M. University again were sharply criticized by State Auditor Bryan Willis today.

But he said the complaints were being dealt with by university officials and improvements could be expected in the next audit report.

The report released today was more than a year behind time, covering the two-year period ended June 30, 1958.

Willis said that during the audit period, financial books for the Negro university showed a lack of coordinated procedural methods and flow of accounting documents, lack of records of and controls over many auxiliary and incidental accounts, lack of perpetual inventory records, lack of subsidiary records, lack of an internal auditing staff and program and a lack of formal policies covering accounting procedures.

Willis said the fact that the post of the university comptroller was not filled during much of the audit period accounted for some of the inadequacies.

The Negro university deviated from accepted practice and encumbered funds on the basis of departmental requisitions rather than purchase orders, contracts and similar items, Willis said. Since the end of the audit period, A. & M. has adopted the standard practices, he said.

Receipts Overestimated

Overestimating of summer school incidental fund receipts resulted in a $19,207 overdraft on the clearing account, Willis said.

Bid procedures improved during the audit period, but cash discounts were lost on many purchases by inadequate voucher processing procedures.

Willis said the university needed a more effective procedure for collecting bad checks. More than $7,000 in bad checks were held by A. & M. on June 30, 1958.

Expenditures per student at the Negro university have risen from $810 a year in 1949 to $1,283, in 1958, the auditor said.

The annual per student cost in the various schools and departments in 1956-57 ranged from $535 in the college of arts and sciences to $3,169 in the college of pharmacy. The per student cost in the law college was $3,617 and in the school of nursing $2,884.

During the 1956-57 fiscal year, the last in which the A. & M. hospital was administered by the university, fees paid by patients mounted to 52½ per cent of the operating costs. The hospital now is administered under direction of a special board of trustees appointed by the governor.

NEGRO LAW SCHOOL CLOSING PLAN OPPOSED BY FLORIDA LAWMAKERS

By CHARLES HESSER

Staff Writer, The Miami News
Special to the Atlanta Journal-Constitution

MIAMI, Fla., Feb. 1—Gov. LeRoy Collins' proposal that Florida consider integrating graduate schools at the State universities as an economy measure is running into legislative opposition.

The governor indicated he thought considerable money could be saved by closing the graduate schools at Florida A&M, the Negro university, in favor of mixing in the white university graduate schools.

Charles Hesser

Some legislators had already quietly discussed striking the appropriation for the A&M Law School from the 1959-61 budget, but Collins was the first official to bring it out in the open.

The governor noted that even in "massive resistance" states like Virginia and Arkansas, where the governors closed public schools rather than integrate them, Negroes and whites are attending graduate university schools together in peace.

The first Negro ever to attend the University of Florida Law School was enrolled last September without incident. A second Negro will be admitted to a graduate school there Feb. 9, the beginnig of the second semester.

Cites Cost of School

Collins said that the A&M Law School has cost the state $370,000 in seven years and has graduated a total of six lawyers.

"That is $60,000 per lawyer," he commented.

There are 18 students erolled in the Negro law school now. The law school has a staff of six professors.

But, the mood of this year's Florida Legislature indicates it won't be too concerned over the per pupil cost at A&M.

Rep. Thomas D. Beasley, speaker of the House, flatly predicted that there is "no chance" the Legislature will consider closing the graduate schools at A&M.

"The people of Florida are willing to pay whatever is necessary to maintain segregation," Beasley declared.

The Week in Florida

Threat by a number of legislators to abandon the free textbook program has brought a warning from Florida school officials that many parents couldn't stand the cost of supplying them—an average of about $16 per student per year. . . . U.S. Rep. William C. Cramer, Florida's lone GOP congressman, has been appointed to the executive committee of the Republican congressional campaign committee. . . . A Miami federal judge has refused to order the admission of a Negro student to an all-white West Palm Beach public school because administrative measures (pupil assignment law provisions) haven't been exhausted. . . . The state may tighten its unemployment insurance law which officials say rewards drifters, snowbirds, and floaters who are not actually a part of the state's work force.

FLORIDA

Hillsborough County (Tampa) has offered to loan the State of Florida $80,000 to keep the new University of South Florida construction program there moving. The state is hard-pressed for construction money at this time.

Sixty Coral Gables (Miami) residents will fly to Colombia next week for a good-will visit as part of a State Department-endorsed "People-to-People" program. Last year, Coral Gables entertained a delegation from Colombia.

A & M Law School: $33,316 a Graduate

TALLAHASSEE — (UPI) — The Board of Control said Monday the law college at Florida A&M University has cost the state an average of $33,316 per graduate, and only five of the 11 graduates are actually eligible to practice.

Figuring costs per student admitted to the Florida Bar, the board came up with an average of $73,296.

The figures were compiled for Gov. LeRoy Collins and the Legislature. Collins said the Legislature should reappraise the graduate schools at the Negro university with an eye to closing those that are abnormally expensive.

These students would enroll, if qualified, in the University of Florida graduate schools. The plan immediately drew fire from several legislators who said they are willing to spend whatever necessary to maintain segregation in all levels of education.

The board said figures are not complete on the graduate school in teacher education, but costs run about the same or lower than at the white universities.

Comparative costs of the law schools at A&M and the university of Florida are way out of line, the figures showed. This is because of fewer students at A&M and the requirement that the school maintain a specified faculty and library regardless of enrollment.

NAACP Could Knock Parade Out Of Sum

Florida A&M University probably won't get any financial help from Tallahassee for its homecoming parade Oct. 31 if the NAACP participates.

Commissioner Joe Cordell said yesterday no contribution should be made if the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People enters a float or participates this year, as it did last year without the knowledge of city officials.

City Commissioners yesterday received a letter from G. W. Conoly, executive secretary of the University alumni association, who requested the contribution.

The commission held up any contribution until City Manager Arvah Hopkins and Police Chief Frank Stoutamire meet with University officials to set a parade route and determine participants.

Cordell said he mentioned the NAACP float and the University homecoming during budget sessions this year and said if the University continues to allow NAACP floats, "then Florida State University should be given an equal opportunity for something else."

College Integration Unchanged in State

Fla. Times-Union
Jacksonville, Fla
1-10 9-13-59

TALLAHASSEE, Sept. 12 (AP)—There won't be any change in the integration situation in the state Universities of Florida this fall, the State Board of Control indicated today.

Executive director Broward Culpepper said he knows of no pending applications for admission of Negroes to Florida State University and that he presumes there will be only two Negroes at the University of Florida.

George Starke, 27, of Sanford, was the university's first Negro student enrolling in the law school.

Esther Langston, 22, of Orlando enrolled today in the university's School of Medicine. She is a Phi Beta Kappa graduate of Fisk University at Knoxville, Tenn.

A Gainesville teacher, Daphne Duval, took night courses at the university's college of education in the spring and summer. Four other Negroes took various summer courses.

The Negro students were admitted to Florida under a federal court order. The order did not affect FSU at Tallahassee.

A change in policy by the State Board of Control would be necessary to allow the admission of Negroes at FSU this fall. The university is still operating under a state law providing for segregated classes in public schools and universities.

Fall classes at both Florida and FSU are scheduled to begin Monday, Sept. 21. Some 8,000 students are expected at FSU this fall and about 13,000 at the University of Florida.

The state is building another university near Tampa and in addition operates an all-Negro university, Florida A. and M., at Tallahassee.

Howard U. Is Tops In Enrollment

NEW YORK — A total enrollment of 61,680 students in 66 Negro institutions is reported in the August-September issue of The Crisis magazine, official NAACP organ.

In an article "The American Negro in College, 1958-1959" The Crisis presents its 48th consecutive annual educational survey findings. It is a partial picture since "mixed schools" no longer keep official records of students by race.

SOME 56,831 of the total are undergraduates while 2,928 are attending graduate schools. Of those graduating, 6,725 received various bachelor's degrees and 487 received various master's degrees. Only seven Ph.D.'s and one Ed.D. were reported to The Crisis, which had to rely upon volunteer information from registrars and individuals.

Tuskegee graduated 15 D.V.M.'s (Doctor of Veterinary Medicine); Howard, 75 M.D.'s, 42 D.D.S.'s and three Ph.D.'s in chemistry. Meharry graduated 67 M.D.'s; also five with diplomas in dental hygiene and five with certificates in medical technology.

HOWARD HAS the highest enrollment, with 5,959 students; Southern university is second with 4,384; Tuskegee is third with 3,945, and Florida A and M. is fourth with 3,133.

Between The Lines —

Negro Colleges Fare Poorly On Grants

By Dean Gordon B. Hancock

Through the courtesy of the Associated Negro Press, I have just received a copy of the annual report of the Ford foundation for 1958. This foundation is the largest of the current philanthropic foundations.

In perusing the report we noted, to our great dismay, that among the educational institutions receiving benefactions, the Negro colleges fared poorly. The larger universities with the larger endowments received the larger amounts and the smaller poorer Negro institutions received but mere crumbs that fell from philanthropy's heavily-laden feasting table.

Of all the Negro colleges, only Dillard, Hampton, Howard and Morgan State were among the many schools in this country blessed with grants from the foundation. And what these Negro colleges received was a mere pittance as compared with the millions and millions that were granted for the cause of education.

On the list of the poorest colleges, among which are to be found the Negro college, we find mention of only four. This is, in many ways, a great tragedy! The hard-pressed Negro colleges are thus shut out from the philanthropic feast and must be content with the crumbs or nothing at all. It seems that the heavily endowed colleges are destined to be more heavily endowed, while the poorly endowed and the unendowed Negro colleges are destined to be left out in the cold.

Some way must be found to interest our great foundations in the tremendous work the poor Negro college is doing. In the annals of education of this nation, it must go down as a modern miracle how Negroes trained in our poorly endowed Negro schools can take and pass the same examinations as students of Harvard and Yale and Chicago. Some way must be found to improve the Negro's status at the bar of American philanthropy. The financing of education of Negroes will become more and more expensive and, if the foundations are concentrating only on these institutions that are already highly favored, instead of these existing on a hand to mouth basis, the outlook for Negro education is anything but reseate.

One answer to this critical situation lies within the Negro colleges themselves. Our struggling colleges are becoming, more and more, manned by faculties with high degrees. But high degrees alone will not satisfy the requirements of the philanthropic foundations, who are less and less inclined to finance the old hackneyed projects, and more and more inclined to finance new projects.

The time is at hand when the Negro scholar must add imagination to his scholarship and think up new and interesting study projects such as will attract the heads of foundations. Logical argument in this field is strictly limited. The Negro scholar must come up with something new or the poorly endowed and the unendowed Negro colleges will come up for great financial tribulations.

In the early 1920's, a very wealthy woman, reputedly worth $50 million, visited Virginia Union. The President was, of course, trying to impress her. He took her to the Theological department and to the Department of the arts and sciences. But our wealthy visitor was not impressed.

He finally decided to bring her to my class in race relation, in which she sat throughout a session. When the session was ended, she took me aside and said "I like what is going on in your class in race relations and I am wondering if you could organize a school of this nature. Make up a curriculum of the studies you would offer and submit it to me".

Within a matter of days, I had sketched a curriculum with a blueprint of the school and with a check for $10,000 and advised that it be used in laying the foundation and when that was spent, to come back for more money.

In a short time, we had our Torrance School of Race relatins well underway. Unfortunately, the financial agent who contacted the wealthy woman was dismissed from the college, and somehow he blocked further grants. But our projected race relation institutes were taken up by the late Dr. Charles Johnson in the Swarthmore institutes and more recenlty the Fisk University institute.

The point here being made is that Negro scholars must think up new and interesting projects such as will attract philanthropy. It can be done!

Through here, we need imagination as well as scholarship. Crumbs will not suffice.

Peak Enrollment Looms For U.S. Schools And Colleges

WASHINGTON (AP)—A record 46,480,000 students will enroll in U.S. schools and colleges during the 1959-60 school year, and even higher enrollments are still to come, the Office of Education reported Saturday.

An increase of 1,750,000 in school enrollment, to 42,700,000 from 40,950,000 in 1958-59, will mean an even worse teacher shortage than last year.

The deficit of qualified teachers for the coming year is estimated at 185,000, compared with a shortage of 182,000 in 1958-59.

Lawrence Derthick, commissioner of education, said 1959-60 will be the 15th consecutive year in which enrollment has increased. He added this trend, with attendant problems such as the teacher shortage, is likely to continue for many years.

Earlier this month the office made public estimates that there will be a shortage of at least 130,000 public school classrooms when the schools open.

Derthick cited statistics estimating the school-age population, made up of children aged 5 through 17, at 43,347,000 in 1959 for the continental United States, excluding Alaska, Hawaii, and at 48,815,000 by 1963.

He did not estimate anticipated enrollment in schools and colleges four years from now, but a spokesman said it is 52,769,000 for the 1963-64 school year.

There has been a steady increase in the proportion of children aged 14 through 17 who attend schools, accounting for some of the enrollment increase. Last October 89.2 per cent of the boys and girls in that age group were in schools and colleges. Ten years ago 81.8 per cent were enrolled.

The 1959-60 enrollment figure of 46,480,000 is 1,940,000 higher than last year's 44,540,000. By comparison, the 1929-30 total was 29,653,000; in 1939-40 it was 29,751,000; and in 1949-50 it was 21,319,000.

Derthick estimated that 1,563,000 teachers will be needed in public and nonpublic schools during the coming year, with only 1,368,000 qualified teachers available.

A part of the shortage will be met by former instructors returning to service, Derthick said in a statement, but the number cannot be determined.

One factor intensifying the scarcity of teachers is a turnover rate of 10. per cent. Derthick said recent studies indicate that is about the proportion of teachers who leave the profession.

GIBBS JUNIOR COLLEGE

Is Florida Using Gibbs College To Defy U. S.?

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla.—Is the new $300,000 Gibbs Junior College for Negroes here, the object of a $1,000,000 expansion program as a "pilot project for similar junior colleges" throughout Florida merely as an attempt of state officials to avoid the U. S. Supreme Court's order to integrate?

Many residents of Florida—white and Negro, say that it is. They contend that the idea of a Negro junior college was only proposed in May, 1957, three years after the U. S. Supreme Court decision, after a poll taken of existing public "white" junior colleges showed its students ready and willing to study with their darker brothers.

THEY CHARGE John W. Rembert, whom they say now "naturally" is the preisdent, made the proposal. Within four months, in September, 1957, they claim the $300,000 new junior college was in operation. They say that the white junior college is valued at several millions.

Also a bone of contention is the recent visit of the Courier's assistant publisher and former managing editor, W. G. Nunn Sr., to Gibbs Junior College and what they term was an "endorsement" of the Florida Negro junior college program.

"Is this a typical example of the progressive thinking of the Courier staff?" says one of the letter-writers.

"Have you now decided that segregated schools established in defiance of the Supreme Court ruling are okay?" she further asks.

Expansion Program Speeds Up

Gibbs Gets $500,000 to Build; Prexy Seeks 19 New Teachers!

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. — John William Rembert, the architect for Florida's accelerated junior college program, will be a busy man this spring and summer.

First . . . a grant of $500,000 has been given Gibbs Junior College for a terrific expansion program, and there is reason to believe that this amount will be augmented by another $500,000 during the present biennium.

Second . . . when the building program starts in June, President Rembert will start a nationwide search for 19 new teachers for this modern junior college.

THE SCHOOL, at present, is staffed by 36 teachers and school enrollment numbers 530. Fall plans call for enrollment of more than 700 freshmen and sophomores during the 1959-60 school year.

Gibbs . . . fastest growing of all the 16 junior colleges in the state, and the fourth largest . . . will add two new buildings in the present phase of its expansion. One will house crafts, while the other will be a two-area building, housing the college library and a modern student service center.

In reporting the expansion program upon his return from a two-week trip to California, where he studied the junior-college program in that state, President Rembert said:

- "Gibbs is going all out to obtain the finest teaching staff available. All teachers must hold at least a master's degree. Training and previous experience will be determining factors.
- "Salaries will range from $4,000 to $6,200 annually, with salary increments. All basic subjects, including English, mathematics, science, social studies, business administration and physical education (both male and female) will be taught.
- "I also want to make it clear that teaching will cover both college and secondary levels. I am anxious to obtain application from every section of the nation. Those wishing further information can contact me direct at Gibbs Junior College, St. Petersburg, Fla."

Gibbs Junior College is continuing to grow. True, there is still some criticism, but the legion followers are growing apace Townspeople are proud of the record of achievement.

Surrounding counties are taking full advantage of its facilities. It's serving a vital need. Those people who are being helped are making finer and more alert citizens.

And John William Rembert pointing the way!

Human Relations Council's Opinion

Economic Decline Seen In Closing Of Schools

14d(1) 08

An opinion that the closing of schools in the state to avoid desegregation of schools would bring on an economic decline in the short run and economic disaster in the long run evolved from a Thursday meeting that brought together representative Negro and white citizens to discuss the Georgia school crisis, including court decisions, community action and other aspects of the current conflict.

The Rev. Edward Cahill, chairman of the sponsoring Greater Atlanta Council on Human Relations, said the members of the "Desegregation and School" Workshop were in agreement regarding the economic set-back that the closing of public schools would cause to the whole state.

Cahill said it was agreed that the short run effect of school closing would be very painful, but that the long-run effect would be even more disastrous to the economy of Georgia.

The all-day workshop was split into two sections, with the morning session featuring a symposium on desegregation and the public schools with "The Current Scene" and "What Desegregation Means to the Negro" as program topics.

The audience of 150 persons heard Paul Anthony, administrative assistant, Southern Regional Council, hail the current scene as constantly changing in favor of good sense.

Anthony reportedly said that the extremist pro-segregationist is disappearing as a major swaying voice upon the actions of his fellow citizens.

He further declared that sound, good reasoning in the face of the apparent tragedy of rash action is slowly replacing the die-hard who has to have everything the old way.

At the afternoon session, it was T. M. Alexander and Jim Montgomery, business editor of the Atlanta Constitution, who predicted a bad economic consequence in case of a mass school closure.

The legal aspects of school desegregation were enumerated by Donald Hollowell, attorney for the Atlanta Branch NAACP and principal figure in the recently concluded successful desegregation trials in federal court, and C. Lanier Randall, attorney for HOPE (Help Our Public Education), an organization dedicated to public education in Georgia no matter what occurs in courts.

Both men listed the cases now pending in courts that seek to break through the racial barriers, with special emphasis upon the pending Atlanta public school desegregation suit.

Then Dr. Edward Weaver, of Atlanta University, and Harry Boyte, executive secretary of HOPE, lead a discussion on community education that involved the ways and means of conveying to the general public the total facts involved in desegregation of schools.

Rev. Cahill presided over the morning general session, Rabbi Jacob Rothschild gave the invocation and Father James Boyce also participated in the Thursday activities.

Secret Weapons Hinted For State's School Fight

14d(1) 08

Atlanta Constitution

BY GENE ASHTON

Lt. Gov. Byrd Monday indicated the administration has some anti-integration secret weapons for keeping schools open.

Atlanta Sa 4-21-55

Byrd said he was "not at liberty to reveal them" but that there are "a number of ways" to keep public schools over the state from being closed.

If present school segregation laws are battered down by federal court rulings, he said, there are other legislative alternatives which will be thrown up.

Gov. Vandiver has expressed his willingness to keep calling the General Assembly back into special session to pass new segregation laws as soon as old ones are tossed out by the courts, he pointed out.

Byrd said "some of the best minds in the state" are at work on the problem.

He also said he thinks the state's position on the school segregation question is stronger now than it ever has been. He says he sees some signs that the federal government is not "being as aggressive as it was."

The lieutenant governor would not comment on the possibility of a 1962 gubernatorial battle between himself and former Gov. Arnall.

Arnall has announced he will run if schools are closed. He says he will run on a platform of keeping public schools open at all costs.

Byrd said the former governor's stand "should endear him to a national order" apparently referring to the NAACP.

But he said he would not speculate about the 1962 race, even "as to the certainty of Gov. Arnall's being a candidate."

He said it is too early to discuss specific issues or personalities.

Pulse of the Public

Ellis Arnall Says He's Ready and Willing To Fight for School System Preservation

Atlanta—I have read with interest the splendid editorial in The Atlanta Constitution, April 10, 1959, which poses the question, "Will the State Hear More From Ex-Gov. Arnall?"

The answer is: "Emphatically yes!"

My election as governor was due solely to the fervent desire of the people of Georgia to save their public schools and the University System of Georgia from destruction at the hands of the politicians.

I am ready and willing to fight for the preservation of Georgia's public school system whatever the cost may be. Our children must be provided the right to an education.

This is the platform: (1) For public schools; (2) for popular vote; (3) for honesty and economy in government.

I am (1) Against closed public schools; (2) against the unfair county unit system; and (3) against stealing the taxpayers' money.

ELLIS ARNALL.

Atlanta Women Granted Private School Charter

A group of Atlanta women were granted by a Superior Court judge their request to set up a private, non-profit corporation under the name of "The Atlanta Community School, Inc." it was revealed today.

The women, represented by attorney Richard L. Hollowell, were granted the requested charter for a corporation whose stated purpose is to "educate children."

The women listed on the charter petition included Mrs. Mary M. Yates, 122 Branan St., N.W.; Mrs. Maggie G. Nash, 982 Simpson St., N.W., Mrs. Millie D. Jordan, 512 Angier Ave., N.E.; Mrs. Ollivette S. Allison, 2857 Baker Ridge Rd., N.W., and Mrs. Hazel R. Cannon, 966 Washington Pl., S.W.

Members of the newly-recognized corporative group were contacted Friday for a statement regarding the reason for their charter for the proposed school and their immediate plans, however, "no comment" was forthcoming "at the present time."

The proposed "Atlanta Community School, Inc.", as provided in the charter, will operate as an non-sectarian, non-denominational, private elementary and secondary school.

According to the wording of the charter, it was indicated by the petitioners that the bulk of the support for the proposed private institutions will be acquired through grants and gifts.)

The school corporation will be controlled, governed and managed by a board of directors consisting of not less than 15 members and not more than 30, and the original five petitioners (incorporators) will be included among the first members of the board of directors.

The charter, signed and approved by Superior Court Judge Claude D. Shaw, allows the corporation a 35 year existence, but with the privilege of renewal at the end of that period.

The main office of the school corporation, as stipulated in the charter, will be in Fulton County, and the corporation will have the privilege of establishing branch offices elsewhere, both within and without the state of Georgia.

The educational ideals of the corporation, as listed by the charter, includes: 1. the development of a devotion to democracy as a way of life rather than just a form of government; 2. the provision of an atmosphere in which each individual might develop to the optimum of his potentialities; 3. the development of skills necessary to the individual coping successfully with his environment and the society in which he finds himself; 4. the development of a moral and spiritual code of values to serve as a framework of reference to the individual when making decisions.

Judge Shaw signed the application for a charter after consideration and ordered that the charter be granted to the five women applicants. The incorporators promised a full, detailed explanation of their school plans at a later date.

OUT ON A LIMB when she converses in English, here Sibylle Zapp, (left), has lapsed into German with Michael Moses and one of her Hampton friends, William Thomas. William said the walk with the two girls was the first chance he's had to put his classroom language study to "practical" use. The setting is a corner of the "seaside campus" which borders on a salt water inlet, shown in the background.

First-Hand Knowledge Of U. S.

German Girl At Hampton Sheds Some Conceptions

Sat. 8-8-59 p. 13

HAMPTON, Va. — American jazz, the pros and cons of U. S. economic leadership of the world, and — of all things — politics are much discussed topics among today's European teen-agers.

Thanks to a variety of sources, members of the European younger set have ideas on Americans which range from alarmingly accurate insights to downright distortions, the product of propaganda writers' images.

SIBYLLE ZAPP, 18, of Kaisefslautern, Germany, is one European who is ridding herself of certain misconceptions of America as well as strengthening her beliefs via a six month residence at a home in Southern Virginia. This visit is a phase of a private teen-ager "exchange program."

Phase one began when Michael Moses, daughter of the chairman of the department of architecture at Hampton institute, set sail for Kaiserslautern last September on a person-to-person student exchange arranged by mutual friends.

A NINE-MONTH sojourn for Michael in the home of a professor's family was to be reciprocated when Sibylle came to live with Prof. and Mrs. William Moses on the Hampton institute campus.

Michael had some preconceived ideas about life in Germany, but they weren't as definite as those of her counterpart. Although she lacked knowledge of German, she soon became an integral part of the family the Zapp family, which included Mr. and Mrs. Otto Zapp, Sibylle and her 16-year-old brother, Bobo.

DURING HER nine months in Germany, Michael was amazed to find that high school seniors there carry 15 subjects, as contrasted with five or six in the U. S. She also noted that parents accompany teen-agers to dances.

Michael took many conducted tours and got at least a bird's-eye view of the world fair in Brussels, and peeked in on Berlin, Spain, Southern France, Switzerland, Holland, Austria and Southern Germany.

SIBYLLE'S impression of segregation has been confirmed. There is none at Hampton institute, but it is evident as soon as one steps off the campus. This troubles her.

She also is concerned by the apparent lack of interest in politics by young Americans. Her family fled from East Germany during the Russian occupation, and she knows the role politics played in shaping lives.

SOME PLEASANT surprises were in store for Sibylle namely, ice cream, watermelons, corn-on-the-cob — and the immensity and wonder of New York City.

With six more months left before she returns home, Sibylle says she thinks she will have a more accurate insight on what the teen-ager in America is doing, thinking and believing.

Segregation, Lack Of Interest In Politics Worry Visitor

Sibylle's impression of segregation is confirmed.

Sibylle Zapp, 16, of Kaiserlautern, Germany, is one European who is ridding herself of certain misconceptions of America as well as strengthening her beliefs via a six-month residence at a home in Southern Virginia. This visit is phase two of a unique private teen-ager "exchange program."

Phase one began when Michael Moses, daughter of the chairman of the department of architecture at Hampton Institute, set sail for Kaiserslautern last September on a person-to-person student exchange arranged by mutual friends.

A nine month sojourn for Michael in the home of a professor's family was to be reciprocated when Sibylle came to live with Prof. and Mrs. William Moses on the Hampton Institute campus in Hampton, Va.

EYES OPENED

Michael also had some preconceived ideas of what life in Germany would be like although they were not as well defined as those of her counterpart. Her lack of knowledge of the German language was soon overcome and she became an integral part of the Zapp family consisting of Mr. and Mrs. Otto Zapp, Sibylle and her 16 year old brother, Bobo.

Her nine months' stay in Germany opened Michael's eyes to a number of facts of which she was unaware before going abroad. A senion in high school next year, Michael was amazed at the intensity and depth of their educational program—15 subjects a year as compared to her five or six.

The policy of parents accompanying their daughters to dances made Michael realize the sharp contrast between the freedom allowed American young people and those in Germany.

Not content with seeing a small part of Germany, Michael availed herself during school vacations of many conducted tours throughout Europe. Thus, she gained at least a bird's eye view of the Brussells World Fair, Rome, Berlin, Spain, Southern France, Switzerland, Holland, Austria and Southern Germany.

Although she has been in this country for little over a month, William said his meeting with the "fraulein" was his first chance to put his classroom language study to "practical use."

Hampton To Specialize In Educating Talented Students

Nashville Globe Nashville, Tenn. 11-27-59 p 3

Hampton, Va Nov 13—Realizing the needs of the academically talented high school students in this area, Hampton Institute initiated an Advanced Placement program last year under the direcion of Dr William H Robinson, professor of education and Director of the Division of Teacher Education.

Because of its success, the Advanced Placement program is again in effect this year with the enthusiastic cooperation of the participating high schools and teachers.

Educators have been concerned about the problems presented by the gifted child since World War II when it became apparent that the education of our enemies has not been entirely retarded.

According to S A Kendrick, vice president, examinations and research, College Entrance Examination Board, in a paper presented at the thirteenth National Conference on Higher Education, there seem to have been three approaches to programs for the gifted. One is an "enriched" curriculum which keeps the child in that educational unit appropriate for his chronological age but seeks to give him more to do than is provided or required of the usual student.

A second approach has been unadorned acceleration in which the student who is obviously superior simply moves into the next highest grade at an earlier date than is usual. This has included moving students from the junior year of high school straight into the freshman year of college.

A third approach provides that the student be kept with his age group but that instruction at a higher level in the regular school-college sequence be provided for him.

It is the third approach labeled as the Advancement Placement Program whicr Dr Robinson instituted last year in Carver and Huntington High schools in Newport News, Va., and Phenix High School in Hampton, Va.

This plan called for advanced classes in English and Mathematics for pre-tested students who weer judged to be intellectually superior and who were in their last year in high school.

The college level freshmen courses were taught by the regular high school teachers in small classes ranging from between 10 and 15 tudents.

At a luncheon conference held recently on the college campus reports from principals and participating teachers from the three high schools show that 50 of the 60 high school students enrolled in the advanced classes have gone on to college with the major portion of them receiving college credit for the courses taken druing their senior year in high school.

The college credit received is often advantageous to the student, according to Dr Robinson, in that it will allow the exceptional student to acually gain time in the educational process. It also releases a part of the student's program for deeper specialization to his particular field or for course which he would otherwise not have time to fit into his schedule.

Twenty-two students enrolled in last year's accelerated courses are attending Hampton Institute this year, according to Dr Robinson. Other colleges where students are attending are Howard, Bradley, Lincoln and Union Universitties; Virginia State, Shaw, Blackburn, West Virginia State, and Cortez-Peters Institute.

In a preliminary report, Dr Robinson states that "it is difficult not to be encouraged by the results reported thus far." He also said that "the teachers and principals have great faith in the potentialities of te program. Both the students and teachers directly involved and those in the paricipating schools generally have reportedly raised their academic sights."

The program is again being carried out this year in the three original high scools.

Board decides to study resignation offer of president

By CHESTER M. HAMPTON
AFRO Staff Correspondent

HAMPTON, Va.— "We want Moron . . . We want Moron!"

The voices 726 students at Hampton Institute blended in this chant on Thursday night, the eve of the day of decision when the Board of Trustees would decide whether to accept the offered resignation of President Alonzo G. Moron.

On Friday, after wrestling with the weighty problem all morning and afternoon, the board announced that the matter would be studied by a committee. Headed by Dr. Frank P. Graham, former president of the University of North Carolina, the committee will report this summer.

THE UNIFIED but orderly demonstration of student loyalty on Thursday night may have influenced the board to postpone the matter. The feeling was that an adverse decision might precipitate a student demonstration more serious than that already shown.

Even while the trustees deliberated in the Trustee Room of the Administration Building, the students clasped hands around Ogden Circle, a scant 75 yards away.

The trustees could plainly hear them as they sang the Alma Mater, gave three cheers for the president and briefly chanted "We want Moron."

An air of tension hung over the campus but where faculty members were tight - lipped, students expressed themselves freely. They said that the first clear picture they got of the conflict came when they gathered in front of the president's house Thursday night and he addressed them. He said:

"I HAVE worked hard to make this a college of which we could all be proud. People today know about Hampton Institute as a college, a college in every sense of the word.

"I feel that Hampton Institute has the best chance to survive and progress of any institution that was originally founded for a special purpose.

"We can even survive integration."

In a more personal vein, he confined: "These last ten years have not been easy. They have taken a great deal of concentration and hard work.

"I KNOW that I have made enemies here and have been hard to get along with at times. I have made enemies because I have been in a hurry to improve and have been impatient to achieve progress for the college.

"I did not (offer to) resign because I am tired; but because I thought we were not making progress fast enough. I want to see better classrooms and better faculty."

At this point, the president was interrupted for the first time by the cheers of students endorsing his emphasis on progress. Tears streamed down the cheeks of some of the coeds as the president spoke, his handsome face reflecting the tension of the past few weeks.

"And all that," the president continued as the cheers subsided, "takes money. If I can't see that coming, then I am going to resign.

FOR THE FIRST time, the basic issue came out into the open. When the president first offered his resignation on March 30, there was speculation over the reason.

Most insiders concluded that the basis of friction was the president's emphasis on making Hampton a first - class college instead of an obsolete trades school.

Supporters of the president lauded him for his building up the scholastic curriculum and standards while his detractors criticised him for not emphasizing the trades program.

To these critics, the president reportedly replied that money was not being allotted by the board for modern technical equipment and that the number of trades students had greatly diminished.

WITH THE PRESIDENT'S statement "If I can't see that (necessary funds) coming, then I'm going to resign," the board found itself in a "put up or shut up" situation.

The board's position on the conflict has never been revealed publicly. Therefore, accepting the president's resignation would indicate to his supporters that the board does not accept his program of progress for the college.

Pointing up the president's position was the fact that on Friday, fewer than 50 high school students had shown up for the First Annual Career Conference in Technology.

The conference did not "draw" despite the fact that high school technical students had a chance to win Hampton scholarships through participation in competitions in such trades as brick - laying and carpentry.

When the conference opened the previous day, Kirtley F. Mather of Harvard said in his keynote speech:

"One of the dangers of our present educational practice is the tendency to graduate well-trained technicians who are really illiterate human beings."

ARTHUR HOWE JR., chairman of the board of trustees, was named as one of the arch-foes of the president's program. Mr. Howe, the son of a former Hampton president, is currently director of admissions at Yale University.

Early in the day, Mr. Howe sent a message that he would speak to newsmen concerning the controversy. Later, he declined to speak and curtly refused to give even the names of the members of the special committee to study the resignation offer.

The biggest question at the end of the day was: "Who stands to benefit most should the board refuse to retain the president and, indirectly, his program for the college?" No one gave the answer.

Grants Advance Summer Enrollment For Hampton

HAMPTON, Va. — Summer enrollment at Hampton institute stood at 506 students last week, topping a 10-year mark, according to Dr. Hugh M. Gloster, director of the college's 1959 summer session.

And the students, all ages, haven't stopped coming yet, registration records indicate more than 100 others are expected to make a separate registration under the seventh annual six-week pre-college program for high school graduates who plan to enter college next fall.

OF THE 506 students, 251 are undergraduates, 182 are signed up to do graduate work, and 73 are high school teachers who have enrolled in an eight-week institute sponsored by the National Science foundation with a $75,000 grant.

The science grant has permitted stipends ranging from $600 to $1,000 to go to the 73 high school teachers who will study chemistry, physics and mathematics. Forty of the pre-college students have been given scholarships under a Danforth foundation grant.

THE DANFORTH $25,000 grant also has made it possible for a similar number of scholarships to be granted during each of the next two summer programs at Hampton institute.

The two grants are aiding 113 summer students.

PLEDGE OF CONFIDENCE: Miss Shirley Nelson presents Dr. Alonzo G. Moron with a "pledge of confidence" signed by the majority of the more than 1,100 students enrolled at Hampton Institute. The presentation came at the climax of a calm but moving demonstration Thursday night when 700 students chanted "We want Moron!" in front of the president's mansion. On the following day, the board of trustees referred the president's offer to resign to a committee without taking any other action. Miss Nelson, a senior sociology major, is vice president of the student council.

MISS. PROF. RHODES SCHOLAR GETS HAMPTON INSTITUTE POST

Hampton, Va., Sept. 25. — A Rhodes scholar, Haven P. Perkins, Long Beach, Miss., has been appointed substitute associate professor of social science at Hampton Institute for the coming academic year.

Three other appointments to the faculty, Mrs. Clara H. Peterson, Arlington, Va., Mohammed K. Alam, Kerachi, Pakistan, and James E. Brooks, Newport News, Va. have also been announced by Dr. William H. Martin, acting president of the college.

Perkins, who received the B.A. degree from Williams College was appointed a Rhodes Scholar in 1923 and attended Oxford University where he received the M.A. in 1926. A former assistant and instructor at Harvard University for two years, he later served as instructor at General Theological Semihary in New York City from 1928 to 1934.

For the past 15 years he has worked as an organizer for the United Electrical Workers in St. Louis and Chicago. This past summer he served as a lecturer at Roosevelt University in Chicago.

Mrs. Peterson, who has been appointed assistant professor of education, received the B.S. degree from Virginia State College in 1937 and the M.A. from New York University in 1946. She has done other study at Howard, Harvard, Denver and Michigan State Universities and the University of Virginia.

A teacher in Rosenwald High School, Beverlyville, Va., from 1931-38, she then went to Bruton Heights High school, Williamsburg, Va., where she taught from 1938-1942. Following three years as assistant statistician with the department of agriculture in Washington, D. C., she was principal of the Lyles Crouch School in Alexandria for five years and principal of the Charles Houston school also in Alexandria from 1950-59.

She is a member of the Virginia State Teachers Association, the National Education Association, and the Association for Childhood Education International.

Appointed assistant professor of physics, Mr. Alam, received the B.S. from Benares Hindu University in 1951 and the M.S. from the University of Sind, Pakistan, in 1957.

In 1957 he was appointed a research fellow at the High Altitude Observatory in Boulder, Colo., and received the M.S. degree from the University of Colorado in 1959. He was a teaching assistant in physics at the Government College, Hyderabad, Pakistan from 1955 to 1957.

James E. Brooks, 27 S. Brickyard R., Newport News, Va., a 1959 graduate of Hampton Institute, has been appointed substitute instructor in electronics.

HAMPTON INSTITUTE

Resignation Of Moron Before Hampton Board

HAMPTON — The board of trustees of Hampton Institute will make a decision at its next meeting on April 24 on the recent resignation bid of Dr. Alonzo G. Moron, president of the institution.

Dr. Moron is the first member of his race to be elected president of Hampton Institute. He will remain head of the 93-year-old institution until the board acts on his letter of resignation. The board will also have the responsibility of announcing the issues involved in Dr. Moron's resignation.

AN ALUMNUS of Hampton Institute, Dr. Moron was inaugurated president in 1949. He came to Hampton in 1946 as consultant in business management. He was general business manager in 1947-48 from which position he was elected to the presidency. He is a native of the Virgin Islands.

Arthur Howe Jr., director of admissions at Yale University, is chairman of Hampton's board of trustees. He is a descendant of General Samuel Chapman Armstrong who founded Hampton Institute in 1868.

DR. ALONZO G. MORON
Offers Resignation

Forced to Wed Hampton Man Sues Moron For $50,000

HAMPTON, Va. — Already under fire with reference to his post, as president of the institution, Dr. Alonzo Moron was named defendant in a $50,000 suit here, last week; the action being brought by Joseph Louis Pugh, a former student who is now an army private.

Pvt. Pugh asserts that Dr. Moron has denied him a degree, and that by such action he has personally "been ruined for life."

He claims Dr. Moron injected himself into a personal matter, between himself and a young woman student, and threatened Pugh by declaring that "if he did not marry tthe girl, your degree would be withheld."

Pvt. Pugh claims he married the co-ed under duress and pressure from Dr. Moron, and that he subsequently filed suit for annulment of the marriage. Upon notifying Dr. Moron of the action, the former student says the withholding action was announced.

This his attorney holds to be "illegal, improper, and unlawful."

Say Moron Quit Hampton Post as Prexy

WASHINGTON — It has been reliably reported that Dr. Alonzo G. Moron has resigned his post as president of Hampton Institute.

Although no official announcement of Dr. Moron's resignation had been made as The Courier went to press, the reports persisted, given added impetus by stories that Dr. Moron and his wife were going to take up residence in the Virgin Islands.

Dr. Moron had recently returned to the United States from a State Department - sponsored tour of the Far East.

He had also been present in Detroit at a meeting of presidents of various Negro colleges in connection with this year's campaign of the United Negro College Fund.

Dr. Moron became president of Hampton Institute after serving the school briefly in the capacity of business manager.

The soldier complained that such action would cause him to suffer for the remainder of his life.

Table Hampton Prexy's Offer Of Resignation

HAMPTON, Va. — Dr. Alonzo G. Moron, who turned in his resignation recently as president of Hampton Institute, was still on the job this week after a special seven member committee was named to study the question and report back to the board of trustees.

Dr. Frank Graham, former president of the University of North Carolina, was elected chairman of the board committee, which is scheduled to make a report this summer.

Arthur J. Howell, jr., chairman of the 30-member board, said the "offered resignation" of Dr. Moron was tabled after the trustees spent six hours in executive session here last Friday.

Two student demonstrations on Thursday and Friday were conducted to give the 50-year-old educator a vote of confidence.

The president told a group of 500 students last Thursday that he wanted to see better classrooms and better faculty members at Hampton.

Again on Friday, some 250 students demonstrated for Moron within hearing distance and while the board was in executive session.

Moron's offer to resign is said to have grown out of a long feud between the president and the alumni. Members of the alumni have accused Moron of stressing an academic curriculum at Hampton and de-emphasizing the trade courses.

Virgin Islands born, Moron was named to head the 91-year-old institution 10 years ago.

Howe who is director of admissions at Yale University, explained that the decision was reached following the board's refusal to accept the president's resignation, tendered March 31.

Howe said that Dr. William H. Martin, dean of faculty at Hampton, has been appointed acting president, effective July 1, and "steps" are being taken to establish a committee for the naming of a permanent replacement for Dr. Moron."

"In regretfully acceding to the President's request," Howe stated, "the board obtained his consent to administer Hampton's Virgin Island program this summer and to prepare, during the coming year, a report for the trustees on the Institute's structure and future development."

The five-year-old Virgin Islands program, devoted to improving the professional abilities of public school teachers in the islands, was underwritten during its first three years by a Ford Foundation grant and has been underwritten since by the Virgin Islands government.

Dr. Moron's resignation offer was considered in a special board meeting Thursday in New York's Hotel Baltimore, called to hear a report from a board committee which had been appointed earlier to investigate the issues behind the president's action.

In their regular meeting April 24, at the campus which is situated on Virginia's lower peninsula the board tabbed further consideration of the matter following a day-long executive session.

Dr. Moron, 50 has been president of Hampton Institute since 1949 following a year's service as business manager of the college. He is an alumnus of Brown University and earned the masters degree from the University of Pittsburgh. He was awarded the degree bachelor of laws from Howard University

Hampton Prexy "Relieved" Of Duties, Effective Today

HAMPTON, Va.—Board of trustees chairman of Hampton Institute, Arthur Howe, Jr. announced Thursday night that Dr. Alonzo G. Moron, eighth president of the 91-year old Virginia college has been relieved of his duties, 'at his own insistence," effective June 30.

Accept Resignation Of Hampton President

NEW YORK — During a special board meeting in the Hotel Biltmore here the Board of Trustees of Hampton Institute accepted the resignation of President Alonzo G. Moron and named William Martin, faculty dean, as acting president.

Announcement of the action was made by Arthur Howe, jr., chairman of the Board of Trustees, who also stated that steps are being taken to set up a committee for the naming of a permanent replacement for Dr. Moron.

He added that the board regretted accepting the resignation and was successful in getting Dr. Moron to agree to administer Hampton's Virgin Island program this summer and to prepare a report on the Institute's structure and future development for the trustees.

Dr. Moron's resignation became effective June 30. He was the eighth president of the 91-year-old Virginia institution and a spokesman for the trustees said his resignation was accepted at his own insistence.

Howe explained that the board had refused to accept the president's resignation, tendered Mar. 31.

At a meeting April 24, the board tabled the matter after a day-long executive session and appointed a board committee to investigate the issues behind the president's action.

The committee met with faculty, staff, student body and alumni representatives in an effort to determine the difficulty. The unit also worked closely with Dr. Moron and it is said that during these meetings Dr. Moron insisted upon his resignation being accepted.

Neither Howe, board chairman, on the committee, would reveal the reason that Dr. Moron insisted upon quitting.

However, some factors behind his decision were revealed in April on the campus when some 726 students staged a demonstration and urged him to stay.

I did not offer to resign because I am tired; but because I thought we were not making progress fast enough. I want to see better classrooms and better faculty. And all that takes money.

"If I can't see that coming, then I am going to resign."

It has been said that the basic difference between the institute prexy and the board was whether Hampton should remain a trade school or should develop into a bona fide college or modern technical school.

The alumni, in May, by a narrow vote, asked the board to accept Dr. Moron's resignation.

Dr. Moron says he has no immediate plans for a job other than the Hampton summer program in Virgin Islands which gets under way July 9. Mrs. Moron already has returned to the islands.

Hampton women in three-day session

HAMPTON, Va. — In a weekend of festivities accented by sunny May weather, the Women's Senate of Hampton Institute celebrated its 24th annual Women's Week, May 8, 9, 10, with the theme "Women Leadership — A Look Ahead."

More than 200 mothers attended the yearly observance of Women's Week which began with a dormitory song fest Friday evening, May 8 on the lawns of Davidson and Kelsey Halls.

The outdoor sing presented in competition the individual songs of the four women dormitories on the college campus with the freshmen dormitory, Virginia- Cleveland Hall, declared the winner. Friday's activities were terminated by an Aquatic Revue in the Charles H. Williams Gymnasium.

THE REVUE featured acts by the women of the physical education department under the direction of Miss Letitia Lewis, freshman, Newport News, Va. and Miss Geraldine Shackleford, instructor in the physical education department.

Presented on the green of the Holly Tree Inn lawn, the festivities Saturday afternoon featured the crowning of the queens. Selected in a campus-wide election by the women of the college, the queens were crowned by Mrs. Alonzo G. Moron, the first lady of the college. Reigning as May Queen was Miss Delores Bryant, a senior from Ft. Valley, Ga.

CROWNED AS Miss Fine Arts was Miss Jean RoAne, a senior from Tappahannock, Va. and Miss Margie Yarbrough, a senior from Houston, Texas, as Miss Physical Education.

RESIGNATION

PRESIDENT ALONZO G. MORON

Moron resignation accepted by board

By CHESTER M. HAMPTON
AFRO Staff Correspondent

NEW YORK — The trustees of Hampton Institute reluctantly accepted the resignation of President Alonzo G. Moron — "at his own insistence" —last week in a special board meeting held in New York's Hotel Biltmore.

Ba 17-4-59

The board named faculty dean Wiliam Martin acting president effective July 1 —Dr. Moron's ten - year tenure as president ends June 30. Dr. Martin will serve until a permanent replacement for Dr. Moron is made.

Still to be named is the committee which will select the next president.

THE BOARD'S reluctance to lose Dr. Moron's services for Hampton was evidenced in two conditions to accepting his resignation: (1.) that he administer Hampton's program of teacher preparation in his native Virgin Islands this summer, and (2.) that he make a full report of Hampton's present status and future outlook.

Despite the rumors of a possible State department appointment or another educational post, Dr. Moron said of his future:

American

"I really don't have any plans that extend beyond the immediate responsibility of launching the Hampton summer program in the Virgin Islands." (This program gets under way July 8.)

THE RESIGNATION tempest was stirred up when on March 31, Dr. Moron tendered his offer to resign. A month later, at its regular spring meeting on the Hampton campus, the board refused to accept Dr. Moron's resignation.

At that time, the board announced only that a committe, headed by Dr. Frank Graham, would recommend to it what action should be taken.

In the interim, Dr. Graham's committee met with representatives from the faculty, staff, student body and alumni of Hampton. The committee also worked closely with Dr. Moron it is reported, that Dr. Moron in arriving at a decision.

It was during these meetings, insisted on his resignation's being accepted. The committee accordingly made its report to the full board, after the report had been read and approved by Dr. Moron.

Dr. Moron's reason for requesting the acceptance of his resignation was never officially revealed by either him or board chairman, Arthur Howe Jr.

However, when the board met in April on the campus, the reason came out during a demonstration of 726 Hampton students urging Dr. Moron to stay and urging the board not to accept his proffered resignation.

AS THEY sang the "Alma Mater" on the front lawn of the President's Mansion, Dr. Moron came out and adresed them. He said:

"I have worked hard to make this a colege of which we could all be proud. People today know about Hampton Institute as a college, a college in every sense of the word.

"I feel that Hampton Institute has the best chance to survive and progress of any institution that was originally founded for a special purpose.

"We can even survive integration."

Then he told the cheering students: "These last ten years have not been easy. They have taken a great deal of concentration and hard work.

"I KNOW that I have made enemies here and have been hard to get along with at times. I have made enemies because I have been in a hurry to improve and have been impatient to achieve progress for the college."

Then, getting to his basic reason, he continued: 'I did not offer to resign because I am tired; but because I thought we were not making progress fast enough. I want to see better classrooms and better faculty.

"And all that takes money. If I can't see that coming, then I am going to resign."

THIS, THEN, was the first time that the president's reason was known to persons other than himself and the board.

His statement did confirm speculation that had arisen to the effect that there was a basic difference of opinion between the president and the board as to whether Hampton should remain a trades school or should develop into a bona fide college or modern technical school.

Dr. Moron, it was believed, was attempting to get away from the trades school status whereas some members of the board, and some alumni, were in favor of adhering to the trades tradition.

In a May meeting, the alumni, by a narrow vote, petitioned the board to accept Dr. Moron's resignation.

NEWS OF the president's resignation having been accepted was received on the campus with relative calm. The more than 1,000 students who were on the campus at the time of the April board meeting had dwindled to less than 200, with the end of the spring term.

"No, we didn't expect it," said one campus spokesman, "we feared it, though. We are now more convinced than we were before that Dr. Moron really wants to leave.

"I guess that's the reason things are so quiet now —we want him to have what he thinks is best for himself."

Dr. Moron has returned briefly to the campus after the board meeting before going to the home of friends in the city. Before the board meeting, he had been at Leahy Clinic in Boston where he underwent a complete physical check-up.

Mrs. Moron, who accompanied him to Boston, left for their Virgin Islands home as soon as she learned his health was not in danger. Dr. Moron will join her there in early July.

TRUSTEES WERE close-mouthed concerning the resignation — they referred only to the official statement released by their chairman.

Saul Perdue, a trustee and principal of Carver High School in Baltimore, said however: "As much as we regret Dr. Moron's leaving, I am sure that Hampton Institute will continue to go forward."

"No," he replied to a question, "there is no present 'most-likely' prospect for a successor for him. I'm sure, however, that as soon as the special committee locates the right person, the public will be informed."

Dr. Moron was the eighth president of the 91 -year - old college. He headed the institution since 1949 after serving a year as business manager.

HAMPTON, Va., — Board of trustees chairman of Hampton Institute, Arthur Howe, Jr., announced Thursday night that Dr. Alonzo G. Moron, eighth president of the 91-year old Virginia college has been relieved of his duties, "at his own insistence," effective June 30.

Howe, who is director of admissions at Yale University, explained that the decision was reached "following the board's refusal to accept the president's resignation tendered March 31."

Howe said that Dr. William H. Martin, dean of faculty at Hampton, "has been appointed acting president, effective July 1, and steps" are being taken to establish a committee for the naming of a permanent replacement for Dr Moron."

14e(1)

"In regretfully acceding to the President's request," Howe stated, "the board obtained his consent to administer Hampton's Virgin Islands program this summer and to prepare, during the coming year, a report for the trustees on the Institute's structure and future development."

The five-year-old Virgin Islands program, devoted to improving the professional abilities of public school teachers in the islands, was underwritten during its first three years by a Ford Foundation grant and has been underwritten since by the Virgin Islands government.

Dr. Moron's resignation offer was considered in a special board meeting Thursday in New York's Hotel Baltimore, called to hear a report from a board committee which had been appointed earlier to investigate the issues behind the president's action.

In their regular meeting April 23 at the campus which is situated on Virginia's lower peninsula, the board tabbed further consideration of the matter following a day-long executive session.

Dr. Moron, 50, has been president of Hampton Institute since 1949, following a year's service as business manager of the college. He is an alumnus of Brown University and earned the masters degree from the University of Pittsburgh. He was awarded the degree bachelor of laws from Harvard University, which he attended as a Rosenwald Fellow. Wilberforce and Brown Universities have honored him with the doctorate of laws.

Earlier this year Dr. Moron made a two-month lecture tour of India, as a U. S. specialist under the auspices of the Department of State. In 1956, he was a member of a study tour of the Middle East, jointly sponsored by the American Christian Palestine Committee and National Conference of Christians & Jews.

He is presently on the National Manpower Council, a member of the board of governors of the American Red Cross, is on the board of directors of the United Negro College Fund, the Southern Regional Council and the Virginia Council on Human Relations. He is also on the executive committee of the Association for Higher Education and on the American Council on Education's Committee on Education and International Affairs. In addition to membership

Controversy Between Hampton President, Alumni Continues

HAMPTON, Va. — Meeting in the shadow of Dr. Alonzo G. Moron's offer to resign as president of Hampton Institute, the college's alumni association voted, 49 to 45, to "petition the Board of Trustees to accept the president's resignation without delay and to proceed to the election of the best qualified person available to administer the affairs of Hampton."

This action was taken during the anuual business meeting Saturday, May 31st on the college campus in the 43rd annual reunion of the alumni association. The attitude expressed in the resolution was in contrast to messages from a dozen alumni chapters supporting the current administration.

Others resolutions adopted called for "the return to the philosophy of the training of the head, heart, and hand in a modern atmosphere and that development of religious and moral principles be an integral part of the program of the college."

MORON ANSWERS QUESTION

After welcoming the returning alumni to the college, President Alonzo G. Moron answered a question about the issues involved in his offer to resign last month.

Dr. Moron detailed the following (1) His two and a half years effort to get the Board's support in an effort to raise funds for improved classroom facilities. These efforts have not met with Board approval. (2) He cited the president's responsibility for the administration of the college which is in conflict, in this instance, with the Board's feeling that they have a right to deal directly with the faculty, staff and students.

There were four alumni members of the Board of Trustees present at the meeting. They were: Dr. Flemmie P. Kittrell, Washington; Charles H. Williams, Hampton; Dr. Saul M. Perdue, Baltimore, Md., and James J. Henderson, Durham, N. C.

They spoke in rebuttal to Dr. Moron's statements, charging that they were conscious of the need for better classroom facilities. Because of this they had hired a New York firm of consultants (against the president's wishes) to survey the needs of the college.

They also denied any interference with administrative matters until "they felt they had to interfere."

Answering the trustees' statements, Dr. Moron pointed out that it was not necessary, in his opinion, to spend $17,000 to have a firm of consultants confirm the need for a new communications center.

He then detailed needs for better classroom facilities and deplored the inadequate science building, the music building, the liberal arts building and the building used for nursing and home economics.

NEW ALUMNI OFFICERS

New officers elected to guide the alumni association in the coming year are: President, William Watson, Virginia State College, Petersburg; First Vice President, Miss Bertha M. Sawyer, N. Y., N. Y.; Second Vice President, Thomas Gardner, Norfolk, Va.; Third Vice President, David Smith, Washington; Treasurer, Walter R. Brown, Hampton; Recording Secretary Miss Laura Billups, Hampton; and Parliamentarian, W. Hale Thompson, Newport News.

In his annual message, Hugh Victor Brown, Goldsboro, N. C. president of the association, urged those attending the reunion to support the institution's president in a time of conflict.

Brown reviewed alumni reaction to President's Moron's offer to resign, citing messages in support of Dr. Moron received from regional and chapter officers.

He then cautioned the alumni against the dangers in the situation where the president of the college "is hampered by blocks or delaying tactics in the administering of policies already arrived at or agreed upon."

Scientist-Writer Among 3 Appointed At Hampton

HAMPTON, Va.—An award-winning scientist-writer and two other scholars have been appointed to the Hampton institute faculty as members of the college's department of natural sciences, according to an announcement by Dr. William H. Martin, acting president.

The three are Dr. Abraham L. Baron, associate professor of chemistry; Samuel H. Cooke, substitute associate professor of biology, and Mrs. Premila Narasimhan, an assistant in chemistry.

DR. BARON, A native of Brooklyn, N. Y., has served at Benedict College, Columbia, S. C., and at Long Island and New York universities.

He is the author of two books—"Man Against Germs" and "Handbook of Antibiotics." "Man Against Germs," the most recent of these, was published in 1957 as a popular science book on diseases and won the 36th Eugene F. Saxton Memorial trust award that year.

MR. COOK IS A native of Buckner, Va. He has taught at colleges in Georgia, Alabama, Texas, Arkansas and South Carolina. He has degrees from the University of Pittsburgh. Mrs. Narashimhan is a native of India and a graduate of the Women's Christian college in Madras.

Race issue stirs at Hampton I.

HAMPTON, Va. — The Trustee Board of Hampton Institute at its meeting last month, was prepared to accept the resignation of Dr. Alonzo Moron as President.

A large but orderly campus demonstration of 700 students crying "We Want Moron," caused the trustees to give the matter further consideration.

Hampton students have expressed themselves vocally before on the question of presidents of the institution. Their turn-out this spring in favor of Dr. Moron was understandable an important reason for the trustees to give the whole matter a second look.

Speaking to students last April, President Moron said "I did not offer to resign because I am tired, but because I thought that we were not making progress fast enough. I want to see better classrooms and a better faculty."

INVESTIGATION BY the AFRO shows that President Moron has no desire to resign and is willing to continue his work at Hampton if he has the support of his Board of Trustees in his purpose to modernize the college.

AFRO survey shows the opinions on the campus divided as follows:

1. Dr. Moron has the support of the administrative staff with one exception.

2. In his corner are also the division and department heads with two exceptions.

3. The President has the support of a hard core of full professors including the most reputable and distinguished educators on the campus.

The young instructors are for Dr. Moron, who is beloved by an overwhelming majority of the student body.

OPPOSITION TO the President is divided into three distinct groups, each relatively small in itself but now organized and controlled by group 1.

Grievances and objectives of each of these groups may be set down as follows:

Group 1 — White persons, who want absolute control such as Hampton had prior to World War II.

At that time under President Howe, whose son is now president of the board of trustees, colored faculty members were discriminated against in rank, salary and housing.

This group apparently believes that, under a white president, they individually and collectively will fare better.

Under the present administration, their recommendations as to staff and program have not always been adopted. They have not all attained the ranks and salaries that they think they deserve simply because they are white.

They are resentful.

Virginia's massive resistance plan against the integration of the schools has undoubtedly had some effect on this group.

They are those who have feelings of insecurity, because of their failure to earn promotions, by further study or scholarly production or creative writing.

Members of this group, in some instances, because of rank or service, feel that they have a right to keep these positions whether or not they do research or creative work.

In group 2, there may be two or three persons, who are qualified and do hold the ranks they deserve, but flattered by group 1 people, they are resentful of the administration because group 1 people are resentful.

Members of group 2 are the tools of the group 1 people, who need them, so that they can point to them as "The colored group 2; proof that the issue is not RACE at Hampton for see they are colored and they are against the administration too."

Group 3 represents the minority of vocational people on the campus.

A report published in 1943 indicated that the training Hampton was giving in the trades was no better than—and in some instances not as good as the training given by a good technical high school.

The popularity of vocational courses with students is shown by the fact that the vocational enrollment decreased from 45[illegible] in 1948 to 142 in 1958.

Dr. Moron's administration has been compelled to curtail the vocational branches with a view to reorganizing on a higher engineering level.

Vocational instructors, therefore, who teach these sub-standard courses apparently believe that, a new administration (particularly if it is white) would be more sympathetic to the idea of training Hampton students as carpenters, cement finishers, bricklayers, etc., rather than as engineers, architects and electronic technicians.

This will be done if they are united with groups 2 and 1 and succeed in bringing in a white president.

It is plain that they then will have a chance of retaining their jobs.

IN SUMMARY, AFRO investigators have found that the basic issue, believe it or not, is race at Hampton Institute.

On one side there are three distinct groups, each relatively small in itself but organized and controlled by group 1.

These people are opposed to President Moron.

However, if the administrative staff, the department heads, the full professors, the young instructors and the overwhelming majority of the student body are listened to Dr. Moron will be asked by the trustees to remain as president.

This survey does not take into account the position of the alumni association.

That remains for another report.

WHEN EDGAR W. KNIGHT of the University of North Carolina and consultants studied Hampton in 1937, they reported that the school of agriculture did not have sufficient staff to offer the curricula listed in the catalog.

It added that members of the staff need further training because there was some question as to whether they had intimate and first hand information of agriculture and farm problems of the South.

The report said the feasibility of offering curricula leading to the bachelor's degree in Horticulture and Animal Husbandry is doubtful since there are few opportunities for placing graduates in such fields in competition with the colored land grant colleges.

The report continued: "Much of the equipment in the college trade school is either inadequate or obsolete. This type of equipment at best can produce only a poor grade of 'grease monkey.'

"Students should have for instructional purposes the very latest type of cars and the most up - to - date tools, machines for repairing or adjusting them."

The differences in the amounts being paid the several faculty members appear to be based on the length of service rather than on any specific qualifications as shown by preparation before entering the service, professional employment after entering the service or value of the services rendered.

"It is difficult to discover any correlation between the salaries paid on the one hand and the preparation, improvements, or value of services on the other.

"The surveyor has visited Hampton during the past 23 years, although social conditions, employment conditions, methods of production and opportunities for employment have changed considerably during this period, yet he can see little difference in the type of instruction being offered."

Fate of Va. school to be known

By CHESTER M. SHAMPTON

HAMPTON, Va. — Will Hampton Institute follow the policies envisioned by ex-President Alonzo G. Moron or will the school revert to its previous emphasis on carpentry, bricklaying and the like?

At first, it seemed that this question was answered when the board of trustees accepted Dr. Moron's resignation.

Dr. Moron had asked to be relieved from the presidential post he had held ten years if the trustees were not willing to support his attemps to make Hampton a first-class, academic college.

DURING THE months between the original announcement of his resignation request and the final action last month of the board, students, faculty and alumni aligned themselves into "pro" and "anti-Moron" camps. Detached observation showed the "pro's" to be in the majority.

When the trustee committee recommended that Dr. Moron's resignation be accepted, it seemed at the time that the trustees wanted Hampton to remain a trades school.

However, two factors seemed to indicate that the trustees were inclined toward Dr. Moron's point of view.

One was the statement of Dr. William H. Martin, faculty dean whom the trustees appointed acting president. Taking office, he said:

"WE INTEND to maintain and develop our present program and the emphasis will continue to be upon academic improvement.

"The manpower needs of the nation and the interests of our students will allow no compromise with academic excellence.

"I have worked closely with Dr. Moron in his effort to build Hampton Institute into a good college. The admission of the college into the Southern Association of Colleges, nearly two years ago, is evidence of the success of this effort."

Not only did the appointed acting president endorse the program installed by Dr. Moron, but Arthur Howe Jr., trustee chairman, made a statement of "confidence in Dr. Martin's ability to guide the college along the proper path to meet the educational goals of the currently established program."

Mr. Howe emphasized that the appointment of Dr. Martin does not represent a desire on the part of the trustees to change program or policy at the college.

CERTAINLY, IF Hampton Institute is to deviate from the course Dr. Moron set for it, the new acting president and the trustee chairman would not state so emphatically that there would be no policy change.

Another factor which seems to indicate a trustee endorsement of Dr. Moron's policies is the fact that two conditions were imposed on the acceptance of his resignation.

One of these conditions was that Dr. Moron administer this summer the special teacher-training program carried on by Hampton in Dr. Moron's native Virgin Islands.

This, however, could have been a mere courtesy or "face-saver." Dr. Moron has an estate in the Virgin Islands and was not immediately planning to go anywhere else.

THE OTHER condition, however, is more revealing. The trustees asked that Dr. Moron prepare a full report on the present status of Hampton Institute in addition to a blueprint of what he thinks the college should do in the future.

If Dr. Moron were being "kicked out" because of dissatisfaction with his administration, the trustees certainly would not ask him to tell them how the school should be run.

If it is true, as these factors suggest, that Dr. Moron's policies will continue — the question remains: Why did the trustees accept his resignation?

IT COULD be that the board was not willing to put improvement money into the operation of the school as swiftly as Dr. Moron would like to see it.

(Dr. Moron had told a group of students demonstrating on his behalf: "If I can't see that (the money) coming, then I'm going to resign.")

On the other hand, it could be that Dr. Moron had become a symbol — a target for disgruntled alumni and faculty members to aim their missiles at.

Neither the president nor the trustees will go into detail in discussing the 'real' reason his resignation was accepted.

Only time will tell whether his policies will continue or whether Hampton Institute will once again become a southern trades school for colored persons.

DR. MARTIN will act as president until a permanent

president is selected. The trustee committee which is to screen eligibles has not even been selected.

A veteran educator, Dr. Martin has been faculty dean since 1955 after heading the teacher education program for two years. One of his first official acts as dean was to direct the Hampton Self-study Program under a Ford Foundation grant.

Beginning his professional career in 1933, he was professor of education at Shorter College and, for five years, at Texas College.

He has also been a junior college dean and a high school principal. He directed the education department at Langston University.

He is a graduate of Wilberforce University and has master's and doctorate degrees from The Ohio State University.

THERE IS nothing in his record to point to an emphasis on vocational or trades training on his part. His deanships and posts as education department head seem to indicate he is a man with a scholastic, rather than vocational, interest.

Dr. Martin is on the commission on secondary schools of the American Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools and also on the planning committee studying teacher education, conducted by the Virginia state board of education.

Mrs. Martin was for five years dean of women at Hampton; their daughter is a Portsmouth, Va. teacher.

So much for the acting president.

The appointment of a permanent president is expected at least before the October annual board meeting in New York. At that time, alumni and supporters should have the answer to the question: Which way will Hampton go?

Hampton Prexy "Relieved" Of Duties, Effective Today

HAMPTON, Va., — Board of trustees chairman of Hampton Institute, Arthur Howe, Jr., announced Thursday night that Dr. Alonzo G. Moron, eighth president of the 91-year old Virginia college, has been relieved of his duties, "at his own insistence," effective June 30.

Howe, who is director of admissions at Yale University, explained that the decision was reached "following the board's refusal to accept the president's resignation, tendered March 31."

Howe said that Dr. William H. Martin, dean of faculty at Hampton, "has been appointed acting president, effective July 1, and "steps" are being taken to establish a committee for the naming of a permanent replacement for Dr. Moron."

"In regretfully acceding to the President's request," Howe stated, "the board obtained his consent to administer Hampton's Virgin Islands program this summer and to prepare, during the coming year, a report for the trustees on the Institute's structure and future development."

The five-year-old Virgin Islands program, devoted to improving the professional abilities of public school teachers in the islands, was underwritten during its first three years by a Ford Foundation grant and has been underwritten since by the Virgin Islands government.

Dr. Moron's resignation offer was considered in a special board meeting Thursday in New York's Hotel Baltimore, called to hear a report from a board committee which had been appointed earlier to investigate the issues behind the president's action.

In their regular meeting April 24, at the campus which is situated on Virginia's lower peninsula, the board tabbed further consideration of the matter following a day-long executive session.

Dr. Moron, 50, has been president of Hampton Institute since 1949, following a year's service as business manager of the college. He is an alumnus of Brown University and earned the masters degree from the University of Pittsburgh. He was awarded the degree bachelor of laws from Harvard University, which he attended as a Rosenwald Fellow. Wilberforce and Brown Universities have honored him with the doctorate of laws.

Earlier this year Dr. Moron made a two-month lecture tour of India, as a U. S. specialist under the auspices of the Department of State. In 1956, he was a member of a study tour of the Middle East, jointly sponsored by the American Christian Palestine Committee and National Conference of Christians & Jews.

He is presently on the National Manpower Council, a member of the board of governors of the American Red Cross, is on the board of directors of the United Negro College Fund, the Southern Regional Council and the Virginia Council on Human Relations. He is also on the executive committee of the Association for Higher Education and on the American Council on Education's Committee on Education and International Affairs. In addition to membership in several other national organizations, he serves as trustee of the National Society of Crippled Children and Adults and the National Council of United Service Organizations, Inc.

Trustees To Blame

Since 1931 Hampton has had five presidents, this is on the average of a new president every six years.

The rapid turnover in Hampton presidents indicates the kind of instability of which no college trustee board can be proud.

Now Dr. Alonzo G. Moron has offered his resignation. A substantial number of faculty members and alumni are urging him not to resign.

Dr. Frank Graham, former president of North Carolina University heads the trustee committee on conciliation. We trust that his efforts may be successful.

If they are not, it is a reflection upon the board of trustees whose chief function is to elect and dismiss a president.

However, if the presidents whom they choose are able to maintain the post for no longer than an average of six years, it is plain evidence that they were at fault in not giving adequate mature, consideration to the nominees before they were made.

Last week it was reported that Hampton alumni voted 49 to 45 against retaining Dr. Moron.

However, the ultimate responsibility for the release of the president is that of the trustees and we should think that they would do it by a show of no other hands than their own.

In addition, the vote of 49 to 45 represents too small a segment of the alumni association to be properly considered, and is too close to be determinative.

If this rapid turnover of presidents at Hampton continues, that institution will get the name as a graveyard of college presidents.

Hampton trustees have done a magnificent job in investing the school's 14 million dollar endowment fund. A study of endowment some time ago showed Hampton's returns measured from endowment sources matched that of many of the larger colleges.

But they have done a poor job in getting along with the college presidents whom they have selected.

This leads to the suspicion whether it is correct or not, that the trustees are not willing to confine themselves to the making of policies, but are prone to interfere with the college administration.

Dr. Saul M. Perdue says he will not take over at Hampton

BALTIMORE

"No, no, no."

That was the opening statement made Wednesday by Dr. Saul M. Perdue as he commented on reports that he would be selected to be the next president of Hampton Institute.

A graduate of Hampton, a member of its trustee board and principal of the local Carver Vocational Technical High School, Dr. Perdue is well experienced in the administration of an institution devoted basically to the teaching of trades.

THIS WAS one of the reasons cited in the reports that had Dr. Perdue taking over the reins at Hampton.

However, Dr. Perdue told the AFRO that the reports were not grounded in truth and cited these reasons:

"1. There is no vacancy at Hampton. 2. If there were a vacancy a committee would have to be appointed to interview candidates and I doubt that I would be considered.

"3. Even if the job were offered to me I have absolutely no ambition to leave here (Carver)."

Moron case up Friday

HAMPTON, Va. — Trustees of Hampton Institute gather on the campus Friday for their regular annual meeting. The main item on their agenda will be the consideration of the offer to resign made by Dr. Alonzo G. Moron, president of the college.

With but a few days remaining before his offer is accepted or rejected, Dr. Moron told the AFRO:

"The board meets Friday, I can't say anything about the matter until then."

Dr. Moron said that he had received a great many letters and other communications from alumni and friends of the institution since his offer to resign was made public.

"I haven't kept track of just how many (communications)," he said, "but there has been a great deal of interest shown."

Asked if he were being considered for a post with the state department or some other college, he replied:

"Not that I know anything about. I have made no plans and no applications for a position elsewhere.

"At present, I am not interested in other work."

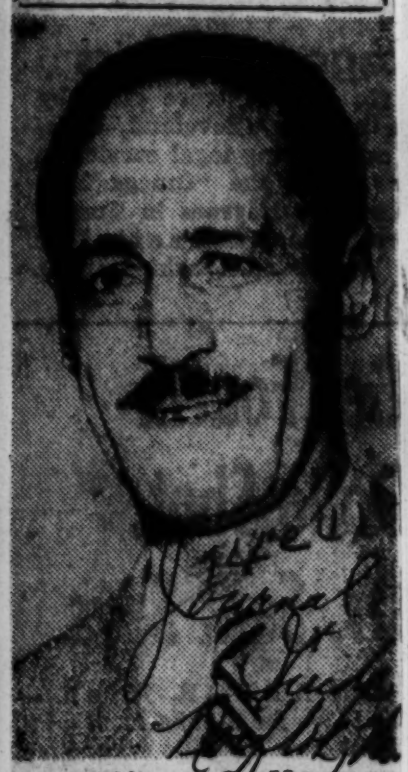
DR. MORON did not choose to comment on the speculation that his offer to resign was the end product of friction between the administration and some alumni over curricular emphasis.

The reported contention was over Dr. Moron's emphasizing an academic curriculum whereas certain alumni favored a continuation of making trades the major concern of the school.

On April 29, ten years ago, Dr. Moron, then 40, became the school's first colored president.

Tells America's Story Abroad



Dr. Alonzo G. Moron, president of Hampton Institute, is now on a 2-month government sponsored lecture and discussion tour of India as a specialist on the United States.

He is speaking on several subjects including some of which deal with the race problem in America. It is his second such trip for the government. In 1952, he headed this nation's delegation to an international conference in the British West Indies.

Dr. Moron

Withholds reason for his decision

Staff Correspondent

HAMPTON, Va. — "I sent a letter to the board this past week offering my resignation. The reason is before the board now; I am not at liberty to divulge it."

Hampton Institute president Alonzo G. (for Graseano) Moron made this statement to the AFRO late Saturday to verify rumors that he had submitted his resignation to the board of trustees.

The disclosure shocked few "insiders" at Hampton who for some time have hinted at friction between the president and the alumni. They said that Dr. Moron was stressing an academic curriculum at Hampton and de - emphasizing the trades courses.

IN RESPONSE to complaints of trades division graduates about the shift in emphasis, Dr. Moron reportedly cited two factors: the decline in trades course registrations and the obsolete condition of some of the facilities.

Dr. Moron's resignation offer came but a few days before his 50th birthday, Sunday, April 12. On April 29, he rounds out ten years as president of the Institute.

Although board chairman Arthur Howe and other trustees have received Dr. Moron's offer to resign, the matter will not be officially considered until the 30-member board meets at Hampton on April 24.

Channing Tobias, director of the Phelps-Stokes Fund, was chairman of the Hampton board in 1949 when Dr. Moron was elected to head the institution.

THEN 40, Dr. Moron was hailed as one of the most youthful college presidents in the nation. He was also the first colored president for the then 81 year old school.

He became acting president in 1947, 20 years after his graduation from Hampton after chairing the faculty committee of administration which directed the school following the resignation of President Ralph P. Bridgman.

Dr. Moron was born in St. Thomas, Virgin Islands and after elementary schooling there, entered the senior high school at Hampton in 1923. He was graduated in 1927 and later entered Brown University where he received a bachelor of philosophy degree in 1932.

As a fellow of the National Urban League, he studied sociology at the University of Pittsburgh and was awarded a master's degree in 1933.

On the year of his election to the acting presidency, 1947, he received a bachelor of laws degree from Harvard University.

DR. MORON worked in Baltimore with the Emergency Relief Administration in 1933 before going that year to the Virgin Islands where he served as Commissioner of Public Welfare.

He managed an Atlanta housing project from 1936 to 1944 and, during that period, also lectured at the Atlanta University School of Social Work.

In 1946 he returned to Hampton as consultant in business management before becoming general business manager in 1947. A Phi Beta Kappa, he is a member of Alpha Phi Alpha Fraternity and several educational and civic organizations.

He is married to the former Miss Leola Churchill of Virginia and of Baltimore.

Board Of Trustees Decide To Table Until Summer, Further Consideration Of Resignation Offer Made By The College's Pres. Dr. Alonzo G. Moron

Hampton, Va., Apr. 28.—Hampton Institute's board of trustees, meeting on the campus last week, decided to table until the summer further consideration of the offer to resign made by the College's president, Dr. Alonzo G. Moron.

Board member Dr. Frank P. Graham, former president of the University of North Carolina, was elected to head a special committee of the board which will study the questions involved. The group is expected to report this summer.

Consideration of Dr. Moron's offer to resign was the first item of business considered in the two-day semi-annual meeting last Friday and Saturday. The board spent nearly six hours discussing the matter in executive session before deciding to defer action pending further study.

In other business the college's trustees approved an operating budget, for the year beginning July 1, in excess of $2,400,000. More than one million dollars of this amount is for salaries of faculties and staff, including normal salary increases

A resolution was passed paying tribute to Dr. Frank Graham for completing 25 years of service on the board.

Another tribute was accorded Dr. Eva C. Mitchell, chairman of the department of elementary education who has attained retirement age. She was named professor of education emeritus.

On the eve of the meeting, over 600 Hampton Institute students staged a moonlight march on the house of the college's president to present him a pledge of confidence in reaction to his resignation offer.

Gathering on the waterfront drive in front of the president's campus residence, the students sang the college's Alma Mater and chanted "We Want Moron!"

This brought the president and his wife to their front steps where Shirley S. Nelson, student council president, presented 700 student signatures "to pledge our confidence to Dr. Moron, president of our college."

In advance of the meeting, both the chairman of the board, Arthur Howe, Jr., director of admissions at Yale University, and Dr. Moron declined to comment on the issues involved in the resignation offer.

However, in responding to the students' demonstration Dr. Moron gave the first public indications of why he sent a letter to board members in early April offering to resign.

He explained that he wants better classrooms and better faculty salaries to retain and attract the best instructional personnel. The students cheered this statement of his goals as Dr. Moron stressed that to realize progress in these areas would take money

"I did not offer to resign because I am tired," he said, "but because I thought we were not making progress fast enough. If I can't see these things coming, then I am going to resign."

The president acknowledged to the students that the last 10 years, during which he has headed the 91-year old college, have not been easy. "They have taken a great deal of concentration and hard work. I know that I have made enemies . . . because I have been in a hurry to improve and have been impatient to achieve progress for the college.

"I am certain that we will all get the benefit of the best judgment of the wise people on the board. Be assured that they will have the interest of the student body and the college at heart.

"What you are doing here will remain as one of the most pleasant and moving memories I can ever hope to have," he concluded, standing at his wife's side.

About 250 students took part in a second demonstration at noon the next day. Their singing in front of the college auditorium could be heard in the board meeting room, about 50 yards away in the administration building.

Dr. Moron, an alumnus of Hampton Institute, joined the college staff in 1946 as consultant in business management and became business manager in 1947. He was named acting president in 1948 and the board made his appointment permanent the following year.

He secured the Bachelor's degree from Brown University, and the Master's from the University of Pittsburgh He earned the LL.B. from Harvard University and was awarded the LL.D. by Brown and by Wilberforce Universities.

Controversy Between Hampton President, Alumni Continues

Daily World Atlanta, Ga. P.
Thurs 6-4-59

HAMPTON, Va. — Meeting in the shadow of Dr. Alonzo G. Moron's offer to resign as president of Hampton Institute, the college's alumni association voted, 49 to 45, to petition the Board of Trustees to accept the president's resignation without delay and to proceed to the election of the best qualified person available to administer the affairs of Hampton."

This action was taken during the anuual business meeting Saturday afternoon on the college campus in the 43rd annual reunion of the alumni association. The attitude expressed in the resolution was in contrast to messages from a dozen alumni chapters supporting the current administration.

Others resolutions adopted called for "the return to the philosophy of the training of the head, heart, and hand in a modern atmosphere and that development of religious and moral principles be an integral part of the program of the college."

MORON ANSWERS QUESTION

After welcoming the returning alumni to the college, President Alonzo G. Moron answered a question about the issues involved in his offer to resign last month.

Dr. Moron detailed the following (1) His two and a half years effort to get the Board's support in an effort to raise funds for improved classroom facilities. These efforts have not met with Board approval. (2) He cited the president's responsibility for the administration of the college which is in conflict, in this instance, with the Board's feeling that they have a right to deal directly with the faculty, staff and students.

There were four alumni members of the Board of Trustees present at the meeting. They were: Dr. Flemmie P. Kittrell, Washington; Charles H. Williams, Hampton; Dr. Saul M. Perdue, Baltimore, Md.; and James J. Henderson, Durham, N. C.

They spoke in rebuttal to Dr. Moron's statements, charging that they were conscious of the need for better classroom facilities. Because of this they had hired a New York firm of consultants (against the president's wishes) to survey the needs of the college.

They also denied any interference with administrative matters until "they felt they had to interfere."

Answering the trustees' statements, Dr. Moron pointed out that it was not necessary, in his opinion, to spend $17,000 to have a firm of consultants confirm the need for a new communications center.

He then detailed needs for better classroom facilities and deplored the inadequate science building, the music building, the liberal arts building, and the building need for nursing, and home economics.

NEW ALUMIN OFFICERS

New officers elected to guide the alumni association in the coming year are: President, William Watson, Virginia State College, Petersburg; First Vice President, Miss Bertha M. Sawyer, N. Y., N. Y.; Second Vice President, Thomas Gardner, Norfolk, Va.; Third Vice President, David Smith, Washington; Treasurer, Walter R. Brown, Hampton; Recording Secretary, Miss Laura Billups, Hampton; and Parliamentarian, W. Hale Thompson, Newport News.

In his annual message, Hugh Victor Brown, Goldsboro, N. C., president of the Association, urged those attending the reunion to support the institution's president in a time of conflict.

Brown reviewed alumni reaction to President's Moron's offer to resign, citing messages in support of Dr. Moron received from regional and chapter officers.

He then cautioned the alumni against the dangers in the situation where the president of the college "is hampered by blocks or delaying tactics in the administering of policies already arrived at or agreed upon."

Hampton Award Winner Unable To To Leave City

Mrs. Julian Wrenn Partner, president emeritus of the Chicago Hampton Institute club and a founder of the Midwest Regional Conference of the national Hampton Alumni Association, was unable to return to the school to receive the 1959 Alumni Merit Award.

Illness of her husband, said Mrs. Partner, forced her to notify the Institute in Hampton, Va., of her inability to attend the presentation ceremonies last week.

The winner of numerous awards, Mrs. Partner, a school teacher and social worker, was cited in 1958 by the Inter-Alumni Council of the United Negro College Fund.

The National Recreation Association of New York City awarded her a Twenty Years' Service Pin for "Efficient Work In The Field of Recreation and Community Service Activities," in 1939.

She was also the recipient of a 1926 Fellowship by the General Education Board for a year's study and in 1935 received a scholarship to Swarthmore college from the American Friends Service Committee of Philadelphia.

The active civic and social leader was also public relations chairman of the Chicago Girl Scouts and the Women's Association and Founder's club of Good Shepherd church.

Hampton Institute Head Replaced at His Request

NEW YORK, June 26 (AP) Alonzo G. Moron, whose resignation March 31 as president of Hampton (Va.) Institute was first refused, has been relieved of the post "at his own insistence."

Acceptance of Moron's resignation, effective June 30, was announced last night by Arthur Howe Jr., chairman of the board of trustees, after a special board meeting here.

The announcement said Moron, 50, had agreed to administer Hampton's Virgin Islands program this summer and would "prepare during the coming year a report for the trustees on the Institute's structure and future development." Moron had been president of the school since 1949.

At the time he submitted his resignation in March, Moron gave no reason. In subsequent statements to the student body, however, he said the Board had refused to go along with his plan to raise money to improve classroom facilities and to increase faculty salaries.

Moron also said the Board in his opinion had violated proper administrative channels in dealing directly with the faculty, staff and students.

The Virgin Islands program, in existence five years, is administered by the school. It was financed the first three years by the Ford Foundation to improve instruction in public schools in the Virgin Islands. It has been supported financially the past two years by the island government.

Dr. Morris Helps College

OCALA, Fla. — When Dr. William H. Jackson, president of Howard Junior College, appointed Dr. Charles S. Morris, professor of English and director of public relations, he was building better than he knew, for Dr. Morris has had commendable success in public relations and as a college professor in several other leading colleges in the country.

His early days saw him at Virginia Theological Seminary and College at Lynchburg, Va., and then to Virginia State College at Petersburg, Bluefield, W. Va., and then to Tennessee State and now at Howard Junior College at Ocala. Several college presidents were his students at some of the colleges he served as head of the English department. Dr. Walter S. Davis, present president of Tennessee State University, was his student, so was Dr. William H. Gray, former president of Florida A. and M. University.

IT SEEMS rather significant that Dr. Morris' new position wouuld come in the very state where he formerly pastored. He is a former pastor of Bethel Baptist Church, Jacksonville, Fla. Dr. Morris is the only living ex-pastor of Bethel whose portrait hangs in its hall of fame (if it is called that). He

Dr. Morris is eminently suited for his new post, having drunk from the fountain of some of the leading colleges and universities in the country. They include Wheaton of Illinois, where Evangelist Billy Graham went to school; the University of Chicago, Columbia University and Oberlin Graduate School of Theology.

He is the son of Dr. Charles Satchell Morris Sr., one of the greatest preachers ever produced in this country, the great-nephew of Bishop Daniel A. Payne, the founder of Wilberforce University; the great-grandson of the Rev. Charles Satchell, who pastored Union Baptist, Cincinnati, Ohio, and founder and first pastor of Third Baptist Church, San Francisco, Calif., where Dr. Fred D. Haynes is pastoring now.

THE NEW PROFESSOR'S jaunts around the country, speaking before high school groups, will possibly take him before more than 100,000 students before the commencement season is over.

His wife visited him recently when they worshiped in Bethel, Jacksonville, where he pastored over 10 years ago. Dr. Morris is keenly interested in the welfare of his sainted mother, who is a cripple and resides in Los Angeles, Calif.

THE COMPETITIVE spirit of Dr. Morris led him into several essay and oratorical contests during his high school and under-graduate days. He won an oratorical contest in Mount Vernon, N. Y., where he competed against nine others, he being the only Negro in the contest..

He leaped into fame overnight when the daily press referred to him as a "native-born Cuban" who won first place. His refutation was so strong that it was widely circulated by New York dailies.

Howard U. Choir sparkles with National Symphony

The Afro-American
Baltimore

WASHINGTON, D.C.—It isn't often that the musical programs at staid old Constitution Hall in the Nation's Capital are altered at the pleasure of the audience, but performances by the Howard University Choir, under the direction of Dean Warner Lawson, caused this to happen not once but twice within an eight-day period in late October.

The occasions were special concerts for the annual convention of music critics representing the nation's newspapers on October 16th and for a group of visiting Russian composers on October 24th. The latter group included the noted Dmitri Kabalevsky.

PERFORMING with the National Symphony Orchestra, the Howard Choir literally stopped both shows with its rendition of Choros No. 10 by Villa-Lobos.

What happened at the first concert was probably best described by Paul Hume, internationally-known music critic of the Washington Post and Times - Herald, who wrote: "...the Howard University Choir did such a sensational job of blowing the roof right off that the audience literally refused to stop clapping and shouting until (Howard) Mitchell came back to the platform and signaled for a repeat of the last half of Heitor Villa-Lobos' Choros No. 10."

Writing in the Washington Evening Star, critic Day Thorpe said: "Two of the pieces on the program—Appalachian Spring and the Villa-Lobos Choros No. 10—have long been known as especially effective virtuoso numbers of the symphony, and nothing the Howard University Choir has ever done, except possibly Carminia Burana, is so violently eruptive and overwhelming as the Villa-Lobos.

SIX NOTED Russian composers were on hand for the second concert, which featured Kabalevsky as guest conductor. The audience was brought to its feet early during the program by the performance of 14-year-old Abbot Lee Ruskin, prize - winning pianist.

This marks the ninth consecutive season during which the Howard Choir has performed with the National Symphony Orchestra. The October concerts were special performances; however, the Choir and Orchestra will come together again in March for their two regularly scheduled concerts.

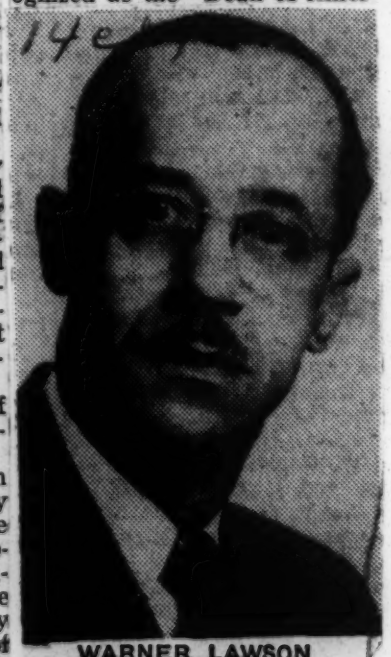
WARNER LAWSON, who serves as dean of the School of Music at Howard, as well as Choir director, is in his 17th year in both capacities.

A native of Hartford, Conn., he holds undergraduate degrees from Fisk University and the Yale School of Music and the Master of Arts degree from Harvard. At the latter institution he studied under Archibald Davison, who is recognized as the "Dean of American Choral Directors."



WARNER LAWSON

In 1954 Hartt Music College of Connecticut conferred the honorary Doctor of Music degree on Dean Lawson.

THE CHOIR, which ranges in size from 80 to 130 voices depending upon the occasion, is made up of students from each of Howard's 10 schools and colleges. Choir participation is a non-credit activity; yet its one-a-day rehearsals and average of two performances a week make it one of the most rigorous activities at Howard.

"But this was only the beginning of the fireworks," Mr. Hume wrote the next day. "Next the Howard University Choir came back to the scene of its triumph of last week's Critics' concert, and repeated the Villa-Lobos Choros No. 10.

"And again, and with even more deserved insistence, the audience demanded that the final choral section of the work be repeated. Truly the sound and effect of the chorus, trained by Warner Lawson, is a unique glory to behold."

In recent years the Howard University Choir has been described as "the best choral group in America" by at least a half dozen recognized music critics.

Who Will Be Selected As Howard U.'s New Prexy?

The Call Kansas City, Mo.

By LOUIS LAUTIER
For the NNPA News Service

WASHINGTON, D. C. — An informed source told this column: "Howard university has no money problem. Everything is given to it by the federal government. Anybody can run that place if he just keeps half way clean."

14e(1)

He was talking about the selection of a successor to Dr. Mordecai W. Johnson, who has indicated that he wishes to retire from the presidency of the university after the June commence exercises.

The source expressed the hope that the board of trustees will not select another Baptist minister but will require that the successful candidate have the same qualifications as a professor—a Ph.D.

He thinks well of Dr. Benjamin E. Mays, president of Morehouse college. He also mentioned Samuel Westerfield, a Ph.D. from Harvard, who has a position in the School of Business Administration at Harvard this year but serves as a dean at Atlanta university. Westerfield is a native of Washington.

Also mentioned was Dr. Harold West, president of Meharry Medical college. My source pointed out that Dr. West has no medical degree, but was so well trained that he was chosen to head Meharry. West is a Ph.D. in chemistry and also a native of Washington.

My source reminded that it was the late Bob Church of Memphis and Chicago who maneuvered the choice of Dr. Johnson to succeed the late J. Stanley Durkee. The group led by the late Dr. Emmett J. Scott, then secretary-treasurer of Howard, were unable to agree on a choice after the late Bishop John A. Gregg of the AME church turned down the offer of the Howard presidency. It was then that Church suggested Dr. Johnson, the pastor of a Charleston, W. Va., Baptist church.

Incidentally, my source taught in high school Lorimer D. Milton, the Atlanta banker, who heads the trustee committee to find a suitable successor to Dr. Johnson.

Another source suggested that Dr. James M. Nabrit, secretary of Howard university and dean of its law school, will receive the mantle of Dr. Johnson.

He reasoned that Dr. Johnson is in control of the trustee board, that the board will approve Dr. Johnson's pick of a successor, and that Dr. Johnson's pick will be Nabrit.

500 to attend H. U. annual weekend

Howard Works to Return to Goal Of Founders: School Open to All

Sixth in a series on higher education in the Washington area.

By Erwin Knoll
Staff Reporter

The destiny of Howard University, says its president, "is to return to what it was in the first place—an institution open to all."

The Congregationalists who met in Washington in 1866 to found the University were concerned with providing education for the newly freed slaves—but that was not their sole concern. The first Howard graduates were daughters of white members of the faculty.

"This is not a Negro institution," President Mordecai W. Johnson said yesterday.

"It has become predominantly Negro because of the demands of history—because it met a need for which was met nowhere else in the whole South."

More Whites Enroll

In serving over the years as the mainstay of Negro higher education in the United States, Howard contributed substantial numbers of graduates in medicine, dentistry, pharmacy, engineering, music, law and social work.

But in the years ahead, as other schools become increasingly accessible to Negroes, Johnson expects Howard to attract more students of all races.

Already the University is experiencing an upward trend in white enrollments in all of its divisions, and this year a manifest increase" in the undergraduate College of Liberal Arts.

Among American universities Howard has an unusually high proportion of foreign students—about 12 per cent. They come from Africa, Western Europe and the Far East.

'A Genuine Respect'

"They feel this institution has a genuine respect for human beings—that they will be welcome here as individuals," Johnson commented. "This University says something to the world."

About two thirds of the student body of some 6000 comes from the Southern states and the District. The District furnishes about 17 per cent of Howard's students.

Over the next five years Howard's enrollment is expected to grow by about 2000. Much of the increase will be at the undergradaute level.

"The graduate program will grow slowly," Johnson said. "We aren't anxious for it to leap. We want to build solidly, not to become famous for our numbers."

Enrollment pressures in the years ahead will allow the University to be more selective in taking students, Johnson said, enabling it to become "a qualitatively significant institution." But he added:

"We don't intend to run off and abandon our program of helping students who suffer from the deficiencies of poor elementary and secondary schooling."

Since 1879, when Congress appropriated $10,000 for the University, it has been fiscally linked to the Federal Government. In 1928 the arrangement was made formal by an act authorizing an annual appropriation for Howard.

New Building Rise

This year that appropriation amounted to $4.6 million—about half the University's total budget. The rest comes from fees, grants and gifts.

Over the past 30 years Howard has also recieved $30 million in Federal funds for construction projects on its 60-acre campus on 6th st. nw.

Recently opened buildings include a men's residence hall and a pre-clinical medical building. An auditorium-fine arts building is now under construction, and there are plans for a home economics building and a men's gymnasium.

Overcrowding may make HU drop coed 'off campus' ban

WASHINGTON

To relieve overcrowding in five women's dormitories, officials at Howard University are considering changing a rule which bars off-campus residency for out-of-town undergraduate coeds.

In the alternative, the University enrollment may have to be cut at the close of the second semester.

If the residence rule is changed, the privilege of living off campus will be granted only to senior women, a Howard University spokesman stated.

OVERCROWDING at Howard was dramatized last week by a demonstration of 250 coeds who marched across the campus from 4th and College Sts., NW to the University Administration Building on Sixth St., NW.

A student spokesman complained to this newspaper that the five dormitories involved had been built for a capacity of 553 students but instead were being used to house 687 girls.

University officials admitted the overcrowding, estimating that a total of 150 girls in excess of those usually provided for are living at the five dorms. This means an overload of approximately 30 at each dormitory, a spokesman stated.

A STUDENT, contending as many as five girls are housed in some rooms, declared the rooms were mite infested and that vermin in the mattresses had got on the girls.

A University spokesman explained this by stating that in one dormitory, five girls were living in each of two rooms which were formerly infirmaries. He described the rooms as "very large," each with adjoining private bath and asserted that the residents living in them "have better living quarters than the others."

The University spokesman, in reference to the "vermin" charge, stated the dormitories are exterminated each summer and during the winter upon receiving specific complaints.

After complaints were made last week, dormitory staff members made a personal investigation but said they found no signs of vermin. However, exterminators began work at the dormitories Friday and finished the job Monday.

ANOTHER STUDENT complaint was that 56 girls were forced to use one shower in one of the dorms. University officials admitted seven out of eight showers on the third floor of one of the dormitories had been broken unknown to dorm housekeepers.

"However, there were eight showers operating on each of the other floors and could have also been used by the third floor residents," the spokesman stated. He said all except two of the broken showers have been repaired since the complaints were made and the remaining two are to be repaired when needed parts arrive.

COEDS COMPLAINED that there is not adequate closet space. The University spokesman stated that with three girls living in some rooms which had been planned for two, an extra closet was needed. He said movable closets had been installed in the rooms which required them.

The girls contended that their linen, which should be changed once a week, was changed only once every two weeks. The University official described this as "not totally correct."

Since the overcrowding, one of the two sheets allowed on a bed is changed alternately each week, it was disclosed. The spokesman said the University had rented hundreds of sheets in order to cope with the situation and had ordered new ones.

$80,000 Public Health Grant To Howard U. School

WASHINGTON, D. C.—A grant of $80,000 has been awarded by the U. S. Public Health Service to the College of Dentistry at Howard University for a five year study of the role of saliva in the healing of wounds in the mouth. Funds for the project will be assigned to the University at the rate of $16,000 each year for a period of five years.

All study will be conducted in the Department of Research in the College of Dentistry. Dr. George W. Wade, associate professor of oral diagnosis, is chief investigator. Dr. Harold Fleming, professor of research, will supervise the project.

The study, believed to be the first of its kind, will attempt to establish the relationship between salivary gland secretions and the healing of wounds in the oral cavity. Research will be conducted first on lower animals and then on human beings.

Dr. Wade has been a member of the faculty of the College of Dentistry since 1947. A graduate of the Howard College of Dentistry, he holds the Bachelor of Arts degree from Indiana University and the

Freedmen's Future

Both Freedmen's Hospital and Howard University would benefit over the long run if the Hospital were put under the jurisdiction of the University, as the Department of Health, Education and Welfare has once again proposed to Congress. Almost all medical schools have hospitals of their own to facilitate teaching and intern programs; in Washington, for example, both Georgetown and George Washington Universities operate hospitals in conjunction with their medical schools. By formalizing the close relationships which already exist between the Howard Medical School and Freedmen's, Congress would be strengthening the University's medical program.

It would be a disservice to the Washington community if the transfer of the Hospital from HEW to Howard were blocked again this year as it was in 1958 by the dispute involving the Civil Service pension rights of Freedmen's employes. Although the Federal Government finances a little more than half of Howard's costs, the University is governed by an independent board of trustees and its employes do not come under Civil Service provisions. Congress and the Civil Service Commission ought, however, to be able to work out a plan that would adequately protect the Hospital workers.

As part of Howard University, Freedmen's could become one of the outstanding teaching hospitals in the Nation. With the new 500-bed building which the HEW has asked Congress to provide for Freedmen's, the Hospital undoubtedly would attract some of the most promising medical students in the country to Howard. Although Freedmen's is now open to white as well as Negro patients, all but a few of its patients are Negroes. Furthermore, there is a tendency in some parts of the Negro community to look upon Freedmen's as the Negro's own institution and to oppose any change in its operations which might jeopardize this status.

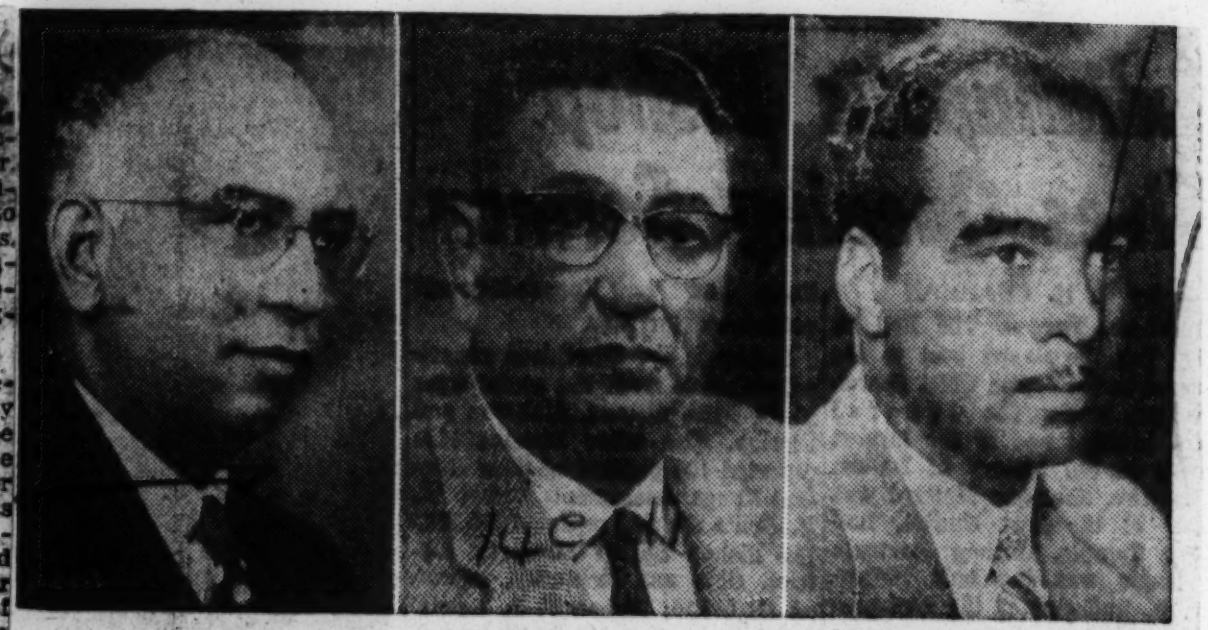
In our opinion such a point of view is mistaken. Freedmen's surely ought to be a symbol of modern medical science rather than remain an unsightly reminder of the Reconstruction period following the Civil War when the institution was founded to care for former slaves.

Dr. Kenneth Clark On Howard Board

WASHINGTON, D. C. — Howard University officials announced Monday the election of Dr. Kenneth B. Clark, New York City educator and psychologist, to the University's board of trustees. Dr. Clark will serve as an alumni trustee, succeeding Mrs. Juanita Howard Thomas of Washington, D. C.

Dr. Clark, who holds two degrees from Howard, is a faculty member at the College of the City of New York and associate director of the Northside Center for Child Development. He was graduated from the College of Liberal Arts at Howard in 1935 and from the Graduate School a year later. He also holds the Doctor of Philosophy degree from Columbia University.

Dr. Clark, with his wife, Dr. Mamie Phipps Clark, received a joint Howard Alumni Achievement Award in 1957 for distinguished post - graduate service in psychological research and civic activities.



THREE OUTSTANDING Howard U medical men will play active roles in the commencement and alumni festivities beginning May 31 at the university. Dr. W. Roderick Brown, jr., Pittsburg, will be principal speaker at the alumni banquet. Dr. Carter L. Marshall, New Haven, Conn., center, will serve as master of ceremonies of the banquet to be held June 2, and Dr. Rutherford B. Stevens, New York City, right, will deliver the June 4 Honors and Oath day address to the graduating class.

DOROTHY MAYNOR TOM MBOYA

To Be Honored by Howard

Miss Maynor, a soprano, and Mboya, Kenya political leader and legislator, will be awarded honorary degrees from Howard University at graduation exercises Friday. Miss Maynor will receive a doctor of music degree, Mboya a doctor of laws. Also being honored are Lloyd A. Hall, technical director of Griffith Laboratories in Chicago, doctor of science, and Henry J. Cadbury, director of the American Friends Service Committee, doctor of humane letters.

Medical Alumni To Hold Banquet

Members of the class of 1934 will celebrate their 25th anniversary and the class of 1924 its 35th year. Members of the class of 1909, celebrating their 50th year in medicine, and the graduating class of 1959 will be guests of the Alumni.

The new pre-clinical and medical research building at Howard University will be inspected for the first time by many of the alumni when they return for the 1959 commencement festivities, beginning May 31. The first medical building was erected in 1869 and the new ultra-modern facility was completed and dedicated in September 1958.

With the completely renovated building and the new wing located at Fifth and W Streets, Northwest, it has been possible to increase the enrollment of students, from 75 to 100, with amle facilities for student teaching and research.

Dr. W. Roderick Brown, jr., of Pittsburgh, Pa., will be the principal speaker at the Banquet. He was educated in Wayland Academy of Virginia Union University, Richmond, Va., the University of Pittsburgh, and received the M. D. degree from Howard University in 1923.

An attending physician at the Pittsburgh State Tuberculosis Hospital since 1935, Dr. Brown was an instructor in Medicine at the University of Pittsburgh from 1948 to 1958.

In 1950 Dr. Brown received the Alumni Award from Howard University for "Distinguished Achievement in Medicine," and the same year Virginia Union University conferred upon him its Alumni Award for "Distinguished Public Service."

Dr. Carter L. Marshall of New Haven, Conn., will return to Washington to serve as master of ceremonies at the Banquet. Born in Washington, D. C., Dr. Marshall attended Williams college, where he became a member of Phi Beta Kappa. He received the M. D. degree at Howard in 1924.

HONORS DAY SPEAKER

Dr. Rutherford B. Stevens of New York City will deliver the address to the medical graduating class on June 4 at the Honors and Oath Day program in the main auditorium of the medical school. Dr. Stevens graduated in Chemistry at Howard University in 1932 and did post-graduate work in chemistry at Howard and the University of Pennsylvania.

Prior to entering thestudy of medicine he was employed at Howard University in the Department of Biochemistry for three years. He received the M.D. degree at Howard in 1939.

Advisory Council on Education, National Association for Mental Health, Inc., and the National Association of Universities.

He has been decorated by the Governments of Panama and Ethiopia.

Real estate, valued at $53,623.98, from the more than $100,000 estate of the late Roy S. Bond, attorney and fraternal leader, was turned over to Howard University last week.

In addition, the university has been given law books valued at $500; an interest in property at 525 Sanford Place valued at $2,337.82; and an interest in the 83 shares he owned of the Boetneker Building, 14 E. Pleasant St., valued at $2,645.98.

COUSINS, WHO threatened to sue when the will of Mr. Bond, giving them $250 each, was probated, accepted the bequests.

They included Mesdames Mary Etta Stewart, Eleanor Peaco, and Dora Presbury.

The administration account also shows that Lloyd Peters has received the $250 willed to him: the Monumental Lodge, the pictures and paraphernalia in his office: and the Sharp Street Methodist Church, seven chairs.

MRS. LORETTA WALLACE DUCKETT, long time secretary to the late attorney, has received a life interest in property at 525 Sanford Place, worth $3,162.18; a life interest in 14 E. Pleasant St. $3,579.02 and jewelry worth $825.00

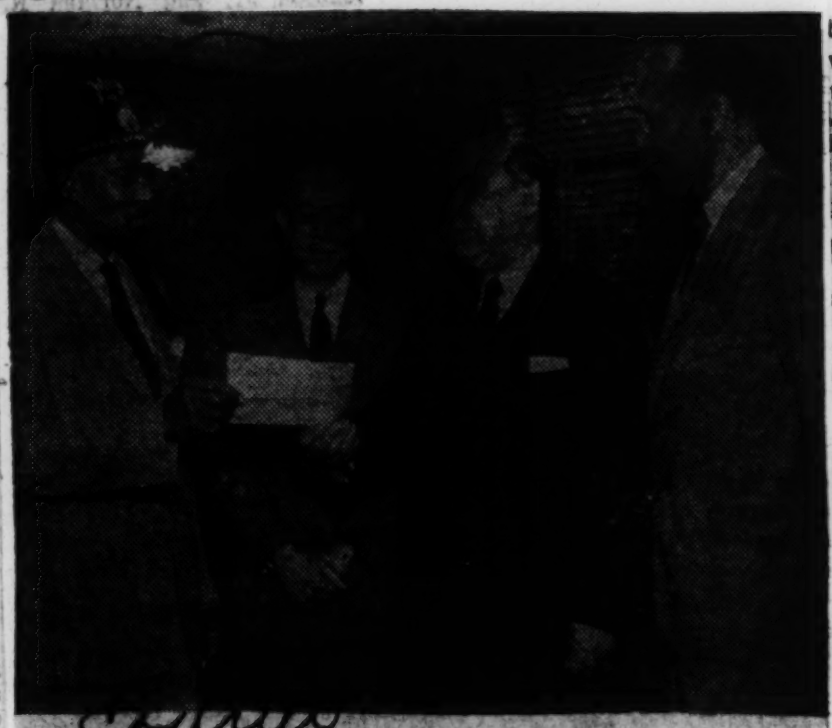
A bequest of $1,000 to Fairview African Methodist Church in Harford County, has also been filed.

The properties deeded to Howard University include those at:

2029 Madison Avenue, 1218 Pennsylvania Avenue, 644 Pitcher St., 1218 Division St., 603 Gilbert St., 1800 Etting St., 1802 Etting St., 1143 N. Carrollton Avenue; 1610 Madison Ave., 1237 Division St., and 1539 Division St.

The account shows that administration costs and other expenses have amounted to $20,228.9.

Mrs. Duckett and the First National Bank are executors.



$7,000 for Howard—Among the grants for research made by the Shriners during the 1958-59 school year was an award of $7,000 to Howard University. 7 Howard U. Temporary Buildings Called Firetraps by Johnson

Evening Star

Washington D.C.

Seven temporary buildings on the Howard University campus were called "actually dangerous to life" by Dr. Mordecai W. Johnson, university president, in testimony released today.

Dr. Johnson told a House Appropriations subcommittee the buildings lack sprinkler systems as fire protection.

His statement came during subcommittee hearings considering new fiscal year budgets of the Departments of Labor and Health, Education and Welfare.

The structures involved were constructed in 1917 and include a gymnasium and buildings used by the department of art, liberal arts and the School of Music.

Upper Floors Barred

"I would say they are practically firetraps if they are those buildings put up on an emergency basis," observed Chairman Fogarty.

Dr. Johnson replied: "The building in the place where the Home Economics Building would go is such a firetrap that we have shut off the second and third floors without using them and are keeping the building going for the use of the first floor only."

Mr. Fogarty said: "This is a bad condition."

The president referred to Miner Hall, built in 1870, the ground floor of which is used by the Student Union. The two top floors are sealed off.

The basement is used for workmen's shops and storage space. Although of brick exterior, it is considered a fire hazard, with rickety stairs and wooden interiors. This is the site of the proposed Home Economics Building, which would have been constructed early in the coming fiscal year, if Howard had not been caught in the administrations' general ban on new construction, because of the condition of the budget.

Opposite Miner Hall is Temporary Building B to the east. This is used by the liberal arts groups, the School of Music, miscellaneous service rooms and some offices. This two-story building is war surplus, with its floors, stairways and wainscoting all of wood.

Six Tempos Gone

The university would like to see all these firetraps demolished. In the postwar years it has gotten rid of six temporary buildings, all wooden war surplus, officials recalled.

Chairman Fogarty asked why there are no construction funds in the current budget. Dr. Johnson replied:

"We asked for them, Mr. Chairman, and hoped for them, but we understood a general Government-wide policy precluded any consideration of them for the coming year."

The chairman asserted: "They have stopped your program right in its tracks as far as this budget is concerned.'

Now under construction on the campus is an auditorium-fine arts building—a $2.8 million project. This is expected to be completed about the end of the year.

In the planning stage, in the hands of the architects and engineers are a home economics building and a physical education for men building. The university has the money for planning, but none for construction.

Plans Outlined

Dr. Johnson told The Star that under the university's long-range master plan, these buildings are planned:

1. A physical education building for women.

2. A women's residence hall, because the university has now reached the limit of its space in supplying dormitory facilities for woman students.

3. A classroom building to be used by the College of Liberal Arts and Graduate School. While the university is well equipped for the physical sciences, it needs facilities for the humanities and social sciences.

4. A Student Union building to aid in public order and morale.

5. A woman's gymnasium.

6. A warehouse service building. The president said by buying for a whole year instead of piecemeal, this would save large sums for supplies.

7. A men's dormitory, because here tagain the limit has been reached in facilities in this field.

8. A social work building.

Now 36 Buildings

Dr. Johnson declared that anticapated savings when the master plan is realized would reach as high as $5 million.

There is now a total of 36 buildings on the campus.

Officials emphasized that every effort is being made to combat the fire hazard. Precautions include additional fire extinguishers and special measures. A special safety committee under the chairmanship of Prof. Stephen S. Davis, professor of mechanical engineering, watches the danger spots.

The officials said the firetraps are use so as to reduce to the minimum the hazard that exists. But they would feel much beter if the master plan was in effect.

Dr. Johnson estimated that around $11.6 million would be required to erect the most urgently needed group of buildings in the program.

"When you get the Howard University plant finished, you will have a $40 million investment there," the president told the subcommittee. "It is prima facie to me that if you are going to make the proper use of that $40 million plant, the thing to do is to have three semesters a year, the summer semester supported in the same way as the autumn semester and the spring semester, and with the same quality of education available and the student giving just as much time to it."

Merger Data Being Studied

Howard, Freedmen's Views Awaited

Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare Flemming is expected to inform Congress shortly of his views on the terms of a proposed merger of Freedmen's Hospital with Howard University.

The university's president, Mordecai W. Johnson, has just sent to Secretary Flemming a report of his board of trustees on the proposed merger, it was learned today. This is now being studied by the Secretary and his staff. It was prepared by the university's executive committee and the board of trustees.

If he approves the provisions, Secretary Flemming is expected to prepare an official agreement to transfer the hospital to the university. Congress would be asked to enact appropriate legislation.

Forecasts Solution

Hearings of the House Appropriations Subcommittee considering the new fiscal year budgets of the Departments of Labor and Health, Education and Welfare, made public today, touched briefly on the merger. Secretary Flemming told the subcommittee he was confident a solution to the merger problems will be worked out.

"As soon as they have been worked out, we will renew the request for legislation which would make this transfer possible," he testified.

It is understood the report sets forth what Howard would be prepared to offer Freedmen's employes in tenure, benefits, pay and other factors under the merger. The 650 Freedmen's employes are under Civil Service and enjoy a relatively high level of pay and benefits. The 500 Howard University employes directly affected have a comparatively lower level of pay and employe benefits.

The problem is to mesh the two sets of employes, their pay and benefits into a new unity.

The university, a private institution, largely Government supported, is without Civil Service coverage.

HOWARD SEEKS NO FUNDS FOR NEW CONSTRUCTION

BY LOUIS LAUTIER

WASHINGTON, D. C. (NNPA)—No funds for construction are included in the Federal budget for Howard University for the fiscal year beginning July 1, hearings before the House Departments of Labor and Health, Education and Welfare, they it the hearings were made public Friday.

The question of the striking out of building funds from the university's request, as well as the denial of funds for 32 positions by the Federal Budget Bureau, was first raised while Dr. Arthur S. Flemming, Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare was testifying on the appropriation requests for his agency.

"Howard University shows a decrease in positions of 32 from what you asked the Bureau of the Budget for," remarked Representative John E. Fogarty, of Rhode Island, subcommittee chairman.

"They are not going to be happy with striking out their building program, are they?" he asked.

GOVERNMENT WIDE POLICY

"No," replied Dr. Flemming. "I am sure that is the case. Again, it simply conforms to the Government-wide policy on construction."

Mr. Fogarty later asked Dr. Mordecai W. Johnson, Howard University president, why there were no construction funds in the university's budget.

"We asked for them, Mr. Chairman, and hoped for them," Dr. Johnson replied, "but we understood a general Government-wide policy precluded any consideration of them for the coming year."

Mr. Fogarty wanted to know how would the denial of building funds affect the master construction plan the House Appropriations Committee and the university officials agreed upon 10 or 12 years ago.

Dr. Johnson told him that "it will congest and constrict and hurt because we have now arrived at the maximum enrollment for the College of Liberal Arts. We have 13 wooden buildings on the campus, most of which are actually dangerous to life."

Howard U. Is Seeking New President

By Milton Viorst
Staff Reporter

The Howard University Board of Trustees is looking Mordecai W. Johnson who is scheduled to retire at the end of the current academic year.

Johnson will be 70 years old in January and in his 33d year as Howard's president. When he reached the mandatory retirement age of 65 in 1955, the Board of Trustees named him to a new five-year term.

He disclose his decision to the Board last April with the comment that he felt he lacked the energy to apply to new tasks, according to Lorimer D. Milton, chairman.

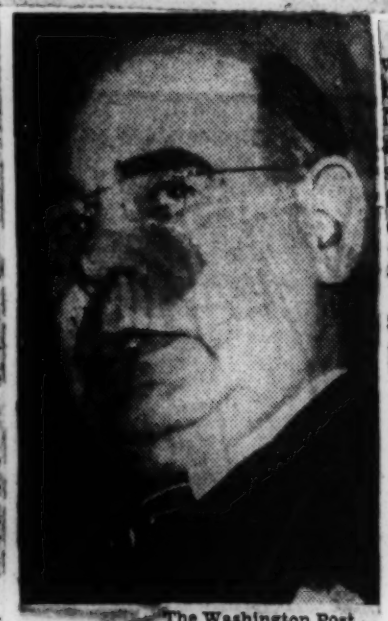
Milton said the committee would take its time and mnght ask Johnson to serve longer if a choice is not made by June. He said there appeared to be no possibility, however, of Johnson's taking on another long term.

Johnson, a tall and dignified Baptist minister, was named to the presidency in 1926 when the University was in a shaky state. A 20-year educational plan he set into motion almost immediately directed the University toward national recognition.

Its annual appropriation from Congress — $218,000 in 1926 — was $4.6 million last year. The value of its physical plant has grown from $2 million to more than $30 million in the same period.

Enrollment is at 6000 and is expected to increase by 2000 in the next five years. Its reputation attracts students from Africa, Europe and the Far East. Its schools of medicine, law and engineering and its other graduate facilities have had a strong influence, particularly in the American Negro community.

Milton said the trustees, though aware of the crumbling educational barriers to Negroes, are looking for a man who will not change the direction that Johnson gave to Howard.



The Washington Post

... leaves after 32 years

In a Congressional hearing last February, Johnson said:

"The State universities in 12 Southern States have of late, and little by little, opened their doors to Negro students . . . In the course of time . . . a substanital number of Negro scholars will work in the faculties of these universities, side by side with their brothers of the majority. . .

"Until that time comes, however, there is one place in this Nation where the people of the United States have come near to an unequivocal and substantial expression of their highest will toward the Negro minority—Howard University."

About two-thirds of Howard's student body comes from the Southern states and the District.

Milton said that Howard's principal obligation remains to the Negro youth of the Deep South. He said the trustees see no time in the foreseeable future when Negroes will march in such numbers into Universities in the North and South that Howard will be superfluous.

Milton said the University will continue to be influenced by Johnson's philosophy that Negro students who are poor and the products of inferior schools must have the educational opportunity that residence requirements deny them at public colleges, and where costs preclude their attendance at private universities.

Besides Milton, an Atlanta banker, the members of the selection committee are the Rev. Howard S. Anderson of Scarsdale, N. Y.; Richard W. Hale Jr. of Chestnut Hill, Mass.; Judge Myles A. Paige of Brooklyn, N. Y.; Dr. Charles H. Garvin of Cleveland; Dr. Peter M. Murray of New York and Herman B. Wells, president of the University of Indiana.

Minton said the committee has requested suggestions from members of the Howard faculty on who should succeed Johnson.

Dr. Johnson— In Russia To Tour Schools

Special to Journal and Guide

WASHINGTON, D. C. — Howard University President Mordecai W. Johnson left the United States Friday for a month-long tour of European educational institutions, including a two to three-week visit of schools and social agencies in the Soviet Union. President Johnson will return to the university Dec. 8.

Dr. Johnson is visiting Russia at the invitation of the Union of Soviet Societies for Cultural Relations with Foreign Countries. Also on Dr. Johnson's itinerary are visits to the Scandinavian countries and France.

DR. JOHNSON'S trip was approved by the University's Board of Trustees at the group's October meeting. He is accompanied by Mrs. Johnson.

Plans to retire from HU in June

—Dr. Johnson

Dr. Johnson to quit HU on June 30

WASHINGTON

Official announcement that Howard University trustees are searching for a successor to Dr. Mordecai W. Johnson, president for the past 33 years, was made this week by the University public relations department.

Dr. Johnson, now in Russia on the first leg of a month-long tour of educational institutions in Europe, advised the trustees last April that he desired to retire at the end of the current college year, June 30, 1960.

However, there had been no official confirmation of this by Dr. Johnson or the trustees until this week.

UNIVERSITY officials said a Special Committee of the board of trustees had been appointed to canvass the field and to recommend a highly qualified person to be Dr. Johnson's successor. Dr. Johnson will end thirty - three years as president of the Hilltop institution come June 30.

He will celebrate his 70th birthday in January. In 1955 when Dr. Johnson reached the mandatory retirement age of 65, the board of trustees reappointed him to a new five-year term.

Last April when Dr. Johnson advised the executive committee of the board of trustees of his determination to retire at the end of the present college year, the veteran educator indicated that he felt he could not continue at the strenuous pace necessary for the university post any longer.

He urged the trustee chairman and his associates of the executive committee to take all needed steps to provide for his successor.

THE BOARD chairman, Lorimer D. Milton, president of the Citizens Trust Company, Atlanta, Ga., was named as head of the committee to find a new president.

Other members of the special committee are the Rev. Howard Stone Anderson of Scarsdale, New York; Dr. Richard W. Hale Jr., of Chestnut Hill, Mass. Judge Myles A. Paige of Brooklyn, New York; Dr. Charles H. Garvin of Cleveland; Dr. Peter Marshall Murray of New York City and Dr. Herman B. Wells of Bloomington, Indiana.

One of the first steps of the committee has been to seek suggestions and recommendations from the members of the faculties of the University regarding the names and qualifications of persons to be considered for President Johnson's successor.

Dr. Johnson was called to the presidency of Howard University in 1926, at a time when the school's fortunes were at a particularly low ebb.

Its physical plant was run down, it was encountering ever-increasing opposition from Southern Congressmen in its annual attempts to secure Federal budget appropriations and only two of its eight schools were accredited.

These problems, bad enough in themselves, were made even more formidable by the fact that Dr. Johnson was the institution's first colored president. Undaunted, he was able to secure sufficient backing in Congress to enable passage of legislation which made the university's annual federal grant (which now exceeds $3 million) permanent.

DURING HIS 33 - year administration the school's enrollment has climbed from 2,155 to more than 4,000; its budget has moved from $956,000 to nearly $6 million, its faculty has nearly tripled to almost 450.

New buildings have included a library, power plant, a school of engineering and architecture, college of dentistry and pharmacy, five women's dormitories and one for men, and three recitation halls.

All of its schools have won accreditation and full - fledged schools of graduate study and social work have been established.

SIXTY-NINE years of age, Dr. Johnson is a native of Paris, Tenn., a graduate of Morehouse College and the University of Chicago with A. B. degrees; a M.A. from Harvard University and a divinity degree from the Rochester Theological Seminary.

Prior to being called to Howard Dr. Johnson served as a professor of English at Morehouse, Student secretary of the International Committee of the YMCA and pastor of the First Baptist Church, Charleston, W. Va.

He was awarded the Spingarn Medal in 1929 by the NAACP and received the honorary degree of doctor of divinity by Howard University in 1923. In addition to his reputation as a school administrator, Dr. Johnson is recognized as one of the foremost orators in the country.

Howard Offers Workshop In Consumer Education

Washington Star 7-7-59

WASHINGTON, D.C. — What every family should know about credit buyng, financial planning, purchasing real estate and buying habits as they affect family stability will be part of the curriculum of a two-week consumer education workshop at Howard University, scheduled to begin July 20, the workshop is open to the public.

It is supported by a $1,000 grant from the Elizabeth G. Rohr Fund. The $1,000 gift was contributed to the fund by the Consumers Union, Mt. Vernon, N. Y. 7-18-59

Expert consultants, including one from the Consumers Union, will address workshop participants. They represent legal, business and civic organizations, as well as government and welfare agencies. In addition, four field trips are scheduled which will provide an opportunity for participants to see these institutions in operation.

Dr. Ruth B. Jefferson, associate professor of home economics, is workshop director, assisted by Mrs. Lydia J. Rogers, instructor of home economics. Sessions will be held in the lecture hall of the Home Economics building, through August 1.

Three of the speakers will discuss the value of consumer education and how such knowledge can be applied to family economics. James E. Mendenhall, educational director of Consumer Union, will discuss how a family's values can be changed through consumer information; and Mrs. Falicia Schiller, marriage counselor at the Washington Legal Aid Society, will discuss how family stability may be affected by its understanding of consumer economics. Homer Davis of Hogdon Brokers of Washington will discuss sound financial planning for families.

"Credit and the Consumer" will be the subject of an address by Economist Emma Holmes, U. S. Department of Agriculture and editor of Family Economic Review. The do's and don'ts of buying real estate will be discussed by an appraiser, Dr. Rapheal Urciolo, who is also a Washington attorney.

Three discussions in the area of consumer problems will be led by Leland S. McCarthy, managing director of the Better Business Bureau; Wallace Campbell, director of the Washington office of the Cooperative League of the United States; and Dr. Thomas E. Posey, marketing specialist of the International Cooperation Administration.

Mrs. McCarthy will explain the Better Business Bureau's function in the community. Mr. Campbell will discuss current economic problems, and Dr. Posey will discuss consumer problems in undeveloped countries.

Some 30 persons, including homemakers, teachers and social workers, have already registered for the workshop. To date the registrants represent the District of Columbia, seven states, Haiti and Honduras. Registration will continue through July 17.

The grant to the Department of Home Economics at Howard is the first made by the Rohr Fund, which was established last year by the League of Women Voters of Montgomery County, Md. to increase citizen knowledge of public affairs. Elizabeth G. Rohr was president of the Montgomery County League at the time of her death in April 1958.

Washington representative for the Consumers Union, Mrs. Rohr was named in 1946 to the Consumer Advisory Committee of the Council of Economic Advisers to the President, and was appointed in 1947 as executive secretary of the National Association of Consumers. She also served as price panel coordinator and assistant consumer relations adviser to the Office of Price Administration.

Freedmen's official praises Howard U.

Afro-American Baltimore, Md. A3
Sat. 5-2-59

WASHINGTON — Howard University, supported by federal funds, has served as the capstone of medical education for colored people — and will continue to do so — for quite a little bit."

Dr. R. Frank Jones, medical director of Freedmen's Hospital made this observation last week during hearings on appropriations for the hospital conducted by the house appropriations subcommittee.

The doctor's statement also was a partial answer to Rep. Melvin R. Laird's question as to why the Federal Government should bear teaching costs in the hospital. instead of residents of the District of Columbia.

HOW DOES Freedmen's differ from Wisconsin General Hospital, which is connected with the University of Wisconsin at Madison and financed with state funds? the Congressman asked.

The Wisconsin Republican noted that residents of the Badger State feel support of the hospital is a state responsibility.

"In this particular situation," declared Representative Laird, "the citizens from all over the United States are paying for the teaching costs involved in this particular hospital."

The Congressman also asked whether the residents of the District would not like to assume the cost.

"UNLIKE THE University of Wisconsin, which has largely students of Wisconsin," Dr. Jones commented, "Howard University has less than 10 per cent of Washington medical students.

"It serves the nation, as it were, and has done so for many many years, and has served international areas also. The British Isles particularly have quite a number of their students within our fold.

"In the aspect of teaching, the university represents really the nation. We should like to look upon it as a national university for medicine and it has so served."

DR. JONES further pointed out that Howard has graduated over half of the nation's colored physicians. He added there were less than a dozen colored students studying medicine in all other universities except Howard and Meharry Medical College.

The Congressman also was informed by James F. Kelly, budget officer for the Department of Health, Education and Welfare that the Government has assumed a special responsibility to Howard.

He explained that Howard makes education opportunities available to colored students who have previously been excluded from state - supported universities by southern states. Teaching facilities at Freedmen's, he added, are primarily adjunct to Howard.

20 High School Pupils to Embark On 8 Weeks' Science Research Here

Washington Post Times Herald Sun. 6-21-59
Washington D.C.

For 16-year-old Horace Shamwell of 5049 East Capitol st. se., as for many another high school science whiz, summer had become the time to bend your straight-A mentality to an office boy's job and be grateful for the money.

But starting Monday Shamwell, 14 other Washington high school honor students and five from out-of-town schools will get paid for a more fitting challenge: eight weeks of intensive college-level scientific research at Howard University.

A $14,320 grant from the National Science Foundation will enable the Howard faculty to plunge the boys and girls, all 10th and 11th grade students the past year, into the work of a research laboratory and such formidable subjects as "ultraviolet spectra of rare earth benzoates."

It is part of the foundation's $1,600,000 attempt, through programs at Howard and 104 more colleges, to help curtail what educators have been calling America's "waste of human resources."

Of the Howard grant, $5300 will go toward paying the students $30 a week plus a lump sum of $25 for transportation.

Dr. Herman R. Branson, chairman of Howard's physics department and the program's director said:

"One very brillians boy, 15, years old, wants to go to college but won't be able to without earning money this summer and next. If we hadn't been able to offer him the allowance, he couldn't have joined the program."

The students will participate in the advanced research at Howard's laboratories, will learn to repair electronic apparatus and even blow glass (to repair tubing, etc.).

Geographically the group selected ranges from Giuliano Gnugonli, 17, an Italian native who has lived at the Italian Embassy with his father, an embassy employe, for 10 years; to Herbert H. Denton of Little Rock, Ark., who during Little Rock's school crisis went to school in Hot Spring, Ark.

Intellectually, the group's interests range far beyond science. Adrianne Blue of 1625 Primrose rd. nw., a student at Coolidge High School, is a commercial art and journalism hopeful as well as a science fair winner. Paul T. Hooper of 3713 35th st. nw., has been studying Russian and German at St. Alban's and Spanish on the side.

Others who will start work Monday are Donn E. Carr of 1631 N. Buchanan st., Arlington, Gonzaga High School; Claudette Conley of 1417 Bangor st. se., Dunbar; Marcia Douglass of 521 21st st. ne., McKinley; Ann E. Eager of 4322 42d st. nw., Immaculata, Norman A. Eisenberg of 5117 New Hampshire ave. nw., Western; Gloria Mills of 834 5th st. ne., Dunbar.

Also Iris Lipkowitz of 3111 Patterson pl. nw., Wilson; Joel I. Shulman of 1200 Mississippi ave. se., Anacostia; Donald Treacy of 1416 Montague st. nw., Gonzaga; Lloyd Ferguson of 1235 46th st. se., McKinley; Lawrence Nivert of 514 Ridge rd. se., Eastern; William F. Eagleson of 3818 20th st. ne., Windsor Mount School (Lenox, Mass.); Nora L. Greene of 118 Markley Neck rd., Glen Burnie, Md., Bates; Wesley L. Harris and Joseph M. Jackson of Richmond, Va.

$24,425 To Howard To Press Research

Guide Norfolk, Va

WASHINGTON, D. C. — Grants totaling $27,425 have been awarded to the Department of Chemistry at Howard University for three research programs during the 1959-60 academic year. P 7

A grant of $20,300 from the National Science foundation will support a two-year study of molten systems. Chief investigator is Dr. Kelso B. Morris, professor of chemistry. A $5,325 grant for a two-year program in electrochemical research has been made by the Research corporation, with Dr. Joseph B. Morris, assistant professor of chemistry, as chief investigator.

The Research corporation also has made a renewal grant of $1,800 for the continued study of organic compounds. This study, in progress, since February, 1958, is headed by Dr. R. Percy Barnes, professor of chemistry. Dr. Kelso Morris will supervise basic research which will investigate con-ductivities and densities of certain molten systems. In previous research, he studied electric conductance in molten salt systems.

Howard U Canvasses For Prexy

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Howard University officials this week announced the appointment of a Special Committee of the University's Board of Trustees, to canvass the field and to recommend a highly qualified person to be the successor to Dr. Mordecai W. Johnson, who will come to the end of his 33rd year as president of Howard University on June 30, 1960.

At that time Dr. Johnson, by his own request, is scheduled to retire. As early as April of this year, just prior to the annual meeting of the Board of Trustees, Dr. Johnson advised the Chairman of the Board of Trustees and his associate executive officers, of his determination to retire and requested them to take all needed steps to provide for his successor.

The committee, which has held several meetings under the chairman, Lorimer D. Milton, president of the Citizens Trust Company, Atlanta, includes:

One of their first steps has been to seek suggestions and recommendations from the members of the faculties of the University regarding the names and qualifications of educators.

made it clear he will retire on June 30, 1960, at the expiration of his 33rd year as president. He had attempted to retire several years ago, when the board persuaded him to remain in the post for another five years. The designated time limit expires next year, and the president expects to step down.

After holding several meetings, the trustees appointed a special committe to canvas the field and recommend a successor.

Howard alumni to honor 3 at Charter Day rites

WASHINGTON

Three distinguished alumni of Howard University will be honored March 2 when Howard observes the 92nd anniversary of its founding.

Two programs will feature the annual Charter Day observance. A university-wide assembly is scheduled for 11 a.m. at Andrew Rankin Chapel, Sixth St. and Howard Pl., NW; while the annual Charter Day banquet will begin at 8 p.m. in Baldwin Hall, Fourth and College St., NW.

The recipients of 1959 awards for distinguished post-graduate achievement include Federal Judge Herman E. Moore of St. Thomas, VI., Dr. William H. Sinkler of St. Louis, and Mrs. Ruth B. Spencer of Washington, D.C. Acceptance remarks will be made by the honorees at the banquet.

Judge Moore, who retired in November, 1957 following 18 years as judge of the U.S. District Court for the Virgin Islands, will be cited for public service.

Dr. Sinkler, who has served as medical director of Homer G. Phillips Hospital in St. Louis since 1941, will be cited for proficient hospital administration.

Mrs. Spencer, who is an outstanding civic leader, will be cited for leadership in community affairs.

JUDGE MOORE, who is a native of Jackson, Miss., received his early education in New Orleans. He enrolled at Howard in 1910, and was awarded the Bachelor of Arts degree in 1914 and the Bachelor of Laws degree four years later.

Dr. Sinkler was born in Somerville, S.C. and received his early education at Haines Industrial Institute, Augusta, Ga. He was awarded the Bachelor of Arts degree at Lincoln University (Pa.) in 1928 and the Doctor of Medicine degree at Howard in 1932.

Mrs. Spencer, who is a native Washingtonian, received her early education in the D.C. public schools. She was graduated from the College of Liberal Arts in 1936 and from the Graduate School with the Master of Arts degree in history the following year.

Howard To Honor Three Alumni On Charter Day

WASHINGTON, D. C. — Three distinguished alumni of Howard university will be honored next month when Howard observes the 92nd anniversary of its founding.

Two programs will feature the annual Charter Day observance at Howard. A university - wide assembly is scheduled for 11 a.m. March 2 at Andrew Rankin Chapel, Sixth street and Howard Place, northwest; while the annual Charter Day banquet will begin at 8 p.m. in Baldwin Hall, Fourth and College streets, northwest. Alumni Achievement Awards will be presented at the assembly, which is open to the public.

THE recipients of 1959 awards for distinguished post-graduate achievement include Federal Judge Herman E. Moore of St. Thomas, V. I., Dr. William H. Sinkler of St. Louis, and Mrs. Ruth B. Spencer of Washington, D. C. Acceptance remarks will be made by the honorees at the banquet.

Judge Moore, who retired in November, 1957 following 18 years as judge of the U. S. District Court for the Virgin Islands, will be cited for public service; Dr. Sinkler, who has served as medical director of Homer G. Phillips hospital in St. Louis since 1941, will be cited for proficient hospital administration; and Mrs. Spencer, who is an outstanding civic leader, will be cited for leadership in community affairs.

JUDGE Moore, who is a native of Jackson, Miss., received his early education in New Orleans. He enrolled at Howard in 1910, and was awarded the bachelor of arts degree in 1914 and the bachelor of law degree four years later. Admitted to the Massachusetts Bar in 1919, Judge Moore practiced law in the New England state for one year before moving on to Chicago, where he was engaged in private practice until 1939.

Dr. Sinkler was born in Somerville, S. C. and received his early education at Haines Industrial Institute, Augusta, Ga. He was awarded the bachelor of arts degree at Lincoln university (Pa., in 1928) and the doctor of medicine degree at Howard in 1932.

DR. SINKLER served his interneship and residence at St. Louis City hospital from 1932 to 1936. He was appointed to his present post in 1941. In addition to serving as medical director of Phillips, Dr. Sinkler is instructor in surgery of the School of Nursing, and associate director of surgery for the hospital. He also serves as assistant professor of surgery at Washington University School of Medicine and visiting surgeon at St. Mary's Infirmary.

Mrs. Spencer, who is a native Washingtonian, received her early education in the D. C. public schools. She was graduated from the College of Liberal Arts in 1936 and from the Graduate School with the master of arts degrees in history the following year.

Mrs. Spencer served on the faculty at Bates high school from 1937 to 1944, rising from instructor in social studies to assistant principal during her brief tenure. It was on leaving her teaching position in 1944 that she and 12 other civic minded Washington women formed the Baker's Dozen, an organization which has received national acclaim for its work with youth in the mid-Washington area. In 1952 the group established the Baker's Dozen Youth Center, which is now a Red Feather agency.

Howard Univ. To Offer Ph.D Degree In Physics

Program Is Second Above Master's Level To Be Established At Howard

Washington, D. C. — Howard University officials announced today that a program leading to the Doctor of Philosophy degree in the field of physics will be offered by the University beginning in September. The program will be the second to be offered at Howard above the level of the Master's degree. A Ph.D. program in chemistry began in 1955, and the first two students to receive doctoral degrees were graduated in June, 1958.

Five general requirements have been listed for students seeking the Ph.D. in physics by Dr. Charles H. Thompson, dean of the Graduate School. They are 1) completion of two full years of residence in the Graduate School, 2) passing of examinations in two foreign languages, 3) admission to candidacy for the degree, 4) acceptance for the dissertation submitted for the degree by the Graduate Council, and 5) passing a final oral examination.

Among the students expected to enroll for the Doctoral program will be three recipients of graduate fellowships under the National Defense Education Act. Howard was one of 48 universities which received NDEA grants for Doctural candidates when the program was instituted in February. NDEA fellows will receive $2,000 for the first year of study, $2,200 for the second year, and $2,400 for the third year. In addition, they will receive $400 a year for each dependent.

Labor Leader Protests University's Anti-Union Policies

Carey Quits Howard U. Board

WASHINGTON — James B. Carey, president of the International Union of Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers AFL-CIO, has resigned from the Board of Trustees of Howard University, Washington, D.C., in protest over that University's anti-union policies.

In a letter today to Dr. Howard Stone Anderson, chairman of the board of trustees, Carey gave as the major reason for his resignation the university's failure to "consummate a collective bargaining with Local I of the State, County and Municipal Workers AFL-CIO, after more than two years of negotiations."

Carey declared it was his belief that Dr. Mordecai Johnson, president of the University, had "deliberately misled" the Board of Trustees' executive committee "on the question of Local I and the true nature of the controversy, while the executive committee itself was unduly willing, in my opinion, to be misled."

CAREY, A MEMBER of the Howard Board of Trustess for more than a decade, declared, "I find I can no longer condone the Board of Trustees' procrastinations and evasions in this matter."

He recalled that in June 1958 "complete agreement on a written collective bargaining contract was reached" but was "subsequently disrupted when a responsible official of the university made last-minute and surreptitous alterations in the document before sending it to the local union for signing."

Carey then added, "More than almost any other honor or public trust bestowed on me in my career, I have deeply appreciated my election to the Howard University Board of Trustees and felt, moreover, a vigorous and constant sense of responsibility to the university, its present and its future. It is for these reasons that I so profoundly regret the necessity for this resignation and the circumstances within the Board of Trustees that make it unavoidable."

Three Howard Alumni To Be Honored

Three distinguished alumni of Howard University, shown above, will be honored at Charter Day exercises on March 2 for their achievements as leaders in their communities and country.

Howard U. marks 92nd anniversary

WASHINGTON

Two programs will highlight celebration of the 92nd anniversary of the founding of Howard University during Charter Day exercises at the University Monday.

The annual Charter Day assembly will be held at Andrew Rankin Chapel, Sixth St. and Howard Pl., NW, at 11 a.m., and the annual Charter Day banquet at Baldwin Hall, Fourth and College Sts., NW, at 8 p.m.

Dr. William Stuart Nelson, dean of the university, will be the principal speaker at the assembly. His subject will be "How Great the Price of Freedom."

DEAN NELSON returned to his post at Howard earlier this month following a six-month stay in India. While abroad he studied the continuing influence of Mahatma Gandhi in India and several other Asian countries. His talk is expected to cover the current situation in India and its relation to the current movements toward freedom by other foreign countries.

Judge Moore will be cited for public service, Dr. Sinkler for proficient hospital administration and Mrs. Spencer for leadership in community affairs.

Tulsa Attorney To Represent Howard U.

Dr. Mordecai W. Johnson, president of Howard University, Washington, D. C., has appointed a Tulsa lawyer to serve as official representative for the school at the inauguration ceremonies for Dr. Alvin Graf Henneke, president of Tulsa University.

Attorney Hubert H. Bryant, honor graduate of the Howard Law School, will serve on behalf of the trustees and faculties of the school at the event, which is scheduled for April 16.

Resignation Points Up Conflict On Freedmen's Hospital Status

By Phil Casey and Luther Jackson
Staff Reporters

James B. Carey, president of the AFL-CIO International Union of Electrical Workers, criticized Howard University's labor policies as "indefensible" and resigned yesterday as a member of the University's board of trustees.

In a letter to President Mordecai Johnson and the trustees, Carey said the trustees have not yet signed a collective bargaining agreement after more than two years of negotiations with Local 1 of the State, County and Municipal Workers, AFL-CIO. The local seeks a contract for about 30 cafeteria workers at Howard.

Charging that the board of trustees has indulged in "procrastinations and evasions" in this matter, Carey said: "In short, I believe the University's union relatios policy at the present time is indefensible from any point of view and most certainly from the point of view of organized labor."

President Johnson refused comment on the resignation, saying he had not yet received his copy of the letter.

Carey charged also that "a responsible official of the Uniresponsible official of the University" disrupted the union contract agreement last June by inserting "last minute and surreptitious alterations in the document before sending it to the union local for signing."

Expressing "profound regret" at the necessity of resigning, Carey said he "deeply appreciated" serving as a trustee and has felt a "vigorous and constant sense of responsibility to the University . . ."

Lengthy Conflict

His resignation and criticism add to the confict between Howard and the union local. Howard has cut off negotiations, accusing the union of making false and detrimental charges.

It is the same union local with which Howard will have to deal if Freedman's hospital is transferred from the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare to Howard, as has been proposed in recent years. Local 1 claims to represent most of the hospital workers.

Under an HEW-sponsored bill in Congres, unsuccessful so far, Freedmen's would be transferred to Howard and a new hospital would be built, replacing Freedmen's. HEW wants to get out of the business of operating the community hospital. Howard already has full use of Freedmen's as the teaching arm of its Medical College and therefore would not profit by the transfer unless a new and more modern hospital were built to replace Freedmen's.

In urging this transfer, HEW is proposing to release the Nation's only Federal community hospital to a private institution that draws 54.8 per cent of its budget from HEW.

Civil Service Status

The bill and the labor problem are complicated further by the fact that Local 1, claiming to represent a majority of Freedmen's 654 non-professional workers, is worried about loss of Civil Service status for the workers if the hospital is transferred to Howard. It is pressing HEW for retention of full Civil Service status for the workers, when and if the hospital is turned over to Howard. The union has called for an inquiry into Howard's ability to operate the proposed hospital, suggesting alternatives to the transfer which would leave the employes with their Civil Service status intact.

The bill seems certain to be introduced for the third time. for Sen. Wayne Morse (D-Ore.) has said he will "present the bill myself if nobody else does."

Opinion is divided as to whether Howard would benefit substantially from the elimination of the present dual administration of the hospital by Freedmen's and the Medical College. The advantages of single administration by Howard, some feel, would be offset by the financial burden of ownership. Thirty per cent of Freedmen's patients are indigent. Last year the average total billing to paying patients was only $23.10 a day, more than $5 less than the estimated cost of operating a hospital bed.

Civil Service has agreed, after two years of discussion, to permit Freedmen's employes to retain some of their Civil Service benefits, including retirement and group insurance. In addition, Howard has agreed not to reduce the salary levels of Freedmen's employes, but it cannot match the job security afforded by Civil Service tenure.

Morse insists that HEW and Howard have gone far enough, that Government employes must assume the risk of being shifted into private employment. But Howard is not wholly a privat institution, although governed by its own trustee board.

Filled Postwar Need

Howard and Freedmen's were founded in the post-Civil War period when Washington's huge former-slave population was in desperate need of educational and hospital facilities. Since 1869 Freedmen's has helped Howard turn out about half of the Nation's Negro physicians. For the past 51 years the two institutions have shared the rambling, obsolete hospital on Howard-owned land at 6th and Bryant sts. nw.

But if Howard and Freedmen's are brought closer together through ownership by the University, the new hospital is obliged by the bill to "become progressively self-supporting." Freedmen's employes fear this additional uncertainty, or as one of them put it:

"For 94 years we have been leaning on the crutch of the Government for our financial support. We don't want that crutch taken away until we are sure that we can walk."

3 Colleges Are Allotted Fellowships

(Approval of the first group of graduate fellowship programs under the new National Defense Education Act was announced yesterday by the Department of Health, Education and Welfare.

Programs at three Washington area universities—Catholic, Howard and the University of Virginia—were among 48 approved at various colleges and universities. Programs provide for 160 fellowships at a cost of $400,000 for 1959-60. The law contemplates 1000 fellowships in 1959-60 at a cost of $4.5 million. Funds for them will be asked in a supplemental budget request.

The program sets stipends of $2000 a year, plus $400 for each dependent, for first-year graduate students working toward doctor's degrees. Nominations for fellowships are still to be made by the schools.

Approved were two grants at Catholic University for the study of statistics and probability theory, two at Howard for physics, and three at Virginia for economics of underdeveloped countries.

Court rulings recognize God, Dr. Johnson tells Y luncheon

WASHINGTON

"The Virginia Supreme Court of Appeals calls off completely the whole effort against integration in public schools," said Dr. Mordecai W. Johnson, president of Howard University.

He hailed recent state and Federal court decisions in the Virginia desegregation battle as recognition of "God in the Constitution of the United States."

"God got Himself in the Constitution," Dr. Johnson told hearers at a luncheon meeting Tuesday at the 12th Street YMCA.

"The very basic ground of America is moral. God is the Holy Father of every human being. Christianity is revolutionary in the first degree."

ATTEMPTS TO curb the power of the court and hysteria over the threat of Communism were described by Dr. Johnson as "tragic confessions" of ineptness and inadequacy on the part of American leadership.

"We are prepared to believe that one Communist will take over Howard University if we don't get him out," he said. 'That's a tragic confession."

He said the revolutionary doctrine of Christianity armed America with the power and might to lead mankind to great heights of achievement.

"IF OUR PRESIDENT, Congress, departments and ambassadors believed it that way, this would be the greatest country on earth,' Dr. Johnson said.

He stated that fear plays 'havoc with human relations at home and American policies abroad. "This nation is scared of one tenth of its population that is colored in a world where two-thirds of the peoples are black, brown and yellow."

He said, "God is love. When you go to loving, you cease to be you. You have become a vehicle for the power of God."

DR. JOHNSON urged ministers "to hold a candle in the dark" for all of America.

"The humblest man that has the least candle has something that all men need," he said.

Installation was conducted by the Rev. E. Franklin Jackson, president of the D.C. NAACP.

Nine members of the student body showed definite interest in the prospect of becoming commissioned officers in the Navy after graduation and were administered the Flight Aptitude Tests. These tests are designed to indicate the ability of an individual to learn the science of flight.

Final results on the tests will not be known until the papers are electronically graded, but it is to be hoped that Jarvis will be well represented in Naval Aviation by members of this group.

JOHNSON MEMORIAL JUNIOR COLLEGE

Johnson Memorial Junior College Seen Making Steady Progress

Amez School Offering Opportunity For Education In Delta Section Of State

Batesville, Miss., July 14—This delta section of Mississippi has begun to see a ray of hope for the children of the 3100 hundred families of Panola County to further their education with the rapid progress being made at Johnson Memorial Junior College, located here. Many of the graduates of the high schools in the county quit school after graduation, due to the fact that very few families can afford to send them away to college.

The school is located on a wide tract, near the heart of the town. It is supported by the Christian Education Department of the A. M. E. Zion Church. The Rev. G. Sims Rivers is the president. The curriculum offers a well rounded course for students who want a junior college education. It also serves to aid those students who have to make up work in order to graduate from high school. The hours have been so set up until most students have the privilege of attending evening classes. The campus joins the campus of one of the two high schools in the county.

The administration building houses all of the classes and the office of the president. It is a modern building and also has a well equipped kitchen, which enables the students to enjoy hot lunches. Aside from offering regular junior college courses, special classes in typing, commercial education and music appreciation are offered.

Plans are now in the architect's office for adding a new wing and it is expected that dormitory facilities will soon be available. The President's home is now being renovated. It is also expected that the Department of Education of Mississippi will soon place the school on its accredited list.

Dr. M. A. Camper New President Of Kittrell

Journal & Guide Sat. 7-4-59

Norfolk Va,

KITTRELL, N. C. — Dr. M. Arthur Camper, Hampton pastor, was elected last week president of 50-year-old Kittrell College. He was chosen on the recommendation of the committee on reorganization. The trustees made the selection.

14e(1)

Dr. Camper has the bachelor of arts and the bachelor of divinity degrees from Lincoln (Pa.) University and the doctor of divinity degree from Kittrell. He is widely known in educational and religious circles, having been acting principal of Carver school, Salem; and principal of Hollis school, Hollis, Va. He has also served as pastor of Ebenezer AME Church, Roanoke and Bethel, Hampton and other churches.

THE NEW president has also studied at Virginia State College, the University of Virginia and Hampton Institute.

Dr. Camper succeeds the Rev. Dr. R. W. Wisner who resigned the presidency. Dr. Wisner was honored with the title of president emeritus as a tribute for his ten years of leadership at the college. Dr. Wisner is to assume the pastorate of Bethel Church in Hampton in July.

DR. CAMPER'S wife, Mrs. Annie Mae Cooper Camper, is well trained in commerce. The Campers are parents of four children, Margaret, Cecil, Kenton and Gary.

Dr. Frederick Tolbert, dean of students, and a Yale University graduate, who holds a master's degree from the Pacific School of Religion of California, was elected vice president. Dr. Tolbert has served as dean of Shorter College in Arkansas.

AT THE CLOSE of the summer school it is expected that the dean of the college, the Charles Alston, director of music and head of the fine arts department, is completing his work for a master's degree from Penn State College.

J. E. SMITH, who holds his master of science degree in education from Northwestern, is the director of the high school division of the junior college which includes the 11th and 12th grades.

Six members of the faculty of Kittrell College are taking advanced work in well - known institutions, such as the University of Wisconsin, Pennsylvania, North Carolina College and Columbia.

The fall term begins on Sept. 14.

Two Dorms Dedicated

Knoxville Observes 84th Anniversary

Courier Pittsburgh Pa.

14e(1)

KNOXVILLE, Penn.—Knoxville College students and faculty have just completed a week celebrating the institution's 84th anniversary which included the commemoration of the founders, a rededication to those principals which the founders held high and the dedication of two new dormitories.

The founders' convocation was held Tuesday evening at 5. The address, "A Source of Light," was delivered by Andrew J. Taylor, Knoxville College graduate, 1922, of Greensboro, N. C. Having retired recently Mr. Taylor served 30 years as an assistant national director of interracial service of the Boy Scouts of America.

Honorary degrees LL.D. and LH.D., respectively, were conferred upon Frank H. Davis, a member of the board of trustees, and Mr. Taylor. Both were cited for their long support of the college and for their sacrificial contributions to humanity.

Immediately following was the dedication of the dormitories for the men and women students. The men's dormitory was named as a memorial to the late Dr. Ralph W. McGranahan, past president (1899-1918 and 1935-36) of the college. Dr. McGranahan's daughter, Mrs. Isabel M. Donaldson, and her husband and sons from Beaver, Pa., and Deland, Fla., were present for the dedication as were other notables. The five-story women's dormitory will bear the name of Knoxville College president, James A. Colston. Present to share Dr. Colston's honor were his wife, daughter, Jean, and a sister, Mrs. Callie Logan of Orlando. Fla.

HARRISON WANTS TO RESIGN LANGSTON UNIVERSITY PRESIDENCY

Black Dispatch

From all corners of the state and nation Langston alumni will converge on the university campus Saturday, October ., to enjoy once again the old memories held down through the years since they attended the institution. They will enjoy a football game by two top teams, the Langston Lions and the Northeastern squad. Other alumni activities will include the traditional breakfast dance and an alumni scholarship benefit. There will be breakfast in the University dining hall and open house exhibits will take place in the residence halls and various departments. Presiding for the first time at a general meeting will be Clarence C. Cooper, serving his first time as president. Mrs. Almeda Parker is the association secretary.

But, amidst all the gaiety and fun of meeting old acquaintances, it must not be forgotten that the most outstanding problem facing the Langston Alumni Association this year is their feeling concerning the next president of the institution. President G. Lamar Harrison, who has headed the school for the past twenty years, has publicly stated that he wants to resign the position when he can. He has made his desires known to the board of regents who will select the next president. We are aware of the fact that the alumni association cannot pick the next head of the institution, but their influence should be felt and some definite steps should be taken by the organization to help the board in its deliberations concerning the matter.

The school being located at Langston, Oklahoma, would give some an excuse to believe that the business of the institution is the business of the people of Logan county, but this is far from the truth. The university is loved and cherished by all Negroes of the state. It is a state school and its business is state business. All citizens throughout the state should let their voices be herd concerning any major business of running the institution. The new head should not be selected by the influence coming from Logan county only.

We understand that board rulings now do not require that the head of the institution be a Ph. D., but must have a master's degree in school administration, and some experience. We feel that the state of Oklahoma can furnish good material for the position and we all should begin to think with this in mind. Langston university needs a young, vigorous, well-trained man to insure its future growth and expansion. The institution needs a man who has loved the school from away back; a man who received his education there and who would be dedicated to its wholesome growth and development. It needs a man with sufficient know-how and contact to get the job done. We can think of several names ourselves who are graduates of the institution and who have had valuable experience since, that could be considered for the job. We don't believe the board of regents should have to search other states for the proper man this time, but should select an Oklahoma man for this important Oklahoma position.

The presidency of Langston university is not a political plum anymore as it has been in years past before selecting Harrison for the position. If the right man is selected he will have ample time and opportunity to do the position justice. If he is a man who is a citizen of Oklahoma and a graduate of the institution, his heart will be in his efforts and he will have the backing and support of his friends and acquaintances throughout the state. We feel the opportunity is here for the only Negro institution of higher learning in the state to come into its own. But these things do not come for free. Every alumnus visiting the campus October 24 and those who do not make the trip, should let their voices be heard in the selection of the new president. A committee could be appointed to study the situation. Contact should be made with the board of regents and let them know that as interested alumni of the institution we all are interested in the next man to be selected. A ship never drifts to shore; it has to be pushed in.

Danforth Grant For LeMoyne

MEMPHIS, Tenn.—Trustees of The Danforth Foundation in St. Louis, Mo., have approved a grant of $10,000 for LeMoyne College here, according to Dr. Hollis F. Price, president of the college.

The college has until Jan. 1, 1960, to raise another $10,000 to match the foundation grant. Both sums must be added to LeMoyne's invested endowment.

LeMoyne received a similar grant from the foundation last year, after matching it with money from another gift.

The foundation has set aside $200,000 to be used in helping colleges increase their endowments.

LeMoyne College Receives $20,000

Facility's Endowment Fund Totals $210,000

Gifts totaling $20,000 have been received for the endowment fund of LeMoyne College, Dr. Hollis F. Price, president, said yesterday.

Dr. Price said the college received $10,000 from the Danforth Foundation in St. Louis and a matching gift of $10,000 from the American Missionary Association of New York City.

LeMoyne was founded by the missionary association and receives much of its financial support from that source.

The gifts increase the college's endowment to $210,000.

$210,000 Endowment At LeMoyne

MEMPHIS, Tenn. — LeMoyne College's endowment has been increased $20,000, bringing the total endowment to $210,000, it was announced this week by President Hollis F. Price.

President Price said the first $10,000 was a gift from the Danforth Foundation with headquarters in St. Louis, Mo., and that this sum was matched by the American Missionary Association. LeMoyne is under the wings of the American Missionary Association and receives much of its financial support from the AMA.

The AMA also supports such schools as Tougaloo in Mississippi, Talladega in Alabama, Fisk University in Tenn., Dillard University in New Orleans and Huston-Tillotson in Texas.

Lincoln Institute Plans To Survive Integration

FRANKFORT, Ky. — While it has felt the impact of the Supreme Court's outlawing of racial segregation in public schools of 17 Southern states, Lincoln institute battles to expand to meet the need of special groups.

Opened in 1912, Lincoln Institute during the four-year period of school desegregation has experienced a growing decline in enrollment, from 581 to 436. On the other hand, operating costs have increased from $231,718 to $251,620.

Lincoln, dubbed a unique high school for Negroes, is located at Lincoln Ridge, Ky., near Simpsonville. The school has 16 buildings and occupies 416 acres of lands. Its present value is $2,000,000.

Despite its problems of trying to survive, Lincoln institute is by no means at a standstill in its outlook for the future. Instead, the institution has mapped out a program which, if carried out, will keep its doors open.

NOT AGAINST INTEGRATION

According to Lincoln officials, the school's fight is not against integration. It is a fight to expand, to improve, to forge ahead, confident of ample room in integrated education for a school catering to special needs of a segment of Negro youth.

Whitney M. Young, president of the institute since 1934, describes this segment of Negro youth as consisting of three groups, in the main:

1. Brilliant Negroes who prefer the superior academic advantages of Lincoln institute, hence enroll as a matter of free choice between it and an integrated school.

2. Pupils who drop out of integrated schools because they can't quite make the grade there, but harmonies that prevail a Lincoln.

3. Negro boys and girls too retarded for academic achievement, but highly receptive to training in the skills of industry, agriculture, the trades, and the home.

UNIQUE FEATURES

Lincoln institute also boasts this characteristic: No other public high school in Kentucky compares with it as to setting, purpose and tradition. It is the only high school located on a campus amid college-like cultures and atmospheres.

The Lincoln faculty, which consists of 30 members, includes 17 with master's degrees. The institution is accredited Class A by the State Department of Education and the Southern Asociation of Colleges and Secondary Schools.

In addition to these features, Lincoln affords practice teaching for education majors at Kentucky State college, 31 miles east of Simpsonville at Frankfort. Thirty-three of these cadet teachers completed required training in the term just ended.

Lincoln has served 9,290 Negro pupils since 1912 and has graduated 906 in the last 10 years. It will celebrate its 50th anniversary in 1951.

LOCAL DISTRICTS

Prior to the nullification of the old "separate but equal" doctrine in public education by the U.S. Supreme Court, Lincoln was the high school to which local districts all over Kentucky could send pupils at the district's expense.

Founded as an outpost of Berea college, Lincoln institute during the 48 years of its life received interest and philanthropic support from white friends.

Before the Civil War the anti-slavery founders of Berea college admitted Negro students freely. This practice continued until the Day Law of 1904 imposed racial segregation in every public and private classroom in Kentucky, at all levels of education.

Lincoln opened as a high school and two-year junior college. The junior college was dropped in 1928 during hard times. The high school that remained then opened the door to boarding pupils from Kentucky school districts without Negro high schools.

The institute passed from private to quasi-public administration in 1928. It became wholly under public authority in 1947, when trustees deeded it to Kentucky. Lincoln became an administrative unit of Kentucky State college in 1952, when the State Board of Education surrendered control to the board of regents of KSC.

Lincoln has a wide variety of financial support. Since 1947, the state has spent $950,500 in plant improvement. Local districts that financed boarding pupils have paid $605,346 since 1947, and federal support has amounted to $52,650.

Income from old-time private interests, now consolidated in the Lincoln Foundation, a trust, is used to underwrite enrichment programs costing up to $3,000 annually.

OTHER SOURCES

Pupils financed by their local districts pay an additional fee. Boarding pupils pay $6 a month; day pupils, $3, and private pupils on their own pay $50 a month.

Also, the state underins operating costs with annual appropriations. In the four-year period since segregation was outlawed, annual sums have been: $138,400, $145,400, $150,400, and $168,310. This support for the 1959-60 term is set at $175,795.

The school also gets profits from a farm and Grade-A dairy of 54 cows, which last year netted $4,289.

During the 1958-59 term, Young states that without legal compulsion, 32 districts sent him 302 pupils at costs to the district ranging from $14.17 to $27.22 a month.

SUMMER PROGRAM

The Lincoln campus has numerous activities during summer months. Such an activity is a six-week summer school for pupils who complete requirements in three years instead of four, and for pupils who come from all over the state to make up deficits.

The campus has also been developed into a great conference and recreation center. Lincoln also circulates books to rural elementary schools in its area.

Young, his staff, board and friends are making plans to thrive rather than wither. Their combined pressure will be brought before the Legislature for a new trades building estimated to cost $333,690.

Such a building, if obtained, will become the nucleus of a plan to perpetuate Lincoln in the public school system for the enduring future. With this building, and the plan in operation, President Young foresees an immediate increase of 200 pupils and an assured total of from 500 to 600 a year from now on.

GRAND PLAN

The grand plan is to build a combination academic and trades program around 22 basic industrial units. Twelve of these units are now offered: maintenance engineering, prenursing, metal work, home economics, radio technology, television repair, agriculture, electronics, dairying, drafting, clerk-typist and refrigeration.

The 10 units hoped to be added are auto mechanics, shoe repairing, stenography, bookkeeping, machinery, barbering, beauty culture, baby sitting, truck gardening, and building construction.

A synchronization of the academic program to these basic industrial units is the aim of the plan. Such a program would enable a senior, depending upon the type of study pursue, to prepare for immediate employment, trade certificate, high school diploma or college admission.

Key Lincoln Post Goes to W. M. Phillips

LINCOLN UNIV., Pa.— The election of Walter M. Phillips, Philadelphia attorney, as president of the Lincoln University Board of Trustees, has been announced.

He succeeds Lewis M. Stevens, former member of Philadelphia City Council, and until recently Secretary of Labor and Industry in former Governor Leader's cabinet.

Mr. Phillips will be serving as the presiding officer of the university's board and has chaired the committee seeking a new administrative president to succeed Dr. Horace Mann Bond.

Dr. A. O. Grubb, a member of the university faculty, is continuing to serve as acting president.

Mr. Phillips, a graduate of Harvard Law School, was city representative and director of commerce in Mayor Clark's cabinet, 1952-55. He is executive secretary of the Delaware River Basin Advisory Committee, and was formerly a member of the Delaware River Port Authority.

Lincoln Graduates Establish Fund For Future Yield

THE LINCOLN University Class of 1959 has carved for itself a strong place in the history of the university. At its graduation exercises, the class announced that instead of the traditional type of class gift, it was establishing a 15-year investment program for the school.

Warren H. Goins, class president, stated that the class had voted to establish an investment account to be given to the university as a gift. Each of the 50 members of the class had pledged to contribute a minimum of $10 each year to the account to be invested in a multi-million dollar investment trust. All dividends from the investment will be reinvested for the purpose of buying additional shares.

If all the members of the class contribute steadily over the next 15 years, well over $7,500, including the reinvested dividends, will have been invested.

BASED ON the experience of the past 15 years, and assuming a corresponding growth of the economy, the total holdings of the gift will probably exceed $20,000 by 1974, the class' 15th anniversary. The holdings would be less if the economy declined for a substantial period of time.

It is believed that this gift is the first of its kind to be presented to a predominantly Negro school by its students. The scroll which accompanied the presentation lists the names of the individual class members who have taken the pledge, and the citation reads in part:

"Our college education has been an investment made possible by many people—our parents, Lincoln, and ourselves. It is, we feel, an investment that will pay endless dividends to ourselves, our family, to Lincoln and to the communities in which we serve. As the Class of 1959, we want to make tangible our appreciation. It is hoped that our pledge to Lincoln . . . will be the start of other such class contributions."

PATTERSON & CO. of New City was the brokerage firm who designed and who will administer the program. John T. Patterson, senior partner, is an alumnus of the university. Joining Dr. A. O. Grubb, university president, Mr. Patterson told the class: "Few college graduating classes have participated in giving as significant a class gift as you have. Your place in the history of this great institution is assured, since there can be no other class that was the FIRST to give such a gift to Lincoln... you have set a precedent."

Dr. Grubb added to these remarks by expressing the "sincere appreciation of the university for your unprecedented generosity and magnificent gift." "You may rest assured that we at Lincoln will never forget this occasion in our history," he continued.

The university, located outside the city of Oxford, Pa., was established in 1854 as the Ashmun Institute, and became the first institution of the world chartered to provide higher education for "colored youth." In 1866, at the close of the Civil War, the school became Lincoln University, and adopted new and extended goals and enrolling students "of every clime and complexion."

Among its distinguished graduates the university numbers Dr. Kiwahme Nkrumah, prime minister of Ghana, and Dr. Nnamdi Azikiwe, premier of Eastern Nigeria. Its present student body is interracial and international in scope. Countries represented beside the United States are the Bahamas, Federation of the West Indies, Nigeria, Virgin Islands, Sierra Leone, Georgetown, Somalialand, Israel, Khana, Korea and Uganda.

Officers of the class of 1959 are Warren H. Goins (N.Y.), president; Frank W. Berry Jr. S.C.), vice president, Sige Burden (Pa.), secretary, and Timothy C. Mayers Jr. (Ga.), treasurer.

Lincoln U. Graduates To Hear Lester Granger

Call Kansas City Mo.
Fri 5-29-59

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo. — Lester B. Granger, New York, executive director of the National Urban League, will be speaker for the 83rd commencement exercises to be held at 2:30 p.m., Sunday, May 31, in Clement Richardson Fine Arts Bldg. at Lincoln university.

This will be the first regular session commencement to be held in the new auditorium which was dedicated in October, 1958.

Approximately 110 seniors will be presented as candidates for degrees by Dr. Oscar Chapman, dean of the college. The degrees will be awarded by Dr. Earl E. Dawson, president.

The speaker, a past president of the National Conference of Social Work, and an outstanding sociologist, is a graduate of Dartmouth college and is a holder of honorary degrees in Humane Letters and Law from Dartmouth, Columbia, Oberlin, Virginia State and other insututions.

He is a trustee of the Hampton institute, of the New York School of Social Work and of the University of the State of New York.

Mr. Granger has traveled widely throughout this country, the Pacific, South Asia, Africa and Europe, observing social welfare and political conditions, with special attention to conditions in underdeveloped areas. He has written and spoken widely for civic and professional groups on such subjects as racial relationships and welfare conditions in the U. S. and other parts of the world.

As part of the commencement program, Curators' awards will be presented to Miss Sara Jane Spencer, assistant professor of history and to Dr. Walter R. Talbot, professor and head of the department of mathematics.

The President's reception for graduates, parents, alumni and friends will be held on Saturday afternoon from 3 until 4:30 in the President's home on the campus.

14e(1)

SALISBURY, N. C.—A total of $83,205.71 was reported to Livingstone College in observance of the 105th birthday anniversary of the late Dr. Joseph Charles Price, it's founder and first president.

This sum represents the major effort on the part of the AME Zion Church, the faculty, staff and student body in supporting their only accredited four-year institution of higher learning.

THE REGULAR college activities were suspended on Founders' Day, and special services were held on the campus in Hood Seminary Chapel at 10:30 a. m. and in the afternoon at 2 p. m. at the Price Junior - Senior High School.

The morning session was under the auspices of the Student Council and featured addresses by Bobby Greene, vice-president of the Student Council; William Simmons, representing the student body and Professor Elbert L. Harris, faculty representative. Also at this service, monetary presentations were given to the college on behalf of the student body, Hood Theological Seminary and faculty and staff.

FOLLOWING the program, the senior class led the procession to the masoleum of Dr. Joseph Charles Price, where after a short ceremony, a wreath was placed on the tomb by George Tharrington, president of the class in company with Mrs. Josephine P. Sherrill, college librarian and daughter of the founder.

President S. E. Duncan presided at the afternoon service and introduced Bishop W. A. Stewart, a graduate of the college, who delivered an exposition on "The Significance of Founders' Day." Bishop Stewart paid a glowing tribute to Dr. Price and others who have followed him in making Livingstone a beacon in the light of education in America.

He called upon the students, faculty and members of the AME Zion Church to get a new inspiration from the life of the founder and rededicate themselves to the task of making the world better by having been part of an institution founded by a man of so noble a character and such firm determination.

ONE OF THE highlights of this meeting were remarks by Dr. W. J. Trent Sr., president-emeritus, who told of having come to the college in 1890 and having graduated in 1898. He served as president from 1925 until 1958. He related the history of the school and the troubles it encountered in its early years, but is now considered one of the leading church-related colleges in the nation.

Bishop W. J. Walls, senior prelate and chairman of the Board of Trustees, announced that a $250,000 drive was being started to rebuild the auditorium and that a sizable amount had already been subscribed to.

14e(1)

SALISBURY, N. C. — A grant of $15,000 to Livingstone college has been approved by the Danforth Foundation, President S. E. Duncan announced recently.

This "institutional grant" is to be matched by new money by January 1, 1960, and is given specifically for the purpose of strengthening the college in one or more areas recommended by the Southern Association.

In a recent meeting of the board of trustees, New York City, the grant was enthusiatically received, and plans and arrangements for matching it were formulated.

Courier, Pittsburgh, Pa. Sept. 26-59

NEW ORLEANS — Louisiana State University in New Orleans began classes with some 2,200 students enrolled. Of this number 408 are Negroes who are attending classes without incident.

Integrated by Federal Court order in September, 1958, LSUNO enrolled 60 Negroes students for its first term.

Several of this year's Negro enrollees told The Courier that all facilities at LSUNO are integrated except the cafeteria. Negroes, however, may purchase sandwiches and soft drinks at a newly opened student lounge on the campus.

Throw Acid At White Meharry Professor

NASHVILLE—A white professor at Meharry Medical College told police Thursday someone lurled acid at him at his home and minutes later he received a threatening phone call.

Dr. Theodore C. Green, 59, said the incident occurred Wednesday night. He said he answered his door, heard a "swish" and choked.

Dr. Green said the bottle of acid came at him, but only a few drops of the liquid touched him. Then the Meharry professor said he received the telephone call from the unidentified man, who warned "a student is out to get you."

Dr. Green said he thought the man was a Negro, but he couldnt be sure.

Chief of Police D. E. Hosse, Nashville, told the Defender that he "had no clues as to the identity of the attacker as yet, but we are still investigating.

Early this month the eyes of the nation focused on the Meharry campus with the report of the tragic murder-suicide case involving two medical students. With commencement only weeks away, pretty, red-haired Anna Louise Jackson, 24, gunned to death classmate Vernal Joseph Roberts, jr., 27, before shooting herself and taking her own life by hurtling down a 100-foot embankment in Roberts' 1958 automobile.

Friends found Roberts' nude body sprawled on the floor of Miss Jackson's apartment. He had a .32 calibre bullet wound in his chest. Miss Jackson, of Greensboro, N.C., was brought into Hubbard hospital emergency room with fatal injuries suffered in the crash.

Roberts, of Galveston, Texas, is believed to have wanted to end the love affair. His wife, Barbara, who lived with him in Nashville until two months ago, is expecting a second set of twins and had gone to New York City.

Meharry Gets $200,000 Grant

WASHINGTON — (SNS) — Surgeon General Leroy E. Burney of the Public Health Service this week announced approval of 57 grants totaling $11,235,440 to help build and equip additional health research facilities in 47 institutions in 23 states and the District of Columbia.

They included a grant of $200,000 to Meharry Medical College, Nashville, Tenn., for a medical research building.

MEHARRY MEDICAL COLLEGE

Acid Thrown On Professor In Nashville

(NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP)—Police reported Thursday that an unidentified man threw acid on a white professor at Meharry Medical College Wednesday night at the professor's home. Meharry is a Negro school.

The victim was Dr. Theodore C. Greene, 59, who told police the man called at the Greene home about 11 p.m., threw the acid and ran. Police said he appeared to be a Negro. Officers believe it may have been a disgruntled Meharry student.

The liquid was thrown through the screen door at the Greene hom and a few drops struck the professor on the head. Except for a "stinging" sensation, Greene apparently was uninjured.

Police said a few minutes after the incident, an anonymous telephone caller told Green that "a friend of mine, a student, is out to kill you." The caller then hung up.

City homicide officer W. A. McDaniel said a specimen of the liquid was turned over to Dr. W. J. Clore, county medical examiner. Dr. Clore said it was some kind of acid and would be analyzed for identification.

Dr. Matthew Walker, assistant dean at Meharry, said term examinations were completed recently and grades were distributed this week.

Negro Students Won't Bow To Bias At MSU

'Promised Nothing' To University

MEMPHIS, Tenn. — (Special)— Contrary to reports which have appeared in the daily papers that eight Negro students who registered for classes at Memphis State university had agreed to accept limited integration, the students themselves emphatically denied they made any such promises.

Ralph Prater, who will begin classes on Friday as a pre-medical sophomore, said, "We did not commit ourselves to any segregated policies, and will not tolerate segregation.

"As students at Memphis State university, we intend to work, play and study with other members of the student body so that we will get to know them and they will have an opportunity to know us," Mr. Prater said.

During a conference, Mr. Prater said Dean D. M. Robison suggested that for their own good, the Negro students should not seek to use all facilities at the school which are available to white students. It was suggested that they use special lounges and not use the cafeteria.

TO USE CAFETERIA

"We do not plan to use any certain lounge," the student said. "If we find ourselves with leisure time, we will use the first lounge we get to. We intend to use the cafeteria also when we are on the campus at lunchtime.

Practically all of the Negro students' classes were stacked one after the other so they will be off the campus at dinner time.

Mr. Prater, who has been regarded as a spokesman for the group, said while he did not mind finishing his classes by noon, he did not like the reasons behind the school officials arranging their studies for the morning hours.

ONLY CONCESSIONS

The only concessions he said they made was to not enter the Air Force ROTC course immediately.

"We will follow the suggestion until our lawyers work out something," Mr. Prater said.

"But there is a state requirement which says students should have that training," he explained.

Mr. Prater said he and the other students expect to attend football games in which the school's team is engaged and they do not intend to sit in segregated sections.

Reading from a prepared statement at the conference on Thursday, Dean Robison reminded the students that the university had done everything legally possible to keep them, as Negroes, from studying there.

He told them that he had no personal prejudice against them, but indicated he did not want them at the school.

The school official advised the students to remain away from the campus until classes begin on Friday.

The students who will begin classes at the university in the first integrated program in the city are Misses Rosa M. Blakney, Sammie Lee Burnett, Eleanor Joyce Gandy, Marvis Laverne Kneeland and Bertha Mae Rogers, Luther McClellan, John Simpson and Mr. Prater.

First To Enroll At Memphis U.

Eight colored students, the first to integrate Memphis State University, leave a special "orientation" session after their surprise enrollment at the school, Sept. 10.

It was expected the colored students would register with the white students starting Sept 14, but the university administration decided to admit them earlier to avoid incidents that might occur in the crowds and long lines that mark the registration process. The university dean advised them not to return to the campus until classes start. (UPI Telephoto)

Segregated Seating At Football Games Protested By Negro

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — The president of a Negro civic league says his club will not tolerate segregated seating for eight Negro Memphis State University students at the school's football games.

M. Z. Evers, president of the Binghamton Civic League, said Friday if segregation is enforced at the game, "it could lead to a lawsuit."

We think Negro students at MSU should be seated in the regular student section," Evers said. "We are not going to stand for them being shuffled off to some corner of the stadium."

Memphis State registered eight Negroes for classes last Thursday. They are the first in the history of the formerly all-white school.

Memphis State Moves Quietly, Signs Negroes

Eight Registered On, S|y, Told To Stay Off Campus

MEMPHIS (AP) — Moving with caution, officials of Memphis State have registered the first Negro student in the university's history.

The eight students were signed in and passed through orientation yesterday in a session innocently billed as a plain press conference.

In his orientation lecture, Dean R. M. Robison advised the three boys and five girls to stay off the MSU campus until classes open Sept. 18.

"We gave a great deal of thought to it," he said. "If you have ever witnesses a registration here you will know that the lines are long and people get hot and irritated."

SOME 'RABID'

The dean said extremes of sentiment on the campus include "segregationists who are quite rabid and would like nothing better than to start trouble."

Negro students will have the freedom of the campus, he added, but he urged them to use it cautiously at first.

"I think if we can get by the first few days of classes we can give a very happy situation," he said. "But if there should be an incident it could very well be in the classroom."

MSU officials set up a schedule that seeks to avoid putting the Negroes among crowds of students. They will not have to line up at the campus bookstore, for instance, and their class schedules were arranged to permit them to leave by noon.

Robison said a lounge for the Negro girls was set up next to the dean of women's office. The men will use the browsing room of the library as their lounge, he said.

Eight Students Finally Break Memphis Color Line

By M. L. REID

MEMPHIS — Eight Negro students began classes at Memphis State University Friday morning. None of the violence which was predicted last fall was in evident.

Integration was experienced for the first time in this section of West Tennessee as Negro students sat beside white students from Tennessee, Mississippi, Arkansas and Missouri.

Four of the students were scheduled to enter the institution last year but were kept out when the Tennessee Board of Education granted a request from the president, Dr. J. Millard Smith for a one year delay because he feared violence would erupt if they were

BREAK COLOR LINE

McClellan and Prather both premedical students entered the school as sophomores. The others students and did their best to look inconspicuous as they leafed through freshman bulletins. But there was that noticeable bulge of pistols showing under their coats and the sparkle of handcuffs glaring through their thin Summer suits.

The eight Negro students arrived on the campus a few minutes earlier than the scheduled conference a half hour before classes started at 8 a.m. They were met by the 6 ft. 8 in. dean of students, George Pratt who shepherded them to his office to distribute books which had been purchased for them.

'DON'T WANT THEM'

Asked if he thought Negroes could have entered the school last year in a similar atmosphere Dr. Smith told the Defender, "the people had to be convinced that all legal means had been exhausted in an effort to keep the Negro students out before they would accept integration. I am not against any of the Negro students although I did not want them at Memphis State."

"Coming out of his office every few minutes to glance at students scurrying to various classrooms Dr. Smith said, "I think everything is going to go along alright."

Dean R. M. Robison later told newsmen that "advice" previously given to students was reviewed and one of the Negro students had inadvertantly signed up for a biology class which was reserved for student nurses from Baptist hospital He told the student the course had to be changed.

"I told him it didn't matter what color he was," Dean Robison said, "he could not go in that class with those nurses."

The school catalogue indicated the class was for nurses only and the student was happy to make the change.

At noon Dean Robison said the Negro student had followed the advice that had been given him fairly well "just like the white students have followed the advice we gave them. If they don't they are going to be sent home."

He did not differentiate between rules and "advice."

five are freshmen. All are graduates of Memphis high school.

In the only display by segregationists during the day was one car with a placard saying, "Civil Rights for Whites", drove down the campus with four other cars following with Confederate flags fluttering from their windows. A police car stayed behind them and the car did not reappear on the campus.

Students both white and Negro were more concerned with finding classrooms than in the fact that history of world-wide interest was being unfolded before their eyes.

MSU Registers 8 Negroes With Firm Advice By Dean

By REESE WELLS

Eight Negroes signed up as students at Memphis State University yesterday and left with advice to stay away from the campus until their classes start Sept. 18.

They were registered at Johnson Hall in a surprise move that followed an orientation lecture by Dean R. M. Robison.

The Negroes, first of their race to register in a white institution of learning here, are: Rosie Merrian Blakney, 18, of 369 East Trigg; Sammie Lee Burnett, 19, of 3077 Rochester; Eleanor Joyce Gandy, 18, of 2369 Devoy; Marvis LaVerne Kneeland, 18, of 1268 Dunnivant; Luther C. McClellan, 19, of 1005 North Seventh; Ralph Aubrey Prater, 18, of 1096 Hollywood; Bertha Mae Rogers, 18, of 1210 Effie and John Arthur Simpson, 18, of 862 McComb.

'Opposed To Integration'

"I want you to know right now that I am opposed to integration and it is hardly necessary for me to remind you that we have done everything possible to prevent Negroes from entering this university," Dean Robison told them at the outset of the meeting. "This does not mean that I am prejudiced against you students as individuals."

He pointed out that the Supreme Court has ruled in favor of integration but warned that "social integration cannot be decreed by law."

"... so long as you live and breathe and have your being in Memphis, Tennessee, you should respect the social customs and attitudes of this Southern metropolis."

Whether integration is achieved peacefully will depend greatly on the students, said the dean.

"As the semester progresses it may be said of you that you have extended your best efforts in the direction of good relations —that you have conducted yourselves on an exceptionally high plane; or it may be said that you came here to make trouble, that you brought with you a bad attitude, and that your conduct was atrocious as was to be expected. Which will it be? It is largely up to you."

Advised To Stay Away

Before ending his remarks the dean advised the Negroes that it would not be necessary for them to attend Monday's orientation for new students or Tuesday's registration.

"I am advising you not to return to this campus until classes begin on Friday, Sept. 18. I hope you will heed this advice."

Dean Robison said at the press conference which followed that the early registration was "in the best interests" of the students.

"We gave a great deal of thought to that," he said. "If you have ever witnessed a registration here you will know that the lines are long and people get hot and irritated."

Tells Need For Support Of Methodist Negro Colleges

Chicago Defender 14e(1)
Chicago, Ill
Oct 10 1959
B 3

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — If each of the approximately 9,700,000 members of The Methodist Church would give a penny a month for the denomination's Negro colleges, they could safeguard an investment of more than $15,000,000.

If Methodists do not give a penny a month per capita (or a little more than $1,000,000 a year), then the future of Methodism's program of higher education for Negroes looks dark, indeed.

This is the essence of a bulletin released in early October by the Methodist Commission on Christian Higher Education's committee to study the needs of Negro colleges.

SET GOAL

The Commission on Christian Higher Education and the Methodist Board of Education have set a goal of $1,000,000 for the Negro colleges in an offering to be taken on Race Relations Sunday, February 14, 1960.

"The Methodist Church can determine the future of these institutions by giving $1,000,000 Race Relations Sunday," said the bulletin of the committee. "The $1,000,000 produced through this will call forth additional millions from others who will be impressed with the response of the church."

Thirteen Negro institutions of higher education are related to The Methodist Church. They need immediately at least $6,000,000 for buildings and equipment, and they need additional funds for teachers' salaries, scholarships, and endowment.

OWNS 6 SCHOOLS

The Methodist Church owns completely the properties of six of the 13 schools. This is the $15,000,000 investment that would be safeguarded by the penny-a-month per capita giving, according to the bulletin.

Members of the committee to study the needs of Negro colleges are, chairman, Dr. James P. Brawley, president, Clark College, Atlanta, Ga.; Methodist Bishop J. W. E. Bowen, Atlanta; Dr. A. Hollis Edens, president, Duke university, Durham, N.C.; Dr. Robert H. Hamill, pastor of Wesley Methodist church and co-director of the Wesley Foundation, Madison, Wis; Dr. Russell J. Humbert, president of DePauw university, Greencastle, Ind.; and Dr. Wilis M. Tate, president, Southern Methodist university, Dallas, Tex.

The 13 Methodist-related Negro schools that benefit from the annual Race Relations offering are Dillard University, New Orleans; Bennett College, Greensboro, N.C.; Bethune-Cookman College, Daytona Beach, Fla.; Claflin College, Orangeburg, S.C.; Clark College, Atlanta; Paine College, Augusta, Ga.; Huston-Tillotson College, Austin, Tex.; Philander Smith College, Little Rock, Ark.; Rust College, Holly Springs, Miss.; Morristown (Tenn.) College; Wiley College, Marshall, Tex.; Gammon Theological Seminary, Atlanta, Ga.; and Meharry Medical School, Nashville, Tenn.

Negro Colleges Head Funds List

Received More Per Student Than White Schools

From The Commercial Appeal
Jackson, Miss., Bureau

JACKSON, Miss., April 20.—Mississippi's segregation "watchdog" agency reported Monday that the Negro senior colleges received more per student from the 1958-59 allocation of state appropriated funds for those institutions than did the six white schools.

The figures of the state sovereignty commission showed Alcorn College for Negroes received $747.65 per student to head the list of senior education-al institutions, including those for the whites.

Mississippi Vocational College for Negroes at Itta Bena was second with a per student allocation of $725.09. Jackson State College for Negroes was sixth with $476.47.

The report showed per student allocations to the white senior colleges as follows:

University of Mississippi $675.69, Delta State College $652.54, Mississippi State College for Women, $552.53, Mississippi State University, $454.67, and Mississippi Southern College, $387.10.

MOREHOUSE COLLEGE

Morehouse Given $250,000 By Danforth Foundation For Chair

Dr. Benjamin E. Mays, president of Morehouse College, has announced the receipt of a $250,000 gift to Morehouse by the Danforth Foundation. This gift will be used to endow a chair to be designated, in the area of the social sciences or the humanities. It is the wish of the Foundation that the chair be named for President Benjamin E. Mays.

The late William H. Danforth, who was president of the Ralston-Purina Company of St. Louis, Mo., and founder of the Danforth Foundation, had been a friend of Dr. and Mrs. Mays since 1942, when they attended together the Conference on Religion on the College Campus at Camp Miniwanca, Mich.

The Mays have been invited to the conference annually since that time.

Before Mr. Danforth died (Dec. 24, 1955), he gave Morehouse College the Danforth Meditation Chapel (the only such chapel on the campus of a Negro college), and he was present for the dedication ceremonies on Saturday, March 5, 1955. Mr. Danforth also gave Morehouse $25,000 for scholarships before his sudden death. The Foundation's interest in Morehouse College has continued since Mr. Danforth's death. In December, 1956, the Danforth Foundation contributed $50,000 toward the construction of Morehouse's $836,000 Physical Education and Health Building, which was completed a year later and dedicated in February, 1958.

Harvard Debates Morehouse Monday

Harvard University and Morehouse College will meet in forensic competition as they engage each other in a debate on nuclear weapons development tomorrow, Monday, March 30 in Sale Hall Chapel, Morehouse College campus, at 4:30 o'clock in the afternoon.

Harvard, represented by Kenneth C. Alrich, junior, and Edward Pinkus, senior, will uphold the affirmative side of the question, while Morehouse, represented by Preston Yancey and Boyd Williams both seniors, will debate the negative. Dr. Robert Carney of the Department of Business Administration of Emory University, a critic judge of wide experience, will render the decision. This is the first time that these two institutions have met in debate. For this reason a large number of persons from the city and the University Center will be expected to be on hand for this occasion.

GUIDED MISSILES, MISGUIDED MEN

"Remain Awake," Dr. King Tells Morehouse Graduates

BY MARION E. JACKSON

Morehouse College graduates were challenged to "remain awake," alert and creative through the greatest revolution this world has ever known," in an address by Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., pastor of the Dexter Avenue Baptist Church, Montgomery, Ala.

Dr. King noted that "God is on our side in the positive aspects of this changing revolution and we must keep our moral and spiritual advances with our scientific and technical growth."

"Do not sleep through this revolution, because we are living in an age of guided missiles and misguided men and we may destroy ourselves through misuse of our scientific growth."

Dr. King, who led the Montgomery, Ala., bus boycott and who is an ardent civil rights fighter, made an impassioned plea to the 1959 commencement class as he keynoted the theme that "there have been other revolutions that have been separate and isolated but the revolution that we are currently in has engulfed every country in the world."

DEGREES CONFERRED

Dr. Benjamin E. Mays conferred honorary degrees upon Rev. Horatius Holipheal Coleman, pastor of the Greater Macedonia Baptist Church, Detroit, Mich; James McBride Dabbs, Maysville, S. C. and former president of the Southern Regional Council; and Dr. James A. Colston, president of Knoxville College to 104 members of the class. Bachelor of Arts degrees were conferred upon 74 members of the class. Twenty - seven members of the class earned Bachelor of Science degrees.

Bachelor of Divinity degrees were conferred upon Rev. Otis Moss Jr., and Rev. Frederick Douglas Wallace Jr.

Dr. King's address was heard by a large audience in the Physical Education and Health Building. He pinpointed his theme by taking the text "Remaining Awake Through a Great Revolution."

"The world revolution which involves one billion 600 million people of Asia and Africa, who were enslaved and dominated has brought a change that is sweeping the face of the earth. For where years ago there were only two independent countries in Africa — Liberia and Ethiopia, we have witnessed in in less than ten years the funeral procession of colonialism which has left Great Britain alone with less than 60 million people under its rule in Africa. No longer is the yolk of colonialism gripping Africa and freedom is on the march.

"RADICAL CHANGE"

"This world revolution has caused a radical change in the Negro's evaluation of himself. No longer does he feel inferior to any man. This means that the Negro masses have begun to reevaluate himself and appraise his basic stature in the universe. As a result we have broken through the Egypt of slavery and caused a great revolt in the social and political structure of the world."

Dr. King cited a point of Rip Van Winkle, who slept twenty years. The one thing we ought to remember from this Washington Irving story is that when Rip Van Winkle went to sleep the picture of King George was on the wall. When he awakened there was another George's picture there. The picture of George Washington. There had been a great revolution going on while he slept and there had been change in the moral and social order."

The revolution, Dr. King noted, has been brought about too by an's revolution science and technology. "We have carved highways through the stratosphere for a trip to the moon. This has brought about a geographical oneness and an end to the narrow confines of individualistic concerns to the broader concerns of humanity. This geographical oneness means that our very existence will be determined by our coexistence. It has forcibly demonstrated that our bases in space must be built on the general concerns and understanding that all life is interrelated and we must keep our moral and spiritual advances within our scientific and technological growth.

Dr. King who has been an apostle of non - violence in an atmosphere of southern racial tensions, told the seniors they must be prepared to compete in a society where segregation is fading away.

"Don't set out," he warned" to do a Negro job. If you do you have flunked your entrance examinations in the university of integration."

He noted it was difficult for Negroes to practice good will in the face of some difficulties they meet, including a federal government that is all too show to protect civil rights.

He brought a wave of laughter with the declaration "We've broke loose from Egypt of slavery, we have gone through the wilderness of equality and we stand on the border of the promised land of integration.

In his closing statement to the class, Dr. King told the graduates "If you go home, sit down and do nothing about the revolution which we are witnessing you will be the victims of a dangerous optimism."

Prizes and awards were made by Dr. Brailsford R. Brazeal. They were: Andre Don Hammonds, J. J. Starks' Best Man Of Affairs Award; Clarence William Hampton, J. J. Blayton Prize in Accounting II; Clinton Ransaw Jr., Forbes Athletic Prize; Thomas Elliott Johnson; Homer Littlefield McCall, Alonzo Lester Thomas, Wesley Zergeant Jones, John L. Webb Oratorical Prizes; Lamar Coffield, Jr, Leonard Burton Award; Don Lazaro Clarke, Homer Littlefield McCall, Benjamin E Mays, Debating Prizes; Otis Moss, Jr. The Mathematician Award and Albert Thomas Perkins, Education Scholarship Prize.

Invocation was by Rev. T. C. Lightfoot, pastor, West Mitchell C. M. E. Church. Benediction was by Rev. Walter R. McCall, pastor, Providence Baptist Church.

Student drowns in new pool at Morehouse

The Afro American

p. 16

ATLANTA, Ga. (NNPA)—A new swimming pool in the gymnasium of Morehouse College claimed its first victim Wednesday afternoon, police and school authorities disclosed.

The swimming pool's first victim was listed by school authorities and police investigators as Arlee Russell, 18, a freshman student from Birmingham, Ala.

The apparent drowning occurred while Russell was in a swimming class surrounded by approximately 16 other students, who reportedly heard no type of struggle or call for help from the victim.

The swimming instructor, Dr. James Haines, said Russell was seen at the bottom of the swimming pool by other students who had just finished swimming the length of the of the pool.

POLICE SAID classmates and the instructors administered artificial respiration to Russell, but he was pronounced dead at the scene when the ambulance arrived.

Dr. Haines said the swimming class was divided into the "swimmers" and the "non-swimmers." Haines said Russell was a member of the "swimmers" group.

After swimming the length of the pool and back again, Haines said the "swimmers" group took a breather while receiving more instruction. When the group turned to re-enter the water, one of the group spotted the body at the bottom of the pool.

It wasnot definitely determined whether Russell was a drowning victim or was overcome by a heart seizure while swimming. An autopsy was ordered to determine the cause of death.

ucational Opportunities Seen

"The economic status of the Negro—North or South—will not be materially improved without rapid increase in educational opportunities and the exploitation by the Negro of those opportunities," Dr. Frank Cunningham, president of Morris Brown College, told the Butler Street YMCA Hungry Club Wednesday.

The college head also advised that "much of the responsibility for improving the Negro's preparation for earning a good living and for achieving a good life on the Negro community itself, and that includes each one of us."

Pointing out that "preparation for one's life's work is a cumulative process that begins in earliest childhood and involves the total life of the individual, not only his formal education and training," Dr. Cunningham declared that many children grow up under unfavorable conditions and have more handicaps than his white counterpart.

"If these handicaps are to be more swiftly overcome, we need in the first place to be cognizant of the fact that better preparation for work involves much more than a formal equalization of educational opportunities. For Negroes, as for whites, basic preparation for school and for work occurs within the family, the neighborhood and the community. The habits, the values and the goals that the child acquires provide the basis for his later accomplishments in school and at work. Because of his history, the American Negro is not prepared in the same way as the white population to take full advantage of the economic opportunities that exist. The Negro must alter many of his values before he will be able to cope effectively with his new situation."

DR. FRANK CUNNINGHAM

During the question-answer period which followed Dr. Cunningham's formal presentation, the speaker said that efforts should continue to enroll the Negro in technical schools existing within the South.

Special gusets of the Hungry Club session, over which Dr. John Reid presided, were members of the National Council of Negro Women, Region III, Mrs. L. D. Shivery, director. The NCNW concluded a three-day workshop held at the Butler St. YMCA.

In behalf of NCNW, Mrs. Shivery presented certificates to a number of Atlantans including Dr. Cunningham, Warren Cochrane, Mrs. Geneva Haugabrooks, Dr. Harvey V. Richardson, Mrs. W. A. 61,680 students reported in 56 Negro colleges

In an article "The American Negro in College, 1958-1959" the Crisis presents its 48th consecutive annual educational survey. It is a partial picture since "mixed schools" no longer keep official records of students by race.

Some 56,831 of the total are undergraduates while 2,825 are attending graduate schools. Of those graduated from these schools in June, 6,725 received various Bachelor's degrees and 487 received various Master's degrees. Only seven Ph.D.'s and one Ed.D. were reported to the Crisis, which relied upon volunteer information from registrars and individuals.

Tuskegee graduated 15 D.V.M.'s Doctor of Veterinary Medicine); Howard, 75 M.D.'s, 42 D.D.S.'s and three Ph.D's in chemistry. Meharry graduated 67 M.D.'s.

Howard has the highest enrollment, with 5,959 students; Southern university is second with 4,384; Tuskegee is third with 3,945 and Florida A & M is fourth with 3,133.

Palmer Memorial, Only One Of Its Kind, Enters 58th Year

Pittsburg, Pa

Oct 10-31-59

SEDALIA, N. C. — Fifty-nine years ago, a young girl left Massachusetts to teach in a small town in North Carolina, where she later started the only school of its kind in America. This school, Palmer Memorial Institute, in Sedalia, officially began its 58th-year with a Founders Day convocation in the Wellesley auditorium, Sunday, Oct. 11. Dr. Alphonso Elder, president of North Carolina College, Durham, was the speaker.

Miss Wilhelmina M. Crosson, the school's second president, officiated at the exercises. Atty. C. R. Wharton of Greensboro, president of the board of trustees, gave the charge. Music was furnished by the Sedalia Singers, under the direction of Miss Delores Howard.

The work of Palmer Memorial Institute was started by Dr. Charlotte Hawkins Brown and was named for her benefactor, Alice Freeman Palmer, the first woman president of Wellesley College.

Dr. Brown was born in Henderson, N. C., and in her early years was taken to Massachusetts. There, she completed her educational training and decided to return to the South and teach.

While teaching at a small Congregational Church School, she conceived the idea of her own school. In 1902, Dr. Brown, started this school with the idea of making it a cultural center, closely united with the community.

Through prayer, faith, the help of friends, Dr. Brown has seen Palmer Memorial Institute arise from a tumbled-down shack with financial woes, disastrous fires and other problems to become one of America's finest educational institutions.

Located on the national highway, 10 miles east of Greensboro, this school stands with modern buildings and well-kept grounds; all being a monument to the founder, Dr. Charlotte Hawkins Brown, now in retirement.

DR. BROWN
. . . founder

What sets Palmer Memorial Institute apart from other schools is that it is a finishing school for Negro youth, the only school of its kind in America. It aims to aid the students mentally, morally, socially and physically. It affords each student the opportunity of "A" standard academic training that will enable the graduate to enter any college in the country.

In addition, special attention is given to the personal culture of the student, their genearl development, grooming, manners at home, on the campus and at social affairs. The cultural arts and physical education are also stressed.

It is extremely selective in admitting students and, as a result, the enrollment is divided into small groups over which some teacher is counselor and adviser. The present enrollment is 178 students, representing 30 states and four countries.

The administration of Miss Wilhelmina M. Grosson of Boston, Mass., who succeeded Dr. Brown as president, has seen Palmer Institute ever progressing with improved plant facilities and reputation. Presently, Miss Crosson and faculty members are engaged in a study of academic programs that will augment the science department without altering the aims or objectives of the school. This study is also being designed to aid schools in correcting certain deficiencies their students may have when transferring to other schools.

Palmer Memorial Institute is non-sectarian, however, all students are required to attend church services of their faith.

PRAIRIE VIEW COLLEGE

Dr. Evans To Continue Beyond Retirement Age

Call Kansas City, Mo.

Fri. 5-29-59

PRAIRIE VIEW, Texas. — The faculty and staff of Prairie View A. and M. college turned out Tuesday night—some 400 strong—to pay tribute to Dr. E. B. Evans and to pledge cooperation as he continues past the normal retirement age to serve as president of the college.

Dr. Evans, who is now 65, has been asked by the Texas A. and M. college system board of directors to continue on as president. The reappointment was another of a long list of signal honors bestowed upon the aging college administrator, who has been on the staff at Prairie View since 1918.

Representatives of the faculty planned the banquet occasion which was attended by almost the entire staff of employes and a few visiting friends.

Dr. S. E. Walker was among the special guests and so were the president's son, Edward Jr. and his wife, who reside in Houston. A short and simple program included a statement of the occasion by college librarian O. J. Baker who headed the faculty planning committee.

Dean G. L. Smith presented a bound volume of records of Dr. Evans' achievements, honors and awards, and Jean K. Norris, English instructor, presented a plaque —"a statement of appreciation"— from the Prairie View family.

Speaking briefly and with full emotion, Dr. Evans expressed a feeling of deep gratitude to the faculty. He said "there is only one thing missing, I wish so much that my wife could have been here to enjoy this evening with me." Dr. Evans' wife, Mrs. Lucille O. Evans, died last August of a heart attack. She was 57.

Dr. Evans became president of Prairie View A. and M. in 1946 after serving a distinguished career as college veterinarian, assistant president, extension service leader, and organizer of the Tukegee Institute School of Veterinary Medicine. He is a native of Jackson county, Mo.

During his tenure as president, Dr. Evans has seen the college's enrollment doubled, and buildings and facilities have kept pace with this growth. Among the special services are: the esfablishment of the Agricultural Experiment substation No. 18 on the Prairie View campus, extension of community services through conferences, workshops and short courses, foreign service activities, and continued leadership in education and cultural development of Negroes in Texas.

Prairie View Gets $42,000 To Run Summer Institute

Prairie View, Tex. A grant totaling $42,800 for the promotion of a Summer Institute in Science and mathematics has been awarded to Prairie View A&M College by the National Science Foundation.

Dr. E. E. O'Banion, head of the Science Department at Prairie View was designated as director of the Institute which will cover a six weeks period during June and July 1959. Prairie View was selected by the Foundation along with 254 other educational institutions across the nation. Only seven was located in Texas.

The Institute will offer courses and activities specifically designed to meet the subject matter needs of high school science and mathematics teachers who have been out of college for a number of years. It will provide an opportunity for teachers to learn of recent advances in science and mathematics and to study subjects in which they are inadequately trained.

Funds will be used to provide approximately 40 scholarships to qualified teachers including stipends covering cost of tuition and fees, living expenses and allowances for travel and dependents. Leading lecturers and consultants in the fields will be invited to participate.

The director of the Institute, Dr. O'Banion, is a leading scientist in his own right. The veteran department head has served as national president of Beta Kappa Chi Scientific Honorary Society and has participated actively in programs of general chemistry for the past 23 years. He has contributed scientific articles to such publications as the Journals of Chemical Education, Nutrition, Biological Chemistry and Science Education.

He received his baccalaureate and higher degrees from Indiana University and has also attended the Oakridge Institute of Nuclear Studies. The Institute director has been a member of the Prairie View staff since 1939.

Student Election First In Prairie View's History

PRAIRIE VIEW Texas — The general student election of May 6, the first one of its type to have ever been held in the history of Prairie View, marked a milestone in the cultural history of the college, inclusive of candidates selected by each of the four classes, and candidates to fill the major offices of student government in addition to the capacity as the primary social figure of the college, that of the Queen, this year's election proved to be the most colorful, appealing, participated in, and progressive of any election in the past.

Over twenty candidates for the positions of Miss Prairie View, President of Student Council, Vice-president of Student Council, and Editor of the Prairie View Panther entered the running with hats in the ring. After conscientious and zestful campaigning the students' participation in voting was characterized by equal enthusiasm.

The following is the results of the election in each of the five categories. In the election of Miss Prairie View, the winner and Queen for 1959-60 is Hazel Muse; other candidates included Mae Garcia, Gwendolyn Williams, Eddye Dorsey, Claudette Smith, and Pearlie Warren. In the election of President of the Student Council Lloyd D. Mayfield was winner; his opponents included Johnnie Jackson, Elliot Johnson, James Eddings and Donnie Sampson. George Wooley won the Vice-presidency against George Brown and Leon Edwards The new secretary of the Student Council is Donya Stephens, whose opponents were Olivia Gray, Mariorie Nunn and Florence McNeil. The editorship was won by Edison R. Fowlks, who defeated Jimmy E. Lydia, Merlie Gilmore and Margie Dean.

The winners of each phase are the people's choice and have dedicated themselves to serve te student boyd in all sincerity or purpose and with the integrity by which their positions are distinguished.

88 BURNED OUT

Negro Students Need Assistance

A dormitory fire that left 88 Negro students at Prentiss Institute without beds and clothing last night set off a campaign for aid to the school here.

The fire, which started under a stairway in the men's dormitory, was discovered about 9:30 p. m. Only one of the building's 88 residents was able to save his clothing.

A. J. Dillon, dean of the school, said the students badly need clothing and mattresses, sheets and blankets.

Major Frank Hall who is chief of the Salvation Army in Jackson pledged his cooperation with the Jackson Daily News in serving as a collecting point for donors in this area.

Individuals wishing to contribute clothing or funds can bring the contributions to the Salvation Army building on Roach Street in downtown Jackson.

Persons making contributions are asked to label their packages and gifts: "Prentiss Institute For Negroes."

Articles donated will be taken to the Prentiss institution for distribution to the needy students.

At least 65 residents of the dormitory were in the two-story frame building when the fire broke out. Students on the second floor leaped out of windows to safety. All escaped serious injury but lost all clothing.

Only one of four teachers who lived in the building was able to save any clothing. Dillon, the dean, was a resident of the building and lost his clothing.

The building also housed a recreation room and storage room for extra beds and athletic equipment, all of which was lost.

Loss of the 25-year-old building was estimated at $45,000. Dillon said cost of replacement would be about $90,000.

A boarding 12-grade school and junior college, Prentiss Institute was founded in 1907 by the late J. E. Johnson and patterned after famed Booker T. Washington school in Tuskegee, Ala.

Of the school's 900 students about 150 live on the campus in three dormitories including Williams Hall, which burned.

The other housing facilities include a men's dormitory that was purchased when Camp Van Dorn was abandoned in World War II and a women's dormitory built eight years ago.

The school offers both academic and trade courses. Both the high school and junior college are accredited and students who graduate at the Institute may continue their work toward toward a college degree.

The high school accepts Negro students from over the county and receives state aid to help pay teachers' salaries and maintain buildings used by the high school.

The eight trade courses offered include masonry, auto mechanics, shoe repairing, cleaning and pressing, barbering, business, agriculture and home economics.

A dairy and farm are included in the Institute plant and most students pay part of their tuition and work on the dairy, farm, or in the shops and offices to pay the rest, Dillon said.

The campus covers 24 acres, not including the 340-acre farm. It is located about a mile from Prentiss.

Dillon said classes were continued today and victims of the fire were attending in borrowed clothing.

Dillon said the boys who lost the clothing were the older students, mostly from 16 to 21.

He said plans began two months ago for replacing the frame dormitory but are "still in the talking stage."

HISTORIC STATE EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTE HIT BY FIRE

Prentiss, Miss., Mar. 2—Prentiss Institute, a historic educational Institution, for Negro students was hit by a fire early Sunday night which completely destroyed the only mens dormitory on the campus.

The fire which started under the stairway in the men's dormitory was discovered about 9:30 P. M. and quickly spread beyond the efforts of the limited available fire fighting equipment. Only one of the 88 residents were able to save his clothing.

School authorities said the 25-year-old structure was built at a cost of some $45,000 but estimated that it will take about $90,000 to replace the structure at present prices.

At least 65 residents of the dormitory were in the two-story frame building when the fire was discovered. Students on the second floor leaped out of the windows to safety, but none were reported hurt.

Negro Students Lose Possessions In Blaze

PRENTISS, Miss. (Special)—A two-story frame [illegible] at Prentiss Institute for Negroes burned here last night destroying personal belongings of at least 80 students.

A. J. Dillon, dean of the school, said the blaze started on the first floor of the frame [illegible] dormitory about 9:30 a.m. Prentiss firemen attempted to extinguish the flames, but were unsuccessful.

At least 60 residents of the dormitory were in the building when the fire started. Only escaped injury but lost all clothing, Dillon said. He said only one teacher saved personal items. Fifteen others, away for the weekend, also lost clothing.

The building also housed a recreation hall, which was destroyed.

The building was constructed about 25 years ago. Loss was estimated at $35,000 and was partially covered by insurance, Dillon said.

ROOSEVELT UNIVERSITY

Roosevelt University Formed Out Of Protest

Defender p 7 Sat. 9-5-59 Chicago, Ill.

By JERRY LIPSON

Fifteen years ago a protest against unfair restriction of opportunity sparked the birth of Roosevelt university, an institute of higher education dedicated to the principles that all who are able to learn should be allowed to do so without regard to race, religion or sex.

The school opened in September, 1945, with no funds, no equipment, no building. But it did have a faculty, a stulent body, and a man with an idea, Edward J. Sparling, its president, who felt there should be an opportunity for higher education for all who could qualify, regardless of cultural or biological background.

This idea, now part of a Supreme Court decision, was far from popular, even in those days. Yet, as Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, who dedicated the school in honor of her husband, said, "Because of (Roosevelt's) policies of non-discrimination, other colleges in the country are being put on the defensive for their discriminatory practices."

ACCREDITED IN 6 MONTHS

Within six months of the school's first day of classes it was accredited by the North Central Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools, an all time record.

The watchword of the young university was, and still is, opportunity. Opportunity for the individual to learn, to better himself and his community. Opportunity for those required to live at home and support themselves (and possibly others) to earn a college degree.

Roosevelt provides more than just a chance to go to school. It provides an opportunity to become an educated person. (Ask any of its 8,213 graduates who have earned bachelors' or masters' degrees there.)

ADVANCED STUDY

It provides an opportunity to acquire a firm foundation for advanced study. (Ask any of the great number of Roosevelt graduates who have gone on to successfully earn Ph.D. degrees.)

It provides an opportunity to find a profession. (Ask the two Negro girls who were the first graduates of Roosevelt's new business teacher education program, who now are teaching business courses in Chicago public high schools.)

This program, by which education students may specialize in the teaching of business subjects, was worked out in cooperation with the Chicago Board of Education, and is the only one offered in Chicago area private schools.

2 NEW GRAD PROGRAMS

This fall, Roosevelt, continuing to emphasize its watchword — opportunity — will inaugurate two new graduate programs. One will be for teachers of modern languages, the other an interdepartmental master's degree in the College of Business Administration.

The last 15 years have seen Rosevelt grow from a few floors in an old building on S. Wells st., to its present home in the Auditorium building; from a student body of a few hundred to recognition as an outstanding medium sized university.

It is expected that the next 15 years will see a continued expansion and deepening of its ideals and traditions of freedom to learn, to teach, to investigate, to experiment, without fear of restriction or reprisal. In short, a continuation of the oportunity to learn and disseminate the truth, freely and without qualification, which has been the solid base upon which Roosevelt has so spectacularly grown.

Negro College Seeks Repair Fund Increase

P. 6-B.

COLUMBIA (AP)—The State Budg- and Control Board, with a ssible state surplus just around corner, continued Tuesday to r state agencies ask for in- sed funds for next fiscal year.

The South Carolina State College ght $234,788 more to take care a backlog of needed repairs."

proposed budget totaled $1,- 778.

Dr. B. C. Turner, president of Negro school at Orangeburg, submitted a supplementary quest for $20,000 to set up a cial education department for ining teachers to handle pupils ith special problems.

ACCREDITATION DUE

Wallace C. Bethea, chairman of board, also reported that ac- reditation of the school by the uthern Assn. of Colleges and Universities may come next onth. This would give the state first accredited Negro college.

The college sought $400,000 for new dining hall, $350,000 for a ome economics building, $400,000 r two women's dormitories, 10,000 for a teacher-training ilding, $350,000 for home eco- mic training and $200,000 for nstructual improvements.

C. C. Merchant Jr., director of State Aeronautics Commission, resented a proposed budget of $194,170, an increase of about $29,000.

IMPROVED FACILITIES

He said the increase was principally for maintenance of airports, improving air facitlities and replacing worn equipment.

"Local airline service, which the commission is aggressively sponsoring, is going to be added to several medium-sized communities within the next few years," he said.

"But small communities cannot keep up their airports and they look to us for service."

Merchant noted, in citing the role aviation plays in economic development, that Union had lost a Pittsburgh Plate Glass Co. plant because it had no airport. He added that Union is now building a $90,000 airport.

EDUCATION NEEDS

The Opportunity School, which educates adults, asked for $173,250 as compared with the current $157,500 budget. A. S. Agnew, the superintendent, told the board that the state thus far has not had to provide funds for buildings, but "sooner or later, somebody is going to have to put some money into buildings at the school."

Old World War II service buildings are now in use.

The John de la Howe School, which trains dependent boys and girls, sought an appropriation of $197,700, an increase of $6,800 over the current budget.

RALEIGH, N. C. — Dr. James A. Boyer, president of St. Augustine's college, has announced that the National Science foundation has awarded the college $50,600 for support of a summer institute in science for high school teachers of science, under the direction of Dr. Prezell Robinson, academic dean of the college.

This program is designed to help high school teachers to improve their subject matter knowledge.

Fifty participants will receive a $5 per week, travel allowance and $15 per week for two dependents.

orer trustees ote for merger

HARPERS FERRY, W. Va. Storer College, which has been closed since 1954, officially went out of existence Saturday, exactly 91 years after it was opened on seven acres of land granted by the Federal Government.

The board of trustees voted to merge with Alderson-Broaddus College at Philippi. Endowments totaling about $10,0, and other personal properties be transferred to the Barbour County institution.

The 30-acre campus and nine buildings will be returned to the Federal Government to be used as part of the Harpers Ferry National Monument development.

nd For Storer College

Storer College at Harpers Ferry, W. will officially come to an end when and if its trustees can merge it with nearby Alderson-Broaddus College.

After 91 years of operation, Storer—lacking private and state support—is being forced to close its doors.

It has endowments of $100,000, 30 acres of land and nine buildings on the site at which John Brown staged his celebrated one-man attempt to start the Civil War.

Storer was set up by the Government, with seven acres of ground but accumulated the remaining 23 acres. Distinguished men and women of both races make up its board of trustees.

Strangely enough, among these distinguished trustees is a strong sentiment to turn the institution back to the government.

We trust they will not act hurriedly.

With many interracial and human relations problems pressing for solution, the trustees might find a better use for these properties than supinely turn them back to Federal Government.

Talladega College Gets $25,000 Grant

TALLADEGA, Ala. — President Arthur D. Gray of Talladega College announced last Friday that the college has received a $25,000 grant from the Danforth Foundation to further strengthen the work of the college. The grant was offered in recognition of the splendid measure of academic excellence already achieved.

By the end of the first semester, six members of the present senior class had been accepted by graduate schools for 1959-60 study, pending satisfactory completion of undergraduate work. They are Chang Im of Seoul, Korea, accepted by the Atlanta School of Social Work; music majors Effie Tyler, Tulsa, Okla., accepted by New York University, and Leon Taylor, Kings Mountain, N. C., accepted by Columbia University and Michigan State University; Wilbur Williams, St. Petersburg, accepted by Meharry Medical School; Michael Butler, St. Petersburg, accepted by Howard University Medical College; A. Knighton Stanley, Greensboro, N. C., accepted by Yale University School of Religion.

A. Knighton Stanley also was awarded the Woodrow Wilson Foundation Fellowship and the Rockefeller Foundation Theological Fellowship awards. He is a psychology major and the first Talladegan to be offered a Rockefeller Fellowship and the third Talladegan within four years to be named a Woodrow Wilson Fellow.

Earle McCaskill of Madison, Ill., has been accepted for 1959-60 graduate study by the Law School of the University of Cincinnati. He is an active member of the Omega Psi Phi Fraternity and the Pan Hellenic Council.

Senior Carolyn Tolbert, a modern language major from Charleston, S. C., has been accepted by Middlebury College Language Schools, Middlebury, Vt., for summer school. Miss Tolbert is a member of the Little Theater, concert choir, YMCA, Pan Hellenic Council, Delta Sigma Theta Sorority, social program committee, and for three years has served as a student counselor.

$25,000 Grant To Talladega

TALLADEGA, Ala.—President Arthur D. Gray announces that Talladega College has received a $25,000 grant from the Danforth Foundation.

The grant was offered "In recognition of the splendid measure of the academic excellence already achieved."

It will be used to strengthen the student personnel program. Plans include scholarship assistance for members of guidance staff and to take additional graduate study, and a comprehensive self-study by a committee of administrative officers, teachers and students.

TALLADEGA COLLEGE

"PROMOTE FREEDOM" SAYS M. L. KING, JR. — TALLADEGA COLLEGE, Talladega, Ala. — Dr. Martin Luther King, "a speaker who needs no introduction anywhere in this world," addressed an overflow Commencement audience at Talladega College June 1 when fifty-eight seniors from fourteen states and Korea received their A. B. degrees.

Dr. King, shown here with Dean Cohen T. Simpson and President Arthur D. Gray upon his arrival on the campus, delivered an impressive and richly illustrated address. He depicted the birthpangs of the new world that, while it promises tensions, promises also greater freedom for many millions of under privileged. He underlined our consequent opportunities and responsibilities to dissolve tensions and promote freedom and well-being for all on this globe by infusing a spirit of love without surrendering vital principles.

TALLADEGA, Ala. — (SNS) — Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., is scheduled to deliver the commencement address at Talladega College at 9:30 Monday morning, June 1 in DeForest Chapel.

He is a member of the advisory board of Citizens Federal Savings and Loan Association and a graduate of Morehouse College.

A man whose Christian-social activities for full implementation of democracy have captured the imagination of the world, the 30 year old Dr. King was the recipient of five honorary doctorates and thirty-six awards between May 1956 and June 1958. In 1957 he was listed by a Gallop Poll as one of the most admired religious leaders of the world, and by Time Magazine as one of the ten outstanding personalities of the year.

Dr. King, pastor of the Dexter Avenue Baptist Church, Montgomery, Ala., president of the Montgomery Improvement Association, Inc., and author of "Stride Toward Freedom", comes to Talladega College a few weeks after his return from a study tour in India.

Talladega College Alumni Of East Will Gather At Hampton Institution Meet

HAMPTON, Va., August 4 — "Human Relations in a Rapidly Changing World" will be the theme of the annual Eastern Regional alumni conference of Talladega College, Talladega, Ala., which convenes at Hampton Institute August 7 through 9.

Mrs. Wardell P. Robinson, Loudonville, N. Y., general chairman of the conference, says indications are that 126 Talladega alumni, originating from all the Eastern seaboard, and several New England states, will journey to the conference at the southern tip of Virginia's peninsula.

A special effort is made at the annual conferences to boost an alumni scholarship fund, and, in addition to special problems of Talladega, topics of international importance are discussed, a spokesman said.

Dr. Spahr Hull, of the American Friends Society, will develop this year's Eastern Regional theme, with brief workshops being given as follows: "Education for Human Relations," conducted by Dr. Martha Dawson, associate professor of education at Hampton Institute; "Youth and Human Relations," conducted by Dr. Nancy B. McGhee, professor of English at Hampton Institute, and "Human Relations Leadership," conducted by Mrs. Maryellen Gardner.

Dr. Arthur D. Gray, president of Talladega and the first alumnus of the school to fill that office, will be on hand to assist with the conference, Chairman Robinson said.

Talladega College was founded in 1867. Hampton—the conference's host campus—was founded a few months later in 1868. Both colleges were begun with assistance from the American Missionary Association, but both today are non-sectarian.

Tidewater alumni who have announced plans to attend the conference are Mrs. Anita P. Hall, associate professor of biology, Hampton Institute; Homer L. Hines, principal at Carver Elementary School, Newport News, James A. A. Hill, principal at Y. H. Thomas Junior High School, Hampton, and Mrs. William S. Mann, Jr., Hampton.

First Negroes At Carolina Fail In Bid For Diplomas

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (AP) — When the capped and gowned seniors of the University of North Carolina parade across the stage June 1 for their diplomas, three of their former classmates — the institution's first Negro undergraduates—will be absent.

The three students, from nearby Durham, have dropped out of school.

"All three of us had scholastic difficulties," said Leroy Frasier.

Leroy, speaking for himself and his brother Ralph, said they hoped to build up their grades and reenter the university.

"I don't have any gripes against the college," he added. "I am responsible myself for not being in school right now. I think my brother feels the same way."

John Lewis Brandon, the third member of the trio, said, "Maybe I didn't have a good background, as I should have had. I think it's a very good school and I'm glad I was able to be a part of it."

John, 21, returned to Durham and went to work at the Duke Medical Center there. He plans to take correspondence courses and reapply at the university.

Leroy, 21, enrolled in a state institution for Negroes at Durham. His 20-year-old brother entered the Army and is now stationed at Ft. Jackson, S.C.

The Frasiers and Brandon won a court suit in 1955 to enter the undergraduate school.

WILBERFORCE UNIVERSITY

Another Fire Sweeps Wilberforce U Dorm

Wilberforce, Ohio (ANP) — When flames raced through Emery Hall last Tuesday, the 46-year old men's dormitory at Wilberforce University, it made nomeless more than 120 men, and destroyed $100,000 worth of property, not including the books and personal belongings of the students.

Dr. Rembert Stokes, president of the University, said the complete loss will not be known until the students have had an opportunity to take inventory of their personal belongings and money.

Shelter Provided

However, before the students were released for the Chrstmas holdays the homeless had all been placed in temporary homes. When classes resume Jan 5th, all students will be housed, F. Isabel Askow, dean of students announced Thursday.

Not First Fire

The dean pointed out that this fire, though disastrous, was not the first fire to sweep the Wilberforce campus. The fire last week gutted the central portion of the men's dormitory. It started on the first floor in the center of the building and quickly spread to the penthouse and damaged the rear of the building and the roof.

Captain Hurt

Don Manuss, captain of the basketball team was in his room on the penthouse when the fire broke out. He sprained his ankle when he jumpted two stories to the roof of an adjoining building.

Many Help

Officials at the university expressed appreciation for all the help given them during the fire. Fire department units from all over Green county rushed to the scene to battle the blaze. Xenia township firemen remained at the scene for several more hours to make sure that the fire was out. Sheriff's deputies kept a close watch on the building throughout the night.

Central State college fire fighters were among the first ones on the scene. And other firemen from Cedarville, Beavercreek, Yellow Springs, Jamestown, Jasper and Fairborn arrived with fire fighting equipment.

Clothing Needed

The Beavercreek Firemen's auxiliary set up a canteen and handed out soft drinks, coffee and sandwiches to the weary firemen. The local Red Cross provided emergency clothing for the burden-out students, but officials explained that the Red Cross could not replace the losses of the students. Clothing and books will be needed by students hoping to return to school in January, school authorities said.

Speaker Stresses Importance of Small Colleges in U. S. Education

Principal speaker, honorees and dignitaries appear in a jovial mood as Wilberforce University concluded formal convocation exercises on Wednesday in observance of the 103rd anniversary of its founding. Bishop E. C. Hatcher, trustee board chairman, has a welcome note for visitors. Reading from left to right are: Dr. Alfred T. Hill, principal speaker and Executive Secretary of the Council for the Advancement of Small Colleges; Bishop Hatcher; Walter G. Nord, Oberlin industrialist who received honorary Doctor of Humanitarian Services degree; Yvonne Walker, chairman of Founder's Day Committee; Joseph R. Jenkins, Savannah, Georgia Y. M. C. A. Executive Secretary, and Dr. Rembert Stokes, Wilberforce University president.

"Today's challenge to the small college received excellent treatment at the Wilberforce University 103rd Founders' Day observance on Wednesday when Dr. Alfred T. Hill, Executive-Secretary of the Council for the Advancement of Small Colleges told a large formal convocation that "we have no time for mediocrity in our world today."

The greatness of a higher educational institution, he went on to say, lies in such intangibles as scholarship and dedication of faculty; traditions of Christianity, public service and patriotism: helping young people to mature in the realm of ideas and ideals; potential to lead young people in their pursuit of wisdom and goodness; and a dedication to the search for truth, beauty and goodness.

Ministerial and lay members from the states of Ohio, Pennsylvania and West Virignia made the journey to observe the significant occasion. In conjunction with the occasion a convocation of the A. M. E. Church, Third Episcopal District convened under the leadership of Wilberforce University Board Chairman and presiding prelate Bishop Eugene C. Hatcher.

Two honorary degrees were conferred during the anniversary exercises, Walter G. Nord, Oberlin, Ohio industrialist received the honorary Doctor of Humanitarian Services degree; and Joseph R. Jenkins, Savannah, Georgia Y. M. C. A. Executive-Secretary was awarded the Doctor of Humanities degree.

Wilberforce University is a charter member of the C. A. S. C. a group of 75 small church-related and independent colleges with the potential to double or even triple student enrollment with proper aid and assistance.

Speaker Hill pointed out that the organization began three years ago as "the forgotten colleges." Since that time, he emphasized, the group has been widely recognized "in press on radio and television, in the professional journals, and by such distinguished Americans as Herbert Hoover and Dwight D. Eisenhower."

The convocation speaker further revealed that the C. A. S. C. organization was no longer the "in-group of the havenots," which is revealed by the fact that it has been able to raise "a quarter of a million dollars and have made plans for a much more ambitious fund-raising campaign." He noted that financial help had been secured from "U. S. Steel, the Ford Foundation, General Electric, Esso, Sears-Roebuck and many other strong friends."

WILBERFORCE, Ohio — The 101st commencement exercises held at historic Wilberforce University drew a group of distinguished nationally known persons as guests to view the ceremony attendent on the graduation of students and the honoring of notables.

With dynamic young Dr. Rembert E. Stokes leading the convocation procession across the tree shaded campus, the thrill of being a part of a century old procedure was evident in the face of each of those taking part.

Dr. Stokes presided during the exercises which brought to the fore the Rt. Rev. Joseph Gomez, Rt. Rev. Eugene C. Hatcher, Milton S. J. Wright, Ph.D., Charles S. Spivey Jr., and the speaker, Rt. Rev. George Wilber Baber, president of Bishops of the AME Church.

XAVIER HONORS ITS FOUNDRESS

Many Attend High Mass for Mother Katherine

A High Requiem Mass was offered Tuesday at Xavier university in commemoration of the third anniversary of the death of Mother Katherine Drexel, foundress of the Sisters of the Blessed Sacrament and Xavier university.

Attending the Mass were members of the late foundress' religious order, students, faculty and alumni of the university.

The granddaughter of the first Francis Drexel, who built one of the largest financial empires in American history, Mother Katherine was raised in an environment of ease and luxury.

CHALLENGE ACCEPTED

At a time when American Catholic bishops could beg only that "thought and time be given" to the welfare of the American Indian and the Negro, Miss Drexel accepted the challenge, adding to it the practical working power of the millions of dollars left to her by her father.

It has ben estimated that she spent about $15 million in her endeavors. However, many notables, both in religion and of the secular laity, have stated that her personal sacrifice was of even more value to the two races than the money involved.

In 1889, she left her Philadelphia, Pa., home for study in the convent of the Sisters of Mercy and in 1891 she founded the Blessed Sacrament order. In her lifetime she established 48 elementary schools, 12 high schools and Xavier university, first Catholic university for Negroes in the United States.

DIED AT AGE OF 96

Mother Katherine died March 3, 1955, at the age of 96.

The will of her father, having ben made prior to the founding of the Sisters of the Blessed Sacrament, stipulated that funds be divided among other religious organizations. None of the funds for all of her works of charity could be left to her own order, thus depriving both the order and Xavier of their major sources of income.

Among the many tributes received at her death from clergy and laity throughout the United States was the following message as sent by Archbishop Joseph F. Rummel:

"It is our firm belief that Holy Mother the Church will one day be guided by the Holy Spirit to enroll t hename of Mother Katherine Drexel among those she considers worthy of special veneration."

Collins Wants Only Integrated Graduate Schools In Florida

TALLAHASSEE (UPI) — Gov. LeRoy Collins made a surprise recommendation Thursday that the next Legislature consider abolishing graduate schools at the state Negro university and educate these students in white universities.

At the same time, Collins hinted he might oppose the private tuition plan which Atty. Gen. Richard Ervin said was the only solution to the race problem in counties where even token integration of the public schools would meet violent resistance.

The latter issue popped up at the governor's weekly news conference and later at the Cabinet Budget Commission meeting.

Collins told the Budget Commission that segregation at the graduate level is costing Florida too much money. He said even the "massive resistance" states of Virginia and Arkansas, which closed public schools rather than integrate, have no trouble mixing the races in their graduate schools.

QUIETLY DISCUSSED

This subject has been quietly discussed by various groups for some time, but Collins is the first official to bring it out in the open. The first Negro student enrolled without incident at the University of Florida Law School last September, but Collins said there are about 18 at the A. and M. University law school here.

He said he understands that since the Negro law school opened seven years ago, it has graduated six students at a cost of $60,000 each.

Collins ordered Budget Director Harry Smith to get up figures showing the student cost of all graduate schools at A. and M. including law, pharmacy, agriculture and home economics.

WITHHOLDS OPINION

Sen. Wilson Carraway of Tallahassee, who sat in on the discussions as chairman of the Senate Appropriations Committee, said he would withhold his reaction to Collins' suggestion until he sees the cost figures.

It was pointed out that a graduate school, in order to be accredited must maintain a certain staff and equipment, regardless of the number of students.

Collins also took exception to a request for $756,000 to build separate athletic fields, gymnasiums, swimming pools, chapels and repair shops for white and Negro inmates of the new boys school in Okeechobee.

"It looks like both races could use the same chapel," he declared. The rest of the cabinet supported a $926,000 reduction in the recommended building program for this institution without specifying what projects would be eliminated.

The parent-option-subsidy plan, which Ervin will propose to the Legislature, also came up for discussion at the governor's news conference.

Florida U. Enrolls Its Second Negro

GAINESVILLE, Fla., Feb. 9.—The University of Florida enrolled its second Negro student today. Mrs. Daphne Duval, 53, for 28 years a teacher of mathematics at Lincoln High School here, enrolled for a graduate course in education. She will attend the university each Tuesday evening to study a course called professional services.

George Starke Jr., 27, enrolled in the college of law in September as the university's first Negro student.

5 More Negroes Qualify for UF

GAINESVILLE, June 9 (UPI)—Five more Negroes have qualified for admission to the University of Florida graduate school, it was announced today.

Registrar R. S. Johnson said the five are teachers and have met the qualifications for admissions to the graduate school during the summer session.

The announcement was contained in a brief release from the university news bureau. "In keeping with long-standing policy, names of the five will not be made public until after they have completed registration," the release said.

If the Negroes follow through with their intent to enroll, it will increase to seven the number enrolled since the graduate school was ordered to admit qualified Negroes by a federal court judge in June, 1958.

First to Enroll

George Starke Jr., 27, Sanford, was the first of his race to enroll in the state-supported university.

Starke was admitted to the law college last fall and successfully completed his first semester in February. He continued his training the past semester, but the university said it did not know if Starke completed his work satisfactorily.

The school also admitted a 53-year-old Negro high school teacher to the graduate school last February. Daphne Duval was taking a single course one night a week while still teaching at a local high school.

Registrar R. S. Johnson said the five all are teachers and have met the qualifications for admissions to the graduate school during the summer session.

The announcement was contained in a brief release from the University News Bureau. "In keeping with long-standing policy, names of the five will not be made public until after they have completed registration," the release said.

If the students follow through with their intent to enroll, it will be by far the largest enrollment of Negroes since the graduate school was ordered to admit qualified Negroes by a federal court judge in June, 1958.

George Starke Jr., 27, Sanford-Orlando, was the first of his race to enroll in the previously all-white state-supported university.

Starke was admitted to the law college last fall and successfully completed his first semester in February.

He continued his training the past semester, but the university said it did not know if Starke completed his work satisfactorily.

5 MORE QUALIFY FOR UNIVERSITY OF FLORIDA

GAINESVILLE, Fla. (UPI)—Five more Negroes have qualified for admission to the University of Florida Graduate School, it was announced Tuesday.

Registrar R. S. Johnson said the five all are teachers and have met the qualifications for admissions to the Graduate School during the summer session.

The announcement was contained in a brief release from the University News Bureau. "In keeping with long-standing policy, names of the five will not be made public until after they have completed registration," the release said.

Vera Mae Alexander, Reddick, and Rayfield McGhee, Gainesville, enrolled in a science and mathematics institute.

Elia Mims, Tampa, registered for a guidance and personnel institute along with Daphne Duval, 53, who enrolled in a single night course at the University in February.

Julia Crosby, Gainesville, enrolled for graduate courses in the College of Education. All five are teachers in public schools, the university said.

At the same time, the school said it expected George Starke Jr., 27, Sanford, to re-enroll in the law school in the fall. Starke completed his first year of law school work satisfactorily, it was announced.

Both intitute programs are designed to improve teaching methods and have enrolled more than 100 Florida teachers under federal grants.

Sarke became the first Negro to enroll in a previously all-white state-supported institution last fall. He was accepted into the law college after the federal court ruled the university must enter all qualified Negroes desiring to take graduate work.

Six Negroes have now qualified or registered for graduate courses here since a U.S. district court ordered the university's university's graduate schools opened to Negroes last June.

Since a federal court order last June admitting Negroes to graduate-level study, six have qualified for admittance and registered.

The sixth, George Starke, Sanford freshman law student, is not currently enrolled. Although Starke passed all of his work, he was on academic probation last semester. A review of his record by college of law faculty has qualified him for admittance in September.

HOW COLLEGE ENTRANCE PLAN WORKS

All Students to Be Interviewed

By GENE BRITTON

Georgia's college administrators have been given a new headache to nurse.

They've got to ride the bronco, but so far most of them haven't even figured how to get on his back.

In the name of educating more efficiently, officials at state-supported institutions of higher learning have been told to start enforcing new standards for screening applicants for admission.

One of the most significant of these new requirements is a mandatory personal interview with every student who wants to get into any of the 19 units of the state university system.

THAT'S A BIG and time-consuming order.

There are indications that the plan may work smoothly and do the job its authors say it is intended to do at the larger schools.

But at most of the smaller schools, the two-year junior colleges, the wild horse is kicking up a cloud of problems that may stifle efficient operations.

The bigger schools, like the University of Georgia, Georgia Tech and Georgia State College of Business Administration, have larger faculty staffs and trained, expert personnel for the big job of interviewing. The smaller colleges, in most instances, don't.

GEORGIA STATE is working out an interviewing program that may eventually serve as a model for the rest of the units. At Georgia State, the interviewing program shows signs of making a real contribution to quality education.

The program is being directed by the head of the school's guidance and counseling center, Dr. Cameron Fincher, a man who holds a Ph.D. in psychology.

But few of the junior colleges have the necessary funds to hire a man of Dr. Fincher's qualifications to head their programs.

William S. Patrick, director of admissions at Georgia State, said a series of workshops has been set up to train faculty members in interviewing techniques.

THE INTERVIEWS, according to the Board of Regents' directive, are intended to determine new applicants' "sense of social responsibility, adjustment of personality, sturdiness of character and general fitness for admission to the institution."

The workshops at Georgia State would theoretically instruct members of that school's faculty as to how to determine all that.

Dr. Patrick said 10 teams of three faculty members each have been organized to conduct the interviews. All teams working at one time could handle about 30 students an hour. He said a two-week period prior to beginning of classes each quarter would be devoted to the interviewing.

APPLICANTS will be notified when to come to the school for their interviews. Since at Georgia State applications must be submitted at least 35 days prior to opening of classes, the college would be able to study all the applications and set up interview appointments within the two-week period.

The interviewer would recommend that the applicant be admitted or that he not be. If the applicant was dissatisfied with the interviewer's recommendation, he could appeal to a five-man admission board which would have the final word.

Under the Georgia State "model" plan, the interviewing would not stop with acceptance of the applicant. The new student would continue to receive guidance based on subsequent interviews throughout his college career.

PATRICK SAID Georgia State hopes to get its program into full swing by May, in time for summer quarter registration.

He admitted that, although the program shows great promise at his school, it might cause a period of "trial and tribulation" at some of the smaller units.

Tom Cottingham, director of admissions at South Georgia College in Douglas, said he and two other officials of the school will have to devote the entire summer interviewing applicants for admission next fall.

THERE ARE NO definite plans

Dr. Fincher W. S. Patrick

at South Georgia for giving the three interviewers any kind of training in conducting interviews.

He estimated there would be between 350 and 375 new students at his school next fall. Figuring on 15 minutes per interview, it will take the three officials at least a whole summer to do what's required of them.

Jack Padget, registrar at Armstrong Junior College in Savannah, also admitted there's no training program planned for the interviewers at his school. Also, it has not been determined how many interviewers will be needed or will be available once the interviewing program gets into full operation.

Last fall, Armstrong had 273 new students in its day division and 258 in its evening division.

AT LEAST one of the smaller colleges, however, anticipates no problems from the program. Registrar Will D. Young at North Georgia College in Dahlonega said his school has been interviewing every entering freshman since 1957.

The program works, he said. He wouldn't give it up now that it's been in effect for awhile. Mr. Young said North Georgia has an interviewing committee of five, including himself and two trained guidance experts.

How the various colleges administer the interview program will be left up to the individual colleges, according to L. R. Siebert, executive secretary of the Board of Regents.

Each school will determine for itself what questions to ask and how to evaluate the answers.

THE INTERVIEWING is only one of a number of new regulations that the colleges will have to find ways of administering.

And the big question of what effect the new college age limit bill will have on the schools still remains to be answered.

The bill, which limits admission to undergraduate schools to students under 21 and to graduate and professional schools to those under 25 (except in certain excepted cases), will cut the enrollment of most colleges. That's what it is intended to do, in view of increasingly crowded classrooms and dormitories.

Georgia State, which operates an evening school that caters to adults who work by day, will likely be seriously effected in its program. To what extent is an unknown factor.

The same is true of new units of the university system in Augusta and Columbus, which offer the same type of adult education program.

EXCERPTS ON SLOAN DECISION

Here are excerpts from U.S. District Judge Boyd Sloan's decision holding segregation at Georgia State College unconstitutional.

In the complaint, as amended, the plaintiffs, Negroes residing in the City of Atlanta and in the Northern District of Georgia, filed on behalf of themselves and all other Negroes similarly situated and affected who are qualified and able to receive educational opportunities and advantages at the Georgia State College of Business Administration, Atlanta, Ga., allege that the regulations and requirements for admission to the Georgia State College of Business Administration are designed to and do discriminate against Negroes and deny them due process of law and equal protection of the laws.

It is the contention of the plaintiffs that they are qualified for admission to the Georgia State College of Business Administration but that the defendants do, in accordance with established custom, usage and practice, on account of their race and color deny to plaintiffs and other qualified Negroes similarly situated the right to attend said Georgia State College of Business Administration while at the same time they accord to white persons the privilege and right to attend said institution.

The plaintiffs contend that the rules of admission and the admission procedure adopted by the Board of Regents of the University System of Georgia governing admission requirements for admission to the Georgia State College of Business Administration, deny to plaintiffs, and other Negroes similarly situated, the right to be admitted to said college and deny to them the equal protection of the laws and due process of law as secured by the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States. The plaintiffs seek declaratory and injunctive relief.

The defendants deny that the rules of admission or admission procedure are unreasonable or discriminatory and aver that they are equally applicable to both white and Negro applicants for admission to the school and generally deny the allegations of the complaint.

The case came on for trial to the court, without a jury, on Dec. 8, 1958, and during the days of Dec. 8, 9, 10, 11 and 12 evidence in behalf of the plaintiffs and the defendants was introduced and heard. Additional time in which to present written arguments and briefs having now been filed, the court proceeds to a determination of the controversy. . . .

(The opinion goes at length into the history of the case and admission practices and then continues as follows.)

PLAINTIFFS' QUALIFICATIONS FOR ADMISSION

Plaintiffs have each completed high school and in addition have had some college work and, while their scholastic qualifications would be subject to review under valid admission requirements of the Georgia State College of Business Administration, the court finds, under the evidence here, that the plaintiffs have scholastic credits sufficient to qualify them to make application for admission to the college.

While the evidence indicates that the plaintiffs, Barbara Hunt and Myra Elliott Dinsmore Holland, may not be of good moral character and for that reason may not be qualified for admission to the college, the evidence shows the other plaintiff, Iris Mae Welch, to be of good character and not lacking in qualification for admission.

JUDICIAL NOTICE

The court takes judicial notice of the fact that it is not customary for Negroes and whites to mix socially or to attend the same public or private educational institutions in the State of Georgia, and that by reason of this presently existing social pattern, the opportunities for the average Negro to become personally acquainted with the average white person, and particularly with the alumni of a white educational institution, are necessarily limited.

THE ALUMNI CERTIFICATE REQUIREMENT

The effect of the alumni certificate requirement upon Negroes has been, is and will be to prevent Negroes from meeting this admission requirement. As a result, Negro applications have been rejected and would hereafter be subject to be rejected as incomplete without being considered on their merits.

Plaintiffs did not and do not know any of the alumni of the Georgia State College of Business Administration.

STIPULATION

The parties have stipulated that there are no Negro alumni of the Georgia State College of Business Administration or of any other white institutions in the University System.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

This being an action for declaratory judgment and equitable relief to protect civil rights, this court has jurisdiction of the controversy . . .

This is a class action. The class is formed solely by the presence of the common question of law or fact. The right or liability of each member of the class is distinct. It is as individuals that plaintiffs are entitled to equal protection of the laws. . . .

The class here is composed of: Negroes who are qualified to meet all valid requirements for admission to the Georgia State College of Business Administration and who are therefore eligible for admission to that institution. The plaintiffs must be members of the class they purportedly represent. . . .

Plaintiffs would be entitled to declaratory or injunctive relief if it is shown that they, or one of them, have been injured or deprived of personal and present rights to admission to the Georgia State College of Business Administration.

THIS COURT is bound by the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, and for this court to express disagreement with such decisions would not only be futile but improper.

The policy, custom, practice and usage of the defendants in maintaining and operating the Georgia State College of Business Administration on a racially segregated basis is violative of the rights secured to the plaintiffs, and of the rights secured to other Negro students of Georgia, who are similarly situated, by the due process and equal protection clause of the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States. . . .

The scholarship program which aids Negro students to take graduate and professional work offered at white institutions of the University System of Georgia and at other institutions which accept Negroes, either outside the state or at private Negro institutions within the state, does not meet the requirement of equal protection. . . .

The alumni certificate requirement is invalid as applied to Negroes because there are no Negro alumni of any of the white institutions of the University System of Georgia, and consequently this requirement operates to make it difficult, if not impossible, for Negroes to comply with the requirement, whereas white applicants do not face similar difficulties. The requirement, therefore, violates the equal protection clause to the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

THAT THE MOTIVE of the plaintiffs in making application for admission to the Georgia State College of Business Administration was the filing of this suit is not significant. . . .

Plaintiffs' actions with reference to appeal met the requirements, if any, as to exhausting administrative remedies. . . .

Plaintiffs and members of the class which they, or one of them represent, are entitled to an injunction enjoining the defendants from continuing to limit the Georgia State College of Business Administration to white students only, and enjoining defendants from requiring Negro applicants to that institution to furnish certificates as to their personal qualities which may be certified to only by alumni of the white institutions.

A JUDGMENT and decree in conformity with the findings here made and the conclusions here entered may be prepared and presented.

In formulating the decree, it is to be kept in mind that the authorities in control of the operation of the Georgia State College of Business Administration have the primary right and responsibility of fixing and passing upon the qualifications for admission.

The decree will only restrict the exercise of this right to prohibit denying admission to qualified Negroes solely because of their race and color, and to prohibit the adoption of admission requirements that will deny to them the equal protection of the laws and due process of law. . . .

Cook's Statement On Georgia State Ruling

This is the text of Atty. Gen. Eugene Cook's statement on the federal court decision declaring segregation unconstitutional at Georgia State College:

"In considering the effect of the court's decision, it is appropriate to distinguish between what the court has decided and what it has not decided.

"The federal court has not ruled that the three (3) plaintiffs in this case are entitled to admission to Georgia State College, and its decision will not have the effect of admitting them.

"THE COURT expressly recognized that two (2) of the plaintiffs probably were not morally qualified for admission, and with respect to scholastic qualifications, the court has not ruled that any of the plaintiffs are qualified for admission. The court merely held that they are sufficiently qualified to make application and have their applications considered by the school authorities, but did not rule that the plaintiffs were qualified for admission itself.

"The court has stated in no uncertain terms that the authority and responsibility for passing upon the moral and scholastic qualifications of applicants for admission are vested in the school officials.

"The court has not ruled that the institutions under the University System cannot require proof of good character and ability to successfully complete the course for which application is made.

"THE COURT has not ruled that all the admission procedures of the University System are invalid.

"What the court has ruled is that the University System cannot require proof of good moral character in the manner prescribed by the particular regulation under attack. The effect of the decision is merely to enjoin the enforcement of this regulation, which requires certificates of alumni of the institution to which admission is sought.

"Other admission regulations are left intact. The school requires entrance examinations. Applicants still must obtain certificates from the ordinary or clerk certifying to their character, reputation and residence. Lastly, all applicants still must satisfy school officials as to their moral and scholastic qualifications by whatever legal procedures may be available."

NO MENTION OF RACE

Strict Admission Rules Seen Keeping Negroes Out of Colleges in Georgia

ATLANTA, May 9 (AP) — Stricter admission rules recently adopted for all students without mention of race, are expected to keep Negroes out of Georgia's colleges a long time.

Several Negroes now apparently planning efforts to enter Georgia Tech and the Georgia State College of Business Administration in Atlanta, would have to meet a number of requirements in addition to scholastic qualifications.

New admission regulations provide so many stumbling blocks that the state may not be forced to use the college closing law enacted in 1959. That law permits the governor to close any college in the university system or any division of any college ordered to integrate.

The university system's Board of Regents put several optional rules into its admission regulations, leaving it up to individual colleges to adopt them or not, according to their own wishes.

The Georgia State College of Business Administration, where seven Negro women showed up Tuesday to inquire about registration, put into effect possibly the stiffest set of admission rules in the university system.

Georgia Tech, where three Negro men picked up application blanks on the same day, left off some of the optional rules. But Tech's scholastic requirements are hard to meet.

They must be graduates of accredited high schools with satisfactory grades and 15 units in specified subjects.

They must have taken the college entrance examination board scholastic aptitude test and file reports on their scores.

The school also requires applicants to be interviewed. The interview will evaluate some of the intangible standards fixed by the Board of Regents.

These standards require applicants to have a seriousness of purpose and a sense of social responsibility. They must be qualified for growth in a college environment and possess potential ability to pursue successfully the program of work they wish to take.

The rules also say the college may reject any applicant who fails to show general fitness for college work.

Since none of the regulations mentions color, legal sources believe they will stand up under a ruling handed down by a U.S. District Court banning racial discrimination at Georgia State College. The court held the college had a right to fix admission standards as long as the standards did not involve race.

Negro Admittance Upheld By Court

New Orleans Branch of LSU Loses Its Appeal

NEW ORLEANS, April 23. — (AP) The United States Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals Thursday supported a lower court decision that the New Orleans branch of Louisiana State University cannot deny admission to Negroes.

The appellate court decision affirmed a United States District Court ruling of last year enjoining LSUNO from restricting Negroes from the institution.

Last fall, LSUNO opened its first classes to freshmen students. Of about 1,460 enrolling, 69 were Negroes admitted under the Federal court order.

The appellate court decision Thursday was against the LSU board of supervisors and others who appealed against Wilson Fleming Jr. and others.

LSU supervisors contended the board is a special agency of the state and a suit against the board, in effect, would be a suit against the state and contrary to the Louisiana Constitution.

In rejecting the appeal, the court said it agreed with another court opinion that: "If high officials of the state and of the Federal Government . . . may be restrained and enjoined we see no reason why a school board should be exempt from such suit merely because it has been given corporate powers."

Seven Negroes Seek To Enter White School

ATLANTA (AP) — Seven Negroes applied Tuesday for admission to Georgia State College of Business Administration, an all-white institution.

All seven are girls or women. One was interested in graduate study, the other six in undergraduate work.

William A. Patrick, the director of admissions, said the applications will be handled routinely, as all other requests for admission to Georgia State are handled.

Patrick declined to name the applicants.

A federal judge in January ruled that Georgia State may not exclude Negroes because of their race.

The January ruling resulted from a suit brought against the Atlanta institution by three Negro women who contended that a key registration regulation of Georgia's university system discriminated against Negroes.

Negroes apply to Georgia Tech

ATLANTA, May 8—(AP)—Twelve Negroes now have applied for registration information at two all-white state supported colleges in Atlanta.

Seven women went to Georgia State College Tuesday seeking preregistration forms. Two more applied Thursday.

Five men applied to Georgia Tech yesterday.

Georgia Acts to Bar College Race Mixing

ATLANTA, Ga., April 23 (AP).—State supported colleges were given rigid new admission policies yesterday for use in operating under the State's ban on student race mixing.

The action removed a freeze on registration of new students imposed after a United States District Court ordered the Georgia State College here not to bar Negro students on account of race. The freeze had kept thousands of students from registering for the spring quarter.

Following the court ruling the Legislature enacted an age-limit law designed to discourage suits by Negro applicants. It bars initial admission of persons more than 21 years of age to undergraduate s tudy and puts a limit of 25 on admission to graduate schools.

University system regents yesterday adopted two sets of regulations, one on general admission procedures and the other o nadministration of the age-limit law.

The age-limit law permits the regents to make exceptions for students with such ability as to justify their additional education at State expense.

The new regulations require higher academic ability and permit colleges to reject applications when enrollment reaches capacity.

The age-limit law exempts teachers and veterans who were prevented from entering college by reason of military service.

The regulations provide that any applicant who meets other admission requirements will not be denied admission because of age if, in the judgment of admission officials, he meets the listed conditions.

These conditions include that the applicant must show good intent and purpose, display a proper sense of social responsibility and a reasonable promise of favorable personality adjustment; possess such general fitness, including psychological factors, that his admission would further the interets of himself and the college and that his character and ability are such tas to justify additional education at public expense.

Segregation Manifest Aim of Law Passed After U. S. Court Ruled for Negroes

By CLAUDE SITTON
Special to The New York Times

ATLANTA, April 22—State-supported colleges and universities removed their ban today to applicants over 21 years old, but under stringent regulations aimed at preventing the enrollment of Negroes.

The rules, formulated by the state board of regents, provide that college officials can deny admission on such grounds as a student's lack of "good intent" or of "a proper sense of social responsibility."

These are similar to provisions of pupil-placement acts passed in recent months by other Southern states.

Today's action ended a freeze that had been in effect since January, when the Federal District Court here forbade the exclusion of Negroes from Georgia State College on racial grounds.

Ordered by Governor

The Negro plaintiffs in the Georgia State case were all over 21.

Following the court's decision, the state legislature pushed through a measure setting strict limitations on the admission of students of that age or older. It was conceded during the debate that the sole purpose was to block desegregation.

The law provides that no person 21 or over may be admitted to an undergraduate school and that no person of 25 or over may be accepted by any graduate or professional school.

Exceptions are made for teachers and veterans and "persons who may be found by the board of regents to possess such ability and fitness, so that their further education at public expense is justified."

¶ Possesses such general fitness, including phychological factors that his admission would seem to further the interest of himself and of the college to which he has applied.

¶ Has the ability and character to justify additional education at public expense.

"The college to which an applicant seeks admission," the regents said in the rules, "shall have the right to administer such tests and examinations, to conduct such personal interviews and to require such information and evidence as may be necessary to enable it to determine whether the applicant comes within any of the exceptions of the age limit law."

Segregation Battle Is Top

Vandiver-Griffin Duel Made the Front Pages

By GENE BRITTON

Georgia's bitter integration-segregation battle seemed to become more intense and rancorous with every day of 1958. It became the top local news story of the year.

Ministers and professional groups took sides and signed manifestoes. Teachers, parents and school boards made jittery reappraisals of the educational future of the state's children.

One lawsuit—brought by three Negro women who tried unsuccessfully to enroll in Georgia State College of Business Administration—was heard in U.S. District Court. It's purpose is to have the school's entrance requirements, which the plaintiffs contend bar Negroes, declared unconstitutional. A ruling in the case is not expected for several days.

Among stories selected by staffs of The Constitution and Journal as the top 10 of the year, the second biggest reached its climax with the election of Ernest Vandiver as governor.

10 Buck Race Barriers At 2 Atlanta Schools

ATLANTA UPI — Ten Negroes — seven women and three men — applied for admission Tuesday at all-white Georgia Tech and Georgia State College of Business Administration.

The women applied at Georgia State, a four-year institution located in downtown Atlanta. The men applied at Georgia Tech, also located in Atlanta, and predominantly a men's school.

The Negroes were given application forms to submit. They asked to enter the schools' forthcoming summer session.

A telephoned bomb threat to Georgia State emptied classes shortly after the women filed for admission. No bomb was found.

Georgia Lt. Gov. Garland T. Byrd asserted Tuesday night that "the great majority of the citizens of Georgia are still determined to resist a breakdown of segregation in our public schools."

Four Suits Attacking Segregation Open Here

The future position of the thousands of Negro citizens who make up approximately one-third of Atlanta still rests on the dockets at the United States District Court with possible answers perhaps not far away.

Four civil rights suits, attempts by Negroes to crush the existing segregation standards under the sledge hammer of judicial mandates, are pending final decision in the federal court. The four suits are thought to represent the largest number of civil actions pending at the same time against segregation in any city in the nation.

One of the civil actions, initiated by four Negro applicants who were allegedly refused admission to the Georgia State College of Business Administration on the basis of color alone, is scheduled to be decided by Judge Boyd Sloan at a very near date.

After one week of exhaustive examination and cross examination of plaintiffs' and defense witnesses, Judge Sloan said he would issue a judgement on the matter on or before January 12, pending the submission to him of written summations by the attorneys for both sides.

ANOTHER SUIT

District Judge Frank Hooper will listen to another desegregation battle when the two Negro ministers who seek an injunction against the city of Atlanta and the Georgia Public Service Commission air their contentions at a pre-trial hearing scheduled for January 5.

The Rev. Samuel Williams and the Rev. John T. Porter seek to have the federal court enjoin the defendants from enforcing certain state and city laws requiring segregated seating on public transportation facilities. The ministers also seek to have the laws in question declared unconstitutional.

The latest action in the bus seating case finds the lawyers for the defendants seeking to have the court delay the case until the end of the 1959 session of the Georgia General Assembly which is scheduled to be in session 40 days beginning January 12.

Attorney-General Eugene Cook stated in his request for a continuance that his services are necessary in the working of the Assembly. He added that the demand for his presence at the assembly sessions would not leave him enough time to adequately prepare his defense for the bus trial.

PRE-TRIAL

Judge Hooper has scheduled a pre-trial hearing for Jan. 5. where he has promised to consider the plea of the state and the contentions of the plaintiffs that the trial should begin on schedule.

Although lying dormant due to numerous delays, the hearing on a suit filed by the mothers of several Negro youths seeking to break down segregation in Atlanta public schools is still very much in the forefront.

No date has been set on the hearing of this case, however, earlier in the fall, judicial authorities promised that the trial would be set at a date when all evidence can be heard and a decision rendered before the opening of the 1959 fall term.

Meanwhile, only a few short weeks ago, a Birmingham insurance executive filed suit in the district court here seeking to enjoin the only restaurant at the Municipal Airport from operating on a segregated basis.

H. D. Coke filed the fourth suit December 23 in which he alleged he was not allowed to sit at a table of his choosing at the Dobbs House airport restaurant last August 4.

After stating that his travels take him to the Atlanta Airport frequently, Coke added that he would suffer much inconvenience if he were not allowed to use the restaurant facilities on an unsegregated basis.

In the event a favorable decision is rendered the plaintiffs in all four cases. 1959 may go down in Georgia history as the year Atlanta showed the democratic way for the entire rebellious South.

College Applications Halt Asked In Georgia

Plea Made Following Court Order

By COMBINED WIRE SERVICES

A federal court order Saturday against racial segregation in Georgia's state colleges brought a request from the state's incoming governor that all schools temporarily cease accepting any new applications.

U. S. Dist. Judge Boyd Sloan, in knocking out segregation policies of the Georgia State College of Business Administration in Atlanta, also held invalid an admission requirement state officials had relied on to maintain segregation in the 19 units of the university system.

Ernest Vandiver, who takes over the governor's office Tuesday, called the decision regrettable. He said he had suggested to retiring Chairman Robert O. Arnold that state colleges "suspend for the time being the acceptance of any new applications for admission from any person until such time as members of the board of regents have had an opportunity to thoroughly study the decision."

NO NEGRO ALUMNI

The federal court order held unconstitutional a regulation requiring all applicants for admission to state colleges to be signed by two or three alumni of the institution where the student proposed to enroll.

Sloan said there are no Negro alumni of these schools and that it is, therefore, invalid since it would be "difficult if not impossible for them to get the needed signatures.

While ruling out race as a cause for refusing entry, Sloan said school authorities still have "the primary right and responsibility" of passing upon an applicant's qualifications. In this connection he said that two of the three Negro women seeking entrance to the Atlanta institution may not be qualified on moral grounds.

NEW APPLICATIONS

All three must now file new applications and even if the judge declines to hold up his injunction pending a state appeal it likely will be some time before a Negro gains admittance to the Georgia school.

Sloan's ruling came at the same time that another federal judge was ordering the school board of Little Rock, Ark., to report within 30 days on plans they have made for integrating high schools in the city. The two school rulings followed by one day the outlawing of segregation on Atlanta's buses.

U. S. Dist. Judge John E. Miller actually put into effect a mandate issued Dec. 2 by the 8th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals at St. Louis. He pointed out that the mandate did not direct him to order reopening of Little Rock's high schools, closed since Sept. 12 1958.

UNTENABLE POSITION

Robert Laster, a member of the school board, said Miller's order "has put us in an untenable position" since Arkansas' school closing law orders the governor to close any school under court orders to integrate.

He said it was his opinion the board could only wait out the 30 days allowed by the court and see what happens.

Segregated seating on buses and trolleys in Atlanta was outlawed by U. S. Dist. Judge Frank A. Hooper. He pointed out that similar decisions in Montgomery, Ala. and other Southern cities have been upheld by the courts and added that he would enjoin anyone seeking to enforce separate seating arrangements by races.

MASS MEETING

Following a ruling by federal Judge Frank Hooper in Atlanta Friday that local transit segregation was unconstitutional, Negroes announced a mass meeting for Tuesday for the purpose of giving "further instructions." The Love, Law and Liberation Movement which had pushed the transit case said the decision meant "that we, as individuals, will ride the buses desegregated."

Atty. Gen. Eugene Cook, who headed up the defense for the State Board of Regents, said an appeal to the Supreme Court is likely but that final details would have to await a final decree and order which was not forthcoming with the Sloan decision.

PASS EXAMS

Cook said the decision merely established the non-validity of the alumni signature requirement and did not mean in any way that the court ordered admission of the three Negroes to the white college. He said that under the decision applicants still would have to obtain character certifications from a county official and pass all entry exams and other requirements at the college.

Attorneys for the plaintiffs were jubilant over the decision, saying it was "gratifying" and that the court's decision "is supported not only by the law and evidence but also by the higher dictates of justice and equity."

It was clear that the Sloan decision did not mean immediate integration of Georgia institutions. But it was a powerful step in that direction for Negroes who had never succeeded in winning a previous school integration case in the state.

Methodists To Hear Georgia State Head

The president of Georgia State College of Business Administration in Atlanta is scheduled to speak Wednesday night at First Methodist Church.

The occasion is the first annual Father-Son Night of the Methodist Men's club.

The meeting is set for 6:30 p.m. at the church.

Langdale received an A.B. degree from the University of Alabama, and L.L.B. from Harvard Law School, and a M.BA. from Harvard Graduate School of Business.

He was a varsity tackle on the 1937 through 1941 Alabama football teams. He served in the Navy during World War II. He assumed the presidency of the college in July 1957 after two years as an economics professor at Valdosta State School.

He will be introduced by Jimmy Hitchcock.

New Threat in Georgia

Closing Colleges May Become 'Achilles Heel'

By TREZZVANT W. ANDERSON

ATLANTA, Ga.—Georgia's new Governor, Ernest Vandiver, may be in the act of creating a genuine boomerang if he goes through with reported plans for legislation to close down the three state-supported Negro colleges in the event white colleges are ordered to admit Negroes.

Word of the new move leaked out here last week after a high-level survey between Mr. Vandiver and top aides.

A suit is now pending in Federal court to open the doors of the Georgia State College of Business Administration to Negroes. Present state laws cut off state funds from any college ordered mixed.

THERE IS NO law to cover other branches of the University of Georgia System. To remedy this, new laws are proposed to give the state authority to close all state-supported institutions of higher learning for Negroes.

There are three of these: Savannah State College, Albany State College and Fort Valley State College.

Observers here were quick to point out that such closing action on the part of the state might react to the advantage of the existing privately operated institutions in Georgia.

THESE SCHOOLS are all rated highly in the field of education, and they include Atlanta University, Clark College, Spelman College, Morehouse College, Morris Brown College, all in Atlanta, and Paine College in Augusta.

To shut the doors of the three state-supported Negro schools would merely result in diverting students from those schools to the privately operated Negro schools, which would then face a prospect of overcrowding as their worst difficulty.

The closing threat may not materialize, however, for it is fraught with possible complications. It appears mainly to be a threat which the Vandiver Administration hopes will deter Negroes from seeking entry to white schools.

State Colleges Bar Admissions for Spring

State supported colleges and universities apparently will not accept any new students for spring quarter, which begins the middle of next month.

The Board of Regents of the university system has scheduled a meeting for March 10 and 11 to adopt a new set of regulations for admission.

Until that meeting, most units of the university system are in a quandary over when or whether to accept new applications for admission. The uncertainty apparently stems from new legislation on the subject and a tight set of new rules which have been recommended for favorable acton by the regents at the March meeting, plus some new rules already being observed.

L. R. Siebert, executive secretary of the board, said Tuesday the new rules are aimed at coping with the growing problem of too many students for too few educational facilities.

These rules are not aimed at barring Negroes from the all-white state-supported colleges, he insisted.

"White students are going to have just as difficult a time getting in as Negro students," he said. "We're going to select the best—white or black."

Siebert said the rules apply to the three all-Negro colleges in the system as well as to the white schools.

A new piece of legislation—the controversial college age limit bill—also presents college registrars with a problem. The bill, designed to discourage segregation lawsuits, limits initial admission to undergraduate students under 21 and graduate and professional students under 25. The regents, however, are authorized to make exceptions.

The regents have allocated $25,000 for a special study of admissions plan which would make it more difficult to get into college. The plan is expected to be completed by the March meeting.

But the elements of the plan went into effect Feb. 11 when the regents adopted admission procedures which would require, among other things, personal interviews to determine the fitness of all persons who apply to state colleges for enrollment.

Applicants must also submit their applications to the registrars of schools they wish to attend not less than 20 days before the close of registration.

How Regents Will Decide Who's Ready For College

BY PAT WATTERS

The State Board of Regents has proclaimed a new policy in regard to Georgia's tax-supported higher education, one saying in effect that not every high school graduated boy or girl has the right to go to college — only those who deserve it.

Deserving means being academically, intellectually and psychologically capable of coping with the processes of college education.

The new order goes into effect this summer. It is expected to be most needed by 1961 or 1962. Those closest to the situation say that at no time will youngsters qualified for a college education be refused a chance at one.

* * *

THE DIFFERENCE is that educators will attempt to weed out with tests and interviews the potential flunk-outs. Another part of the program is counseling those who are accepted to help them make the most of their opportunity.

A big question, of course, is how sure can the educators be of the methods whereby they prejudge whether a youngster is of college caliber.

Heretofore, those not sufficiently endowed proved it by their performance in college. Just about anybody with a high school diploma could get in, although requirements had been gradually tightening before the new order. Those not qualified flunked out.

THE SPOKESMEN for the new policy say they have no doubts about ability to weed out with accurateness and fairness.

They do admit that youngsters from low-standard high schools may be penalized. But they say that is the responsibility of the high schools, and ultimately the parents who pay taxes for them.

Another question: How necessary is the program? Is it based solely on the desire for high academic quality and fear of overcrowding, or does segregation enter in?

The spokesmen insist segregation has nothing to do with it. In the words of one, it's just "bad timing" that the new order coincides with the first injunction in the state against segregation at a higher education facility — Georgia State College in Atlanta.

THE TIGHTENING UP has been planned for a long time, has long been a pet project of Georgia State President Noah Langdale and has been a recognized need for years, they say.

The big reason for the new departure, say spokesmen, is the fact that the day is fast approaching when there will be more youngsters knocking on college doors than facilities behind the doors. This will be about 1961 or 1962 when the wartime boom of babies, grown to freshman age, will descend on the colleges.

Also involved, they say, is Sputnik-age emphasis on education.

What is the percentage of flunk-outs now in the university system? As an indication, the University of Georgia listed 316 for 1957-58 out of a total enrollment of 9,950. This was with 506 applicants turned down and others advised not to apply under earlier tightenings-up at the university.

L. R. SIEBERT, secretary of the Board of Regents, was asked on what figures the far-reaching new order was based. In other words, what will be the peak requests for admissions, and what is the peak capacity in the university system?

His answer was to say that total enrollment in the system for the year 1958-59 is 29,063, and that the most conservative estimates are that this will be increased by 5 per cent per year until by 1962-63 total enrollment will be 35,325.

He also said that a current dormitory building program (six million dollars worth at five institutions) is the last that can be expected, and that this influenced the decision.

Even more important, he said, would be limitations on amount of money for teachers and classrooms when the time of the great student deluge comes.

IT WAS NECESSARY to ask Mr. Siebert the whys of the program because the regents, when they make their decisions, operate behind doors closed to the public. All they do at their public meetings is to announce the decisions.

First word of the tightening up came in January when the regents appropriated $25,000 for a pilot study of methods to be used. The study was to be conducted at Georgia State.

But in February, with the pilot study ready to start in the spring, the regents suddenly ordered the tightening up to go into effect immediately at all colleges at a cost of around $150,000. Each school was ordered to set up its own program in time for the summer.

William S. Patrick, director of admissions at Georgia State, said meanwhile he will go ahead with the pilot study which in effect will be Georgia State's program also. He said he will outline it as a model for other schools.

ABOUT ITS over-all effect, he was asked if it didn't tend to penalize the youngsters who through no fault of their own attended inferior high schools.

He said that it did, especially youngsters without a good foundation in English and math. But, he added, it is based on the sound premise that you can't do college level work if you're not prepared for it.

And a youngster can make up for his lackings by attending such a school as Smith-Hughes for special courses or through private tutoring, he said.

Mr. Patrick also was asked if he ever envisioned the day when an arbitrary standard would be set for college admission based not on minimum qualifications, but on amount of facilities available. He said he did not. He said the aim is the opposite: To keep room for the qualified from being taken up by the unqualified.

HERE IS HOW he described the plans for the pilot study program at Georgia State:

Presently, applicants for admission are required to fill out an application, take a college board exam and submit a transcript of high school courses and grades.

The college board exam is a national thing and tests primarily aptitude — not what has been previously learned.

Recently, supplemental tests have been added for borderline cases and transfer students.

Under the new system, the supplemental tests will be given to all applicants as will a 20- to 30-minute interview. The results of both, along with what was already required, will be a sort of profile of the applicant in terms of aptitude, achievement, ability and attitude, says Mr. Patrick.

THE SUPPLEMENTAL tests will seek out his achievement and to some extent the other three. The interview will concentrate on attitude. ("Why do you want to enroll?" "What do you plan for a career?" "What are your hobbies?") And the previously required college board exam will show ability and aptitude. The high school record will indicate a little of all four.

Mr. Patrick said that a low mark in just one of the four areas would not disqualify an applicant, especially if he was high in one of the other three or all of them.

It is the youngster weak in all four the program is out to catch, he said.

The supplemental tests, Mr. Patrick said, will be nationally standardized ones. There are many to choose from.

AMONG THOSE used in the past for borderline cases and transfer students and under consideration are:

1. The Cooperative General Culture Test. This is a battery of exams on social studies, literature, science, the fine arts and mathematics.

2. The Cooperative General Achievement Test. It is similar to the above. Both measure learning, said Mr. Patrick.

3. Cooperative English Test.

4. Cooperative Algebra Test.

5. Sequential Tests of Educational Progress (Step). This measures not just how much was learned, but whether the applicant can use learned material in solving new problems.

6. School and College Ability Tests (Scat). This measures "verbal and quantitative abilities."

THE PROGRAM includes continued testing and counseling after a student is accepted, Mr. Patrick said.

Similar tests will be given at the sophomore, senior and graduate level, to see how well a student is using his natural endowment. After the first interview, students will be given others as needed — as when one whose application indicates superior ability turns out to be doing inferior work. The counseling will also be used to advise uncertain students what to specialize in.

The school already has made use of a predicted grade point for each new student. This will also be incorporated in the program, Mr. Patrick said. It gives professors an indication of how well a youngster is measuring up, he said.

Also used now and to be incorporated are placement examinations which determine such matters as whether a new student takes advanced or elementary courses in English and math.

IT IS HOPED eventually all remedial courses — ones going over material that should have been learned in high school—will be eliminated, he said.

A norm of grades by other students will be used in judging performances of applicants on the tests. Grades will be expressed in percentiles. Normally more weight will still be given to aptitude than to past learning in making the final decision of whether a student will be accepted, he said.

The program provides, Mr. Patrick said, an objective standard for selecting those who will enter college. It's obvious not all high school graduates are qualified, he said, and you have to be objective, not subjective about it.

"It's not a right but a privilege to go to college," he said.

Two Negroes Turned Down For Georgia

Advertiser
Nov. 1-26-59

ATHENS, Ga. (AP)—Two Negroes have applied for enrollment in the undergraduate school of the all-white University of Georgia. Officials said Saturday they have been informed along with others that there is no room.

Registrar Water N. Danner said the Negro applicants were the same and had obtained the signatures of the Fulton county clerk of superior court on their application forms. They were Hamilton Earl Holmes and Charlene Alberta Hunter, 17-year-old graduates of Turner High School, Atlanta. Both are young enough to qualify under the state's recently set age limit for undergraduates.

LACK OF SPACE

The registrar already had said the university has been closed to freshmen because of lack of dormitory space and only bona fide residents of Athens are being considered. He estimated that 500 applicants with good records have been turned down.

Earlier, Horace Ward, an Atlanta Negro, sought admission to the university's law school. After several years of litigation in U.S. court he was ruled out for failure to follow through properly with his application.

Negroes earlier this year won a federal court decree that they could not be discriminated against in university system enrollment. So far, no suit has been filed specifically demanding the admission of individual Negroes.

He said the Negroes indicated they graduated from high school this spring.

"I don't know when they expect to be admitted—next week or next year or never," said Danner.

CITES HOUSING RULE

Danner said University rules require on-campus housing for all female students and all freshmen.

He said he had received notice from the University of Georgia housing director earlier this week that no more housing was available for the fall term. This apparently cuts off admissions for girls and freshmen — and supposedly both Negroes would fall into this classification.

A student still could attend the University, admitted Danner, if he qualified as a legitimate resident of the city of Athens and would live at home.

Constitution

Regarding housing for females and freshmen, Danner said, "We have been turning them down for quite awhile unless they're real topnotch students."

Asked about prospects of overcrowding in the winter quarter, Danner said, "We haven't gotten to the winter quarter on anybody."

NAACP UNAVAILABLE

Unavailable for comment were most officials for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, including Georgia field secretary Amos O. Holmes and Southeastern secretary Rubey Hurley, both of Atlanta.

And the Atlanta chapter president, the Rev. H. I. Bearden, was on a trip to Detroit and Chicago.

But one NAACP spokesman, the Rev. Samuel W. Williams, said the NAACP did not inspire the incident at the University of Georgia.

"I'm quite sure the NAACP is not involved," he said. "The NAACP does not instigate cases. That would be a violation of its policy."

A federal judge ruled earlier this year in Atlanta that students cannot be turned away from institutions of higher learning because of race alone.

LAW RECALLED

A Georgia law passed this year limits new undergraduates admission to persons 21 years or younger and of graduates, 25 or younger. Advocates said it would thwart Negro applications.

On previous occasions, several Negroes have sought admission to Georgia State in Atlanta this spring and three Negro men unsuccessfully applied at Georgia Tech.

They were disqualified under Georgia's admission rules.

2 Negroes Get Entry Forms From University Of Georgia

ATHENS, Ga. (AP) — Two young Negroes, identifying themselves as recent high school graduates, obtained application blanks and a catalog from the all-white University of Georgia Friday.

Registrar Walter N. Danner said the two, a boy and a girl, appeared only briefly at his office and gave no indication of when they might submit applications.

"It would not do them any good to hurry," he commented. "We already are full for next year. We cannot accommodate all those who have been accepted. We always have some failing to show up and unless next year's percentage is high we'll be hard pressed."

The registrar said he made a notation of the names but declined to release them. He said it was not the usual practice to identify persons obtaining blanks and catalogs and he saw no reason for a departure.

He said the two apparently were graduates of the same Fulton County (Atlanta) high school, although not brother and sister. He added that they were accompanied by two adults but that he did not believe the latter were their parents.

The appearance obviously was a new move in Negro efforts to break down the racial barrier in the all-white units of Georgia's university system. A federal judge ruled earlier this year in Atlanta that students cannot be turned away because of race.

This ruling was on allegations by Negro applicants of racial discrimination at Georgia State College, Atlanta.

So far, no suit has been brought specifically to force admission of Negro students in the white institutions.

Application Forms To Be Mailed To Registrar

Birmingham, Ala.

By JOHN BRITTON

ATLANTA, Ga. — (SNS) — The completed application forms for admission to the University of Georgia in Athens are expected to be mailed to the registrar of that state-supported school Monday by the two Negro high school honor graduates who appeared in Athens Friday to acquire the application blanks.

The two Turner High School June honor graduates are seeking admission for the fall quarter at the tax-supported university.

Post

The applicants were identified by an adult spokesman who accompanied them on the trip to Athens as Hamilton Earl Holmes, 17, of 732 Jones Ave., N. W., and Miss Charlayne Alberta Hunter, 17, of 1308 Mozley Place, S. W.

Young Holmes, the son of an Atlanta businessman and the recipient of numerous scholastic achievement awards in high school, will apply to the university for study in the area of pre-medical training. Holmes was valedictorian of his graduating class.

Miss Hunter, the daughter of a career army officer-chaplain, is interested in taking work at the University of Georgia leading to a degree in Journalism, according to official sources.

Both applicants indicated that their applications were for admissions to the university for the fall quarter. Under the rules as announced in this year's university catalogue, their applications will be in plenty of time for consideration if they are mailed Monday as is expected.

Freshman orientation at the Athens university begins September 18 while registration for freshmen and new students, a category both applicants fall under, is scheduled to begin September 17 and end the next day.

Young Holmes was a star athlete in high school and received numerous awards before graduation in recognition of his high level of scholastic achievement.

His interest lies in the medical field, apparently following in the footsteps of his prominent physician-grandfather.

Miss Hunter indicated an interest in a journalistic career, with a high school background loaded with participation in affairs dealing with writing and editing. She was third in her graduating class, just a few percentage points behind valedictorian Holmes.

Both applicants have taken the College Entrance Examination Board's Scholastic Aptitude Tests and their rank on those tests may be indicated by the invitations received by both to attend some of the leading large universities in the mid-west.

Miss Hunter said, besides being entitled to go to the University of Georgia, that she was prompted to apply because of the high national rank of the University of Georgia journalism school, the proximity of the school to her Atlanta home and the economics of going to a school in the state.

Holmes indicated that he too desired to attend the university due to its closeness to home and the cheapness of its rates as compared to what he would have to pay if he were forced to leave the state to pursue a medical career.

A doctor, a minister and a businessman, speaking individually, agreed that "we think the two applicants should have the privilege of attending the University of Georgia. We commend them for their effort to complete their education—in Georgia." They were the adults who either accompanied the applicants on their trip to Athens or gave the students advice.

Wed. 7-15-59

Both Holmes and Miss Hunter qualify for admission to the university under Georgia's recently enacted legal age limit that limits admissions to undergraduates who are 21 or younger and graduates who are 25 and younger.

Meanwhile, Walter Danner, registrar and director of admissions at the university, said admissions for the fall quarter had already been halted because the university is filled to capacity.

14

Danner said the university had already been turning down applications for quite a while "unless they were real topnotch students."

Holmes and Miss Hunter, accompanied by Father Warren Scott, chaplain of the Atlanta University System, and another adult, quietly entered the registrars office on the campus Friday, picked up application blanks and catalogues and left, without incident.

Danner said "I don't know when they expect to get in — next week or next year," with reference to the Negro applicants.

The registrar added that the lack of additional dormitory space would prevent admitting any more students and he said that a university law requires all freshmen and women students to be housed in a campus dormitory.

Two Negroes Obtain Blanks For University Of Georgia

Negroes Get Affidavits for Entry Forms

Fulton Superior Court Clerk J. W. Simmons Wednesday signed affidavits of residence and character for two youthful Atlanta Negroes who are seeking admission to the University of Georgia.

Simmons signed the affidavits after the Negroes, a boy and a girl, appeared at his office in the company of five adults, two of them white ministers, who certified to the applicants' character and residence.

Signing of the affidavits fulfilled a requirement that the ordinary or court clerk in a person's county of residence must attest to their bona fide residence and good character.

It was learned that the group first attempted to see Ordinary Eugene Gunby, but were told he was busy. They also attempted to see another courthouse official before seeking Simmons' signature. Identity of that official was not learned.

The applicants were identified in an Associated Press dispatch as Hamilton Earl Holmes and Charlene Alberta Hunter, both graduates of Turner High School in Atlanta.

The dispatch said Holmes, who was valedictorian of his class and a star athlete, wants to become a pre-medical student. It said Miss Hunter, editor of the school newspaper, hopes to enroll in the school of journalism.

Accompanying the two were two white ministers, a Negro minister, a Negro doctor and a Negro YMCA official, whose names Simmons said he was told but did not make a note of.

The court clerk said they had with them application blanks required by the State Board of Regents of all applicants which certify as to their residence, reputation and good character.

"All I do is certify they live here and have good reputation and character," Simmons said. "These men all told me that they (the boy and girl) lived here and that they were of good character and good reputation."

Simmons said that there is no law requiring that he sign the certificates and that he could have refused. He said he simply signed the certificates on the basis of what the adults told him.

The university has already closed its rolls for freshman students this fall because all dormitory space is filled, according to university Registrar Walter N. Danner. But a sponsor of the pair said they would apply anyway.

Meanwhile, it was learned that three Negroes picked up application forms at Georgia State College of Business Administration on July 7. This made a total of nine forms still in the hands of Negroes which could be used by them in seeking entrance to the all-white college in downtown Atlanta.

Registrar William S. Patrick at Georgia State said all new applicants for entrance this fall were told they could not be assured of consideration as students unless their applications were received by Wednesday.

Normal deadline for admission application is Aug. 10, Patrick said, but the July 15 cut-off date was necessitated by extensive admission tests and interviews now in use.

Negroes Fail to Turn In Entry Forms to University

Two Negroes who picked up enrollment blanks from the University of Georgia have not attempted to complete registration, University registrar Walter N. Danner said Tuesday.

The Negroes, a boy and a girl, requested the blanks in a personal appearance at the registrar's office last Friday. Bystanders said they drove away from the University with two Negro adults in an automobile with a Fulton County license plate.

Danner declined to name them until the application is formally submitted.

Top local and regional officials for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People are out of town and unavailable for comment. A member said last week, however, that it would be contrary to NAACP policy to "inspire" a university application.

Registrar Danner indicated last week that University housing is filled for the fall term. Freshmen and female out-of-town students are required to live on campus.

House Gets Bill to Limit College Age

Panel Votes 'Yes' Alters One Word

By BRUCE GALPHIN

A House committee wrote a minor one-word change in the college [illegible] Monday and passed it out for possible adoption Tuesday.

Abrupt approval of the controversial bill by the State of the Re[illegible]

public Committee came as some thing of a surprise.

Earlier in the day the committee had voted to hold the bill after Chairman Roy McCracken of Jefferson had indicated there might be a public hearing on it.

NEW VANDIVER PLEA

The amendment approved by the committee has the endorsement of Gov. Vandiver. It apparently was worked out in a morning conference with the governor, educators and legislators.

At his news conference Vandiver obayed the amendment and made a new appeal for the bill.

"(It) is sound and its adoption is needed at this time," the governor declared. "Ample provision is made in the proposal for graduate students so that their education might be continued at public expense and their talents utilized. Also provision is made for teachers of the state desiring to better qualify themselves.

CALLED REASONABLE

"It is my opinion that there are outside limits to which the state should assume responsibility for education of its citizens and that those set in the bill, with the exceptions provided, are reasonable and should be enacted into law," Vandiver concluded.

As passed by the Senate, 52-2, the bill sets a maximum age of 21 for initial admission to undergraduate work and 25 for graduate and professional schools.

There also is a proviso that the Board of Regents may except persons who "possess unusual ability and fitness, so that their further education at public expense is justified."

The State of the Republic Committee voted Monday to change the word "unusual" to "such."

The amendment apparently was part of an effort to convince opponents of the bill that no drastic changes will be made in present enrollment practices.

Officials are not willing to go on record as saying the bill is a segregation-saving device for fear their remarks will be cited in court tests. But behind the scenes they are giving [illegible] broad assurances.

The state of the Republic panel also stamped "do pass" on nine other administration bills which have come from the Senate. They will be ready for a vote Tuesday.

In its business Monday, the House passed a bill aimed at eliminating "10 per centers" from sales to the state and generally tightening purchasing practices.

OKAY LONGER TRUCKS

It also voted 137-1 to raise the maximum lengths allowed trucks on Georgia highways from 48 to 50 feet.

Rep. Frank Cheatham of Chatham said the purchasing bill was "designed to get what is called the '10 per centers' or in recent years '15 per centers' or '20 per centers' . . . those leeches on state government."

The bill would require the supervisor of purchases to keep complete lists of qualified firms desiring to do business with the state and to let interested firms know 10 days in advance of bid-openings.

It also would require bidders to swear no third party is getting a fee or commission in connection with the bid.

It further provides that only firms which have been in business for at least a year may compete for state business.

The truck bill, which in similar forms has stirred fights in the past, passed Monday with only one dissenting vote.

Rep. Guy Rutland of DeKalb explained that the 50-foot limitation is the same as those adopted in most other states.

"Some people call it a truck bill. I call it an agriculture and industry bill for Georgia," Rutland declared.

CALLED A BARRIER

Rutland said he understood some industries had hesitated to move to Georgia because of the truck-length limitation.

Also approved in the House Monday was a bill requiring judges who want to participate in a retirement program to start contributing by July 1, 1959, or within 90 days after taking office.

Rep. James H. Floyd of Chattooga, author of the bill, said it was not aimed at any particular person but noted the retirement law had been used recently by a defeated judge to insure a sizeable retirement pay after 13 years of noncontribution.

Action was postponed on a bill proposing to allow illegitimate children to recover for the homicide of their mothers.

3 denied admission to Georgia State

ATLANTA — Intensifying efforts to break the barriers of segregation in the public schools, three women Monday were unsuccessful in their bids to enroll in Georgia State College of Business Administration.

William S. Patrick, director of admissions, said none of the three — Mrs. Ernestine Brown, 25, Miss Alice Wyche, 24, and Miss Mary Evelyn Rodgers, 20, all of Atlanta — met the preliminary qualifications of the institution.

Robert O. Arnold, chairman of the university board of regents, let it be known in Macon this week that admision requirements are going to be "so strict that damn few white people and no colored can get in."

LISTING THE points on which the women were ruled ineligible for admission, Patrick said:

Miss Wyche failed to provide a transcript from Austin University where she received a B.S. degree, nor had she taken the required graduate record examination.

Miss Rogers's high school transcript showed she didn't have high school algebra, nor had she taken the college entrance board scholastic aptitude test.

And Mrs. Brown filed no transcripts, high school or college, with her application. She had not taken the college aptitude test either.

Only Miss Rogers is within the age limit for admission, said Patrick. But even she will be too old to be admitted as an undergraduate in September, he added.

AMONG OTHER blocks set up to try to keep colored students out of Georgia white schools, legislators have passed a law (at the request of Gov. Ernest Vandiver) which states that beginning students must be under 21 for undergraduate study and under 25 for graduate work.

By Vandiver's line of thinking, younger colored students are not likely to file to enter white colleges and universities for fear of failure because they are not as well prepared as their white counterparts.

But recently about a dozen colored applicants, within the age limit, have shown interest in applying.

Segregation Reels In Georgia

ATLANTA, Ga. (AP) — Georgia segregation practices reeled today in the wake of two sharp blows by federal district judges.

Judge Boyd Sloan ruled yesterday that Negroes must not be denied admission to the Georgia State College of Business Administration in Atlanta on the basis of race and color alone.

His ruling came one day after Dist. Judge Frank Hooper outlawed segregated seating on Atlanta buses and trolleys.

Gov.-elect Ernest Vandiver suggested that the university system temporarily stop accepting new applications for admission to the 19 state colleges and universities, and Regents Chairman Robert Arnold said this would be done.

Vandiver, who becomes governor Tuesday, reportedly is planning to ask the legislature to pass laws closing state Negro colleges if any white units shut as the result of being ordered to integrate.

Vandiver also said he will ask the lawmakers, who convene today, to approve bills designed to close individual schools rather than entire school systems if integration is ordered. Present laws call for closing entire school districts if one school in the district is integrated.

Appearing on an Atlanta television program, Vandiver added that the proposal would give the governor power to shut any school from which Negroes transfer.

While applying only to the Atlanta College, Sloan's order struck down as discriminatory a key university system rule for maintaining segregation — that applicants be endorsed by alumni of the school they wish to enter.

The state probably will appeal Sloan's broad order, although the judge did not actually order the plaintiffs — three Negro women — admitted to the college. He said they were qualified to apply and have their applications considered.

Thus it will be some time yet before a Negro may actually be admitted to a previously all-white state college. Under state law that would close the institution by cutting off its funds.

There also has been no sign of a break in the custom of Negroes using reserved seats on Atlanta buses and trolleys. After segregated seating was outlawed Negro leaders indicated it will be at least two weeks before any organized move is launched toward desegregated seating.

Atlanta, Little Rock in squeeze—

Georgia may cut off all new college enrollment

Mixing orders bring forth more strife

BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

A federal court order Saturday against racial segregation in Georgia's state colleges brought a request from the state's incoming governor that all schools temporarily cease accepting any new applications.

U. S. District Judge Boyd Sloan, in knocking out segregation policies of the Georgia State College of Business Administration in Atlanta, also held invalid an admission requirement state officials had relied on to maintain segregation in the 19 units of the university system.

Ernest Vandiver, who takes over the governor's office Tuesday, called the decision regrettable.

He said he had suggested to Regents Chairman Robert O. Arnold that state colleges "suspend for the time being the acceptance of any new applications for admission from any person until such time as members of the Board of Regents have had an opportunity to thoroughly study the decision."

Must let them apply

THE FEDERAL COURT order held unconstitutional a regulation requiring all applications for admission to state colleges to be signed by two or three alumni of the institution where the student proposed to enroll.

Sloan said there are no Negro alumni of these schools and that it is, therefore, invalid since it would be "difficult if not impossible" for them to get the needed signatures.

While ruling out race as a cause for Georgia's refusing entry, Sloan said school authorities still have "the primary right and responsibility" of passing upon an applicant's qualifications.

In this connection he said that two of the three Negro women seeking entrance to the Atlanta institution may not be qualified on moral grounds.

All three must now file new applications and even if the judge declines to hold up his injunction pending a state appeal it likely will be some time before a Negro gains admittance to the Georgia school.

Little Rock case

SLOAN'S RULING came at the same time that another federal judge was ordering the school board of Little Rock, Ark., to report within 30 days on plans they have made for integrating high schools in the city. The two school rulings followed by one day the outlawing of segregation on Atlanta's buses.

Judge Miller did not spell out whether he expects the board itself to seek reopening of the schools, or whether his court would be satisfied if the board simply prepares an integration plan and has it ready for use when and if the schools are reopened by any means.

Little Rock's four public high schools were closed Sept. 12 in an anti-integration move.

School Board Member Robert Laster, a city traffic judge, said he felt Miller's order placed the board in "an untenable position" because compliance with any integration directive would mean the board had to violate the state school closing law.

Board powerless

LASTER SAID HE felt the board was powerless to act in the dilemma and had no alternative but to wait out the 30-day period and see what developed.

Other members of the six-man board declined immediate comment.

Miller's order named all members of the board as defendants. They were elected Dec. 6 to succeed a former board which drew up Little Rock's integration plan in 1955.

Gov. Faubus of Arkansas declined comment on Miller's action. So did Wiley A. Branton, attorney for the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, which is the plaintiff in the integration case.

Miller's order, which put into effect a mandate issued by the Eighth U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals at St. Louis, simply instructed the board to "take positive steps" to implement a previously approved integration plan.

college Judge Sloan said that the college, second largest in the system, cannot deny admission to Negroes on the basis of race and color alone.

While his order applies only to the 5550-student Atlanta institution, it struck down a key regulation of the University System for maintaining segregation.

That was a requirement that applicants must be endorsed by alumni of the institution to which they are seeking admission.

Violation of rights

SLOAN'S ORDER also declared that operation of the Atlanta college on a racially segregated basis is "violative of the rights secured to plaintiffs, and of rights secured to other Negro students of Georgia, who are similarly situated, by the due process and equal protection clause of the 14th Amendment."

As Georgia Atty. Gen. Eugene Cook was quick to point out, Sloan did not order admission of the plaintiffs—three Negro women—to the Atlanta school. He said they were qualified to apply and have their applications considered.

The state likely will appeal. And even if the judge declines to stay his injunction pending a final ruling, the three applications still will have to be processed.

The lawsuit was brought by four Negroes in September, 1956. Three of them are women, Barbara Hunt, 25, clerk in Atlanta University, a Negro college; Mary Elliott Dinsmore Holland, 26, now unemployed, and Iris Welch, 45, clerk in a Negro drug store.

The fourth plaintiff, Russell T. Roberts of Atlanta, dropped out for personal reasons after the suit was filed.

END NOT IN SIGHT

Georgia Schools Stay Segregated

ATLANTA, Jan. 11 (AP)—A federal court ruling that Negroes cannot be barred from Georgia's all-white colleges and universities simply because they are Negroes does not mean an immediate end to segregated classrooms.

On the heels of yesterday's decision, state officials quickly noted:

1. That U. S. District Judge Boyd Sloan did not order Negroes admitted to Georgia State College in Atlanta, the institution specifically involved in the legal attack.

2. That no new applications to any institutions are being accepted for the time being from whites or Negroes.

3. That Georgia law provides that should a Negro be admitted to an all-white college that unit's funds would be cut off, forcing it to close.

But Donald L. Hollowell, Negro attorney for the three Negro women who brought the suit, interpreted the ruling as clearing the way for ultimate integration throughout the state's university system.

The ruling struck down an admission requirement used by all 19 units of the university system: That applicants must be endorsed by two or three alumni. The three women, who tried and failed to get in at Georgia State, said this requirement discriminated against them because Georgia State had no Negro alumni.

Sloan agreed. The effect of that registration policy "upon Negroes has been, is, and will be, to prevent Negroes from meeting this admission requirement," the judge said.

Atty. Gen. Eugene Cook said the ruling likely will be appealed after he has had time to confer with the governor and other officials.

Gov.-elect Ernest Vandiver, who takes office Tuesday, suggested to the state's board of regents, which operates the university system, that registration books be closed temporarily. Robert O. Arnold, chairman of the regents, said this would be done. The action, however, is not expected to have any immediate effect on the institutions because registration for the current term is over.

Vandiver reportedly plans to ask the legislature, which convenes tomorrow, for laws to close the state's four Negro colleges if any white units close as a result of integration.

Sloan's ruling followed by one day a decision by U.S. District Judge Frank Hooper which outlawed segregated seating on Atlanta buses and trolleys. Negro leaders have indicated it will be at least two weeks before any organized move toward desegregated seating is launched. Since Hooper's ruling there have been no incidents reported of Negroes failing to observe the traditional custom of using rear seats.

Georgia Moves To Halt Registration

Governor-Elect Urged Action At Universities

Atlanta, Jan. 11 (AP)—The State Board of Regents prepared Sunday to order registration halted at Georgia's 19 colleges and universities as a counterattack against a federal desegregation order.

Robert O. Arnold, board chairman, said the move was being carried out at the suggestion of incoming Governor Ernest Vandiver.

However, the action is not expected to have any immediate effect, since registration for the current quarter has already been completed at the 19 units of the university system.

No Meeting Scheduled

The move was made to prevent any immediate effort by Negroes to enter all-white Georgia schools as an aftermath to the Saturday ruling by Federal Judge Boyd Sloan that segregation at the Georgia State College of Business Administration here is unconstitutional.

Arnold said the board of regents would not have to meet to carry out Vandiver's recommendation. He said all that is needed is for the regents to send instructions to the schools to close their doors temporarily to additional students.

Vandiver said he suggested the action to permit time for further study of Sloan's ruling.

Vandiver, who will take office Tuesday, said Sunday he will propose legislation at this session of the Georgia Legislature to close only white schools to which Negro students are admitted, by federal-court orders or otherwise.

Under present law, when a school is ordered integrated in Georgia, the whole system would be closed.

Banker Speaking Here

P. Booker Robinson, executive vice-president of Citizens Fidelity Bank & Trust Company, will speak before the Louisville chapter of the Controllers Institute of America Wednesday on the economic outlook for 1959. His talk will follow a 6:30 p.m. dinner meeting at the Kentucky Hotel.

Georgia Halts College Entry

ATLANTA, Jan. 11 (UPI) The State Board of Regents agreed today to stop registration at Georgia's 19 colleges and universities as a counter-attack against a Federal desegregation order.

Robert O. Arnold, chairman of the Board, said the move was being carried out at the suggestion of incoming Gov. Ernest Vandiver. However, the action was not expected to have any immediate effect since registration for the current quarter has already been completed at the 19 units of the university system.

The move was made to prevent any immediate attempt by Negroes to enter all-white Georgia schools as an aftermath to yesterday's ruling by Federal Judge Boyd Sloan that segregation at Georgia State College of Business Administration here was unconstitutional.

No Meeting Required

Arnold said the Board of Regents would not have to meet to carry out Vandiver's recommendation. He said all that was needed was for the Regents to send instructions to the schools to temporarily close their doors to additional students.

Vandiver said he suggested the action to permit time for further study of Sloan's ruling.

Vandiver, a 40-year-old lawyer who takes office Tuesday, urged citizens and officials of Georgia "not to be stampeded into hasty action." He said his incoming administration "will exhaust every resource of the state to sustain and uphold Georgia's way of life and her sacred traditions."

Vandiver said today he would propose legislation at this session of the Georgia legislature to close only the white school to which a Negro student was admitted.

Under present law, when a school is ordered integrated in Georgia, the whole system would be closed.

Vandiver said the new proposal also would empower him to close the school from which the Negro applicant came.

Package of Bills Due

He said his leaders would introduce in the legislature next week a package of segregation bills.

"We want to have in our arsenal all possible weapons," he said.

Sloan ruled that three Negro women seeking to break the segregation barriers at Georgia State were prevented from enrolling by discriminatory practices.

Reaction to Sloan's ruling was varied. Sen. Richard Russell (D-Ga.) called it "shocking." Outgoing Gov. Marvin Griffin charged the court was setting aside the administrators' discretionary powers in selecting applicants.

Georgia Halts Registrations After Mix Setback In Court

Legislature Is Convening Today; Alabama Braces For Challenge

By AL KUETTNER
United Press International

Two growing breaks were evident today in the dike thrown up by the Deep South to ward off a rising tide of integration pressure.

The scenes were Georgia and Alabama, two of the four Dixie states that had been holding the line against school integration.

The Georgia Legislature convened today facing a three - fold crisis: a federal decree striking down segregation at the college level, another outlawing segregated seating on Atlanta transit vehicles, and a strong possibility that public school integration might be ordered before next fall.

In Alabama, the Federal Civil Rights Commission continued efforts to gather information on alleged discrimination against Negro voters. Negro leaders in the state have voiced determination to concentrate their fire in coming months on the state's practice of separating the races in the schools.

In Atlanta, the board which controls all state - supported schools of higher learning said it would allow no further registrations at any of the 19 units until officials had a chance to study the ruling Saturday by Federal Judge Boyd Sloan. He decreed that grounds for turning down three Negroes' application to an Atlanta branch of the system were discriminatory.

A day earlier, Federal Judge Frank Hooper ruled unconstitutional Atlanta's separate seating ordinance relating to public transportation facilities.

There were these other developments:

The U. S. Supreme Court was meeting after a holiday recess. One issue was whether to grant a hearing to Queen Cohen, a Negro of Savannah, Ga., who attacked a race issue in public housing. Six Negroes sentenced to 30 days in jail for trespassing on a Greensboro, N. C., golf course also sought a high court hearing.

George Bright, accused leader in the dynamiting of the Atlanta Jewish Temple, was to go on trial for the second time today on a reduced charge. An effort to convict him under a law carrying the death penalty ended in a mistrial last month.

In a move that gained impetus because of the Atlanta bombing, New York Sens. Jacob Javits and Kenneth B. Keating, both Republicans, mapped plans to again seek federal legislation dealing with terrorist bombings.

The Little Rock, Ark., school board was faced with a federal judge's demand that it reopen Little Rock schools padlocked under state law when faced with integration.

Admissions to University System Halted by Georgia

ATLANTA, Jan. 12 (UPI) — Admissions to all schools in the Georgia State University System were stopped indefinitely today by the State Board of Regents.

The action was in compliance with a recommendation by Gov.-elect Ernest Vandiver following the federal district court decision Saturday that qualified Negroes must be admitted to Georgia State College of Business Administration. Vandiver suggested that all applications be suspended until the board has time to study the decision.

The action will not effect the current quarter for which registration has been completed.

Board of Regents Chairman Robert Arnold said the admission stoppage was the only immediate action necessary.

Donald Hollowell, an attorney for the Negroes who brought the suit against Georgia State, said the registration shutdown gives his clients plenty of time to decide whether they will seek admission to the college.

In Georgia—

Segregation practices reel under court attack

ATLANTA, Jan. 12 — (AP) — Georgia segregation practices reeled today under the weight of two sharp blows by federal district judges.

Judge Boyd Sloan ruled Saturday that Negroes cannot be denied admission to the Georgia State College of Business Administration in Atlanta on the basis of race and color alone.

His ruling came one day after District Judge Frank Hooper outlawed segregation seating on Atlanta buses and trolleys.

Gov.-Elect Ernest Vandiver suggested that the University System temporarily stop accepting new applications for admission to the 19 state colleges and universities, and Regents Chairman Robert Arnold said this would be done.

VANDIVER, who becomes governor Tuesday, reportedly is planning to ask the Legislature to pass laws closing state Negro colleges if any white units are closed as the result of being ordered to integrate.

Vandiver also said he will ask the lawmakers, who convene today, to approve bills designed to close individual schools rather than entire school systems if integration is ordered. Present laws call for closing entire school districts if one school in the district is integrated.

Appearing on an Atlanta television program, Vandiver added that the proposal would give the governor power to close any school from which Negroes transfer.

THE STATE prbably will appeal Sloan's broad order, although the judge did not actually order the plaintiffs—three Nego women—admitted to the college. He said they were qualified to apply and have their applications considered.

GEORGIA U. BOARD HALTS ADMISSIONS

ATLANTA, Jan. 11 (UPI)—The State Board of Regents agreed today to stop registration at Georgia's nineteen colleges and universities as a counterattack against a Federal desegregation order.

Robert O. Arnold, chairman of the board, said the move was being carried out at the suggestion of Gov.-elect Ernest Vandiver. However, the action was not expected to have any immediate affect since registration for the current quarter has already been completed at the nineteen units of the university system.

The move was made to prevent any immediate attempt by Negroes to enter all-white Georgia schools as an aftermath to yesterday's ruling by Federal Judge Boyd Sloan that segregation at Georgia State College of Business Administration here was unconstitutional.

Mr. Arnold said the Board of Regents would not have to meet to carry out Mr. Vandiver's recommendation. He said all that was needed was for the regents to send instructions to the schools to temporarily close their doors to additional students.

Mr. Vandiver said he suggested the action to permit time for further study of the ruling. The 40-year-old lawyer takes office Tuesday.

ATLANTA, Jan. 12 (UPI)—Admissions to all schools in the Georgia State university system were stopped indefinitely today by the State Board of Regents.

The action was in compliance with a recommendation by Governor-Elect Ernest Vandiver. Following the Federal district court decision Saturday that qualified Negroes must be admitted to Georgia State College of Business Administration, Vandiver suggested that all applications be suspended until the board has time to study the decision.

U.S. JUDGE ORDERS GEORGIA COLLEGE TO END NEGRO BAN

Voids School's Requirement of Alumni Endorsements of All Applicants

BROAD PRECEDENT SEEN

Regents Halt Admissions to All University Units on Governor-Elect's Plea

By CLAUDE SITTON
Special to The New York Times.

ATLANTA, Jan. 10—A Federal District Court enjoined Georgia State College today from barring Negro applicants solely because of race.

The State Board of Regents immediately suspended acceptance of any new applications for the nineteen colleges in the university system. This action was taken by the board's chairman, Robert O. Arnold of Covington, at the suggestion of Lieut. Gov. Ernest Vandiver, who assumes the Governorship next Tuesday.

Mr. Vandiver apparently urged the step on the supposition—confirmed in Negro circles here—that Negroes would seek to enter other institutions besides the one named in the decision.

Ruling Called Precedent

Legal experts said that, as in similar cases in other states, the decision had set a precedent affecting all public institutions of higher education in Georgia.

In today's ruling, Judge Boyd Sloan held that three Negro women who had sought admittance to Georgia State, second largest school in the state university system, were entitled to an injunction prohibiting the Regents from continuing to limit the school to whites.

He specifically struck down the validity of a requirement that a Negro applicant must be endorsed by three of the school's alumni, all of whom are white.

However, the jurist did not order the college to enroll the three Negroes. He emphasized that it still had the right to pass on such qualifications as scholastic ability and moral character, and noted that two of the women did not meet the necessary standards.

Eugene Cook, State Attorney General, said that an appeal was likely, but that no decision would be made until he had studied Judge Sloan's order.

A. T. Walden, one of three attorneys representing the women, praised the decision but conceded that further litigation probably would be necessary to force Georgia State and other all-white institutions to accept Negroes.

The need for such action would arise, he said, if the school's officials used other admission requirements illegally to block Negroes.

But he and the other lawyers viewed the decision as the beginning of the end of segregation in all state colleges in Georgia. One of them, D. L. Hollowell, contended that it applied "to all branches of the university system."

Under present Georgia laws, desegregation at Georgia State or any other public institution would result in automatic closure through the cut-off of state financial support.

Spring Showdown Likely

The showdown is not expected to come until next spring since registration has been completed for the winter quarter and the books will not be reopened until March 26.

Judge Sloan's action followed a decision yesterday by Judge Frank A. Hooper in Federal District Court outlawing segregated seating on Atlanta's bus and trolley system.

Negro leaders here requested all Negroes to refrain from taking any steps to assert their rights under the ruling. Officials of the Atlanta Transit Company reported no incidents and said that Negroes had continued to take their customary seats at the rear of its vehicles.

In the college case, Judge Sloan declared that he was "bound by the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, and for this court to express disagreement with such decisions would not only be futile but improper." He also held:

"The policy, custom, practice and usage of the defendants in maintaining and operating the Georgia College of Business Administration on a racially segregated basis is violative of the rights secured to the plaintiff, and of the rights secured to other Negro students of Georgia, who are similarly situated, by the due process and equal protection clause of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States."

Judge Sloan found "not significant" the contention of state attorneys that the motive of the Negroes in seeking admission had been to lay the groundwork for the suit.

"The alumni certificate requirement," he ruled, "is invalid as applied to Negroes because there are no Negro alumni at any of the white institutions of the University system of Georgia, and consequently this requirement operates to make it difficult, if not impossible, for Negroes to comply with the requirement, whereas white applicants do not face similar difficulties."

Judge Sloan then concluded: "It is to be kept in mind that the authorities in control of the operations of the Georgia State College of Business Administration have the primary right and responsibility of fixing and passing upon the qualifications for admission.

"The decree will only restrict the exercise of this right to prohibit denying admission to qualified Negroes solely because of their race and color, and to prohibit the adoption of admission requirements that will deny to them the equal protection of the laws and due process of the law."

U.S. Judge Bars Atlanta College Ban on Negroes

ATLANTA, Jan. 10.—A Federal judge today struck hard at racial segregation in Georgia's state colleges, and Gov.-elect Ernest Vandiver quickly suggested that the schools temporarily quit accepting any new applications for admission.

Federal District Judge Boyd Sloan ruled that the Georgia State College of Business Administration, second largest of the nineteen units of the university system, cannot deny admission to Negroes on the basis of race and color alone.

Calling the decision regrettable, Mr. Vandiver, who becomes Georgia's seventy-third Governor Tuesday, disclosed his action in a statement issued through his office.

Suspension Suggested

He said he had suggested to Robert O. Arnold, regents chairman, that units of the university system "suspend for the time being the acceptance of any new applications for admission from any person until such time as members of the Board of Regents have had an opportunity to thoroughly study the decision rendered today."

Apparently anticipating some such decision, Mr. Vandiver is reported to be planning to ask the Legislature which convenes Monday for laws closing state Negro colleges if any white units close as the result of being ordered to integrate.

'Violative Rights'

While today's order applies only to the 5,550-student Atlanta institution, it struck down a key regulation of the university system for maintaining segregation. That was a requirement that applicants must be indorsed by alumni of the institution to which they are seeking admission.

Judge Sloan's broad order also declared that operation of the Atlanta College on a racially segregated basis is "violative of the rights secured to plaintiffs, and of rights secured to other Negro students of Georgia, who are similarly situated, by the due process and equal protection clause of the 14th Amendment."

As Georgia Attorney General Eugene Cook pointed out, Judge Sloan did not order admission of the plaintiffs—three Negro women—to the Atlanta school. He said they were qualified to apply and have their applications considered.

The state likely will appeal. And even if the Judge declines to stay his injunction pending a final ruling the three applications still will have to be processed. And Judge Sloan said in his ruling that two of them may not be qualified as to moral character for admission.

So it still will be some time yet before a Negro is actually admitted to a previously all-white state college. Under Georgia law, that would close the unit by cutting off its funds.

The law suit was brought by four Negroes in September, 1956. Three of them are women, Barbara Hunt, twenty-five, clerk in Atlanta University, a Negro college; Mary Elliott Dinsmore Holland, twenty-six, now unemployed, and Iris Welch, forty-five, clerk in a Negro drug store. The fourth plaintiff, Russell T. Roberts, dropped out for personal reasons after the suit was filed.

In trial of the case, the state relied heavily on the alumni certification regulation. But it also questioned the moral and scholastic qualifications of the applicants, claiming they had not exhausted their administrative remedies and insisted they had applied merely to file a lawsuit.

In his order, Judge Sloan reviewed the background of the plaintiffs and said they are qualified on their scholastic records to apply for admission. He added that evidence indicates two of the women—Mrs. Hunt and Mrs. Holland—"may not be of good moral character and for that reason may not be qualified for admission to the college."

The alumni certification regulation, which applies to all units of the university system, requires an applicant to obtain a certification as to ability and good moral character from an alumnus of the institution he seeks to enter.

In striking that down, Judge Sloan said the effect "upon Negroes has been, is, and will be, to prevent Negroes from meeting this admission requirement." He added that the requirement "is invalid as applied to Negroes because there are no Negro alumni of any of the white institutions of the university system of Georgia."

In granting an injunction against continued operation of the Atlanta college for white students only, the Judge said:

"It is to be kept in mind that the authorities in control of the operation of the Georgia State College of Business Administration have the primary right and responsibility of fixing and passing upon the qualifications for admission."

In Washington, Georgia's two Senators were quick to deplore the order. Sen. Herman Talmadge expressed regret at the ruling "striking down the right of a sovereign state to prescribe requirements for admission to its colleges and universities."

Sen. Richard B. Russell said he had not read the ruling but that "from the admitted facts presented to the trial court relating to the character of some of the plaintiffs, it is shocking to me for any judge of any race to order the admission of such persons to any college over the objection of the governing board."

GEORGIA STATE COLLEGE OF BUSINESS ADMINISTRATION
DISCRIMINATION

Court Bound By Decision Of U. S. Supreme Court

ATLANTA, Ga. — (SNS) 14e(1) Discrimination

Segregation at Georgia State College of Business Administration was legally outlawed early Saturday morning when U. S. District Judge Boyd Sloan issued an injunction against the institution prohibiting the continuation of a policy limiting the college to white students only.

Judge Sloan also issued a second injunction prohibiting the losing defendants from requiring Negro applicants "to that institution" to furnish certificates "as to their personal qualities" which can only be certified by the alumni of the all-white institution."

In his finding of facts regarding the case, Judge Sloan said, "The effect of the alumni certification requirement upon Negroes has been, is, and will be, to prevent Negroes from meeting this admission requirement. They would and have, as a result, been rejected as incomplete applicants without being considered on their merits."

SPECIAL NOTICE 1-14-59

Judge Sloan wrote a special judicial notice in which he said: "The court agrees that it is not customary for Negroes and whites to mix socially or attend the same public or private educational institutions in the State of Georgia, and that by reason of this present existing social pattern, the opportunities for the average Negro to become personally acquainted with the average white person and particularly with the alumni of a whole educational institution, are necessarily limited."

In making the desegregation decision, Judge Sloan declared, "This court is bound by the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, and for this court to express disagreement would not only be futile but improper."

Judge Sloan ruled that on the basis of evidence presented before him, the plaintiffs and members of the class they represent are entitled to an injunction prohibiting the defendants from continuing to limit the Georgia State College to white students only.

DECLARATORY JUDGEMENT

He also issued a declaratory judgement in which he "enjoined the defendants from requiring Negro applicants to that institution to furnish certificates as to their personal qualities which may be certified to only by alumni of the white institution."

In formulating the decree, Judge Sloan pointed out that "it should be kept in mind that the authorities in control of the operations of GSC still have the primary right and responsibility of fixing and passing upon the qualifications for admission."

He reminded that this injunctive decree will only restrict the exercise "of this right to prohibit denying admission to qualified Negroes solely because of race and color, and to prohibit the adoption of admission requirements that will deny to them the equal protection of laws and due process of law."

The declaratory judgement, received by the district court clerk's office from Judge Sloan early Saturday morning, means a victory against color entrance bars for Mrs. Barbara Hunt, Mrs. Myra Dinsmore and Miss Iris Mae Welch and the "class which they represent."

Mailing the decision to the clerk from his Gainesville, Ga. home, Judge Sloan apparently delivered the death blow to the segregation policies in the Georgia Business College case were asked for comments on Judge Sloan's decision in that case the following statement was issued by Attorneys E. E. Moore, D. L. Hollowell and A. T. Walden:

"It is equally as inexplicable as it is indefensible that the youth of every race under the sun are not only permitted, but bidden, to enter the Georgia State Business College as well as the University of Georgia, while the Negro youth of Ga., whose forbears have lived here more than three hundred years, are excluded from entrance solely on account of race

"Accordingly therefore, the judgment of the U. S. District Court declaring as unconstitutional the exclusion of Negroes from that institution, solely on the basis of race, is naturally gratify to us, our clients and to all fair-minded citizens, and particularly since counsel are of the opinion that the court's decree is supported, not only by the law and evidence, but also by the higher dictates of justice and equity."

NAACP STATEMENT

Dr. C. Clayton Powell, acting president of the Atlanta Branch NAACP, speaking in behalf of the local organization, made the following statement Saturday afternoon for release to the press:

"As citizens of Atlanta and the State of Georgia, we are pleased at the decision of the United States District Court which permits citizens, regardless of race to avail themselves of the educational opportunities afforded in all of our state tax-supported institutions under the same terms and conditions applicable to other students.

"We trust that all responsible citizens will accept this decision with a christian and law abiding spirit."

of the local business college, which was unsuccessfuly defended by the State Board of Regents, the Chancellor of the University System of Georgia, and the president and registrar of the college in question.

FOLLOWED BUS DECISION

The victory for the school suit plaintiffs came less than 24 hours after another major federal court decision was handed down Friday declaring certain state and city laws and ordinances requiring segregated seating on buses unconstitutional and invalid.

The school desegregation suit came to a hearing December 8 and lasted five days. The major issue the state tried to prove was that the Board of Regents' ruling requiring each applicant to a university system college to acquire the alumni certification of at least two graduates of the institution where admission is sought was not complied with by the three Negro plaintiffs.

Judge Sloan struck down the alumni certification requirement as applied to Negro applicants as invalid when he ruled that the "presently existing pattern in the State of Georgia makes in unfeasible that Negroes could obtain the required signatures since all previous graduates of the institution have been white.

14e(1) Discrimination

The school desegregation decision was taken by the Negro citizens just as calmly as the bus desegregation decision was received only a few hours earlier. There were no bursts of spontaneous celebration or any unusual incidents observed anywhere.

ELATED OVER DECISION

Attorney E. E. Moore, Jr., chief counsel for the victorious plaintiffs, said Saturday morning after hearing news of the success, "all of the counsel and all of the plaintiffs are very elated over the decision."

Attorney Moore said he did not feel in a position to comment on future procedure as a result of the winning decision. He said he would like to have an opportunity to read the written version of Judge Sloan's ruling before making any further comment regarding future plans.

Two of the three plaintiffs were unavailable for comment, however, Mrs. Barbara Hunt, contacted at an Atlanta University office, simply commented that "I am very happy about the wonderful decision."

COUNSEL MAKE STATEMENT

When counsel for the Negro groups solely on the ground of their race or color," Judge Sloan added.

The injunction will have the effect of restraining the State Board of Regents, the Chancellor of the University System of Georgia and the president and the registrar of GSC from continuing to practice the enjoined discriminatory measures. They were the losing defendants in the school desegregation suit filed by Mrs. Barbara Hunt, Mrs. Myra Dinsmore and Miss Iris Mae Welch.

Judge Sloan also ordered the losing defendants to pay the court costs that were incurred in the preparation and hearing of the final trial.

Federal Decree Signed By Atlanta Justice Sloan

14e(1) Discrimination

ATLANTA, Ga. — (SNS) — The official decree enjoining the Georgia State College of Business Administration from continuing discriminatory practices to exclude Negroes solely on the basis of race was signed by U. S. District Judge Boyd Sloan late Wednesday afternoon.

In the official order, signed in his handwriting, Judge Sloan ordered that the defendants be forever enjoined and restrained from: requiring Negro applicants to furnish certificates as to their personal characteristics or abilities which may be certified to only by alumni of white institutions; and refusing admission to GSC to Negroes who are qualified for admission solely on the ground of race or color.

Judge Sloan pointed out, as he did in his oral mandate, that the injunction is not meant to restrict the business college from the "proper" exercise of its right to fix admission requirements and pass on the qualifications of applicants.

"The intent is to only restrict the exercise of that right to forbid admissions requirements which will deny Negroes equal protection or due process of law and to forbid denial of admissions of Ne-

College Segregation Ruled Out in Georgia, Enrollments May Halt

Little Rock Is Prodded By Court

ATLANTA, Ga., Jan. 10 (AP)—A Federal Court order today against racial segregation in Georgia's State Colleges brought a request from the state's incoming Governor that all schools temporarily cease accepting any new applications.

U. S. District Judge Boyd Sloan, in knocking out segregation policies of the Georgia State College of Business Administration in Atlanta, also held invalid an admission requirement state officials had relied on to maintain segregation in the 19 units of the university system.

RULING DEPLORED

Ernest Vandiver, who takes over the Governor's office Tuesday, called the decision regrettable. He said he suggested to Regents Chairman Robert O. Arnold that State colleges "suspend for the time being the acceptance of any new applications for admission from any person until such time as members of the Board of Regents have had opportunity to thoroughly study the decision."

The Federal Court order held unconstitutional a regulation requiring all applications for admission to State colleges to be backed by two or three alumni of the institution where the student proposed to enroll.

NO NEGRO ALUMNI

Judge Sloan said there are no Negro alumni of these schools and that it is, therefore, invalid since it would be "difficult if not impossible" for Negro applicants to get the needed signatures.

While ruling out race as a cause for refusing entry, Judge Sloan said school authorities still have "the primary right and responsibility" of passing upon an applicant's qualifications. In this connection he said that two of the three Negro women seeking entrance to the Atlanta institution may not be qualified on moral grounds.

NEW APPLICATIONS

All three must now file new applications and even if the judge declines to hold up his injunction pending a state appeal, it likely will be some time before a Negro gains admittance to the Georgia school.

The ruling came at the same time that another Federal judge was ordering the school board of Little Rock, Ark., to report within 30 days on plans it has made for integrating high schools in the city. The two school rulings followed by one day the outlawing of segregation on Atlanta's buses.

MANDATE UPHELD

In the Little Rock ruling, U. S. District Court Judge John E. Miller actually put into effect a mandate issued Dec. 2 by the 8th U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals at St. Louis. He pointed out that the mandate did not direct him to order reopening of Little Rock's high schools, closed since Sept. 12, 1958.

Robert Laster, a member of the school board, said Judge Miller's order "has put us in an untenable position" since Arkansas' school closing law orders the Governor to close any school under court orders to integrate.

He said it was his opinion that the board could only wait out the 30 days allowed by the court and see what happens.

CLOSED BY FAUBUS

Judge Miller did not spell out whether he expects the board itself to seek reopening of the schools, or whether his court would be satisfied if the board simply prepares an integration plan and has it ready for use when and if the schools are reopened by any means.

Little Rock's four public high schools were closed Sept. 12 by Gov. Orval E. Faubus in an anti-integration move. Faubus shut them under powers given to him by a special session of the Arkansas Legislature last summer.

NEW LAW SOUGHT

As an aftermath of the Atlanta ruling, Vandiver is reported to be planning to ask the Georgia Legislature, which convenes Monday, for laws closing State Negro colleges, if any white units close as the result of being ordered to integrate.

While today's order applies only to the 5550-student Atlanta institution, it struck down a key regulation of the university system for maintaining segregation. That was the requirement that applicants must be indorsed by alumni of the institution to which they are seeking admission.

And Judge Sloan's broad order also declared that operation of the Atlanta college on a racially segregated basis is "violative of the rights secured to plaintiffs, and of rights secured to other Negro students of Georgia, who are similarly situated, by the due process and equal protection clause of the 14th Amendment."

Georgia College Told It Must Admit Negroes

By AL KUETTNER

ATLANTA, Ga. — (UPI) —Segregated practices at a Georgia college were ruled unconstitutional Saturday by a federal judge who granted three Negro applicants an injunction making it easier for them to apply at the all-white institution.

The historic decision by District Judge Boyd Sloan came almost simultaneously with another highly significant federal decision. In that case, a federal judge in Arkansas instructed the Little Rock school board to take affirmative steps on its own initiative in integrating Central high school, now closed over the race crisis.

The Georgia case involving efforts by three Negroes to enroll at Georgia State college in Atlanta, will be appealed to the Supreme Court.

Judge John E. Miller ordered the Little Rock school board not to do anything "capable of impeding or frustrating integration, either independently or with any other persons at Central high.

The Miller order included an injunction to prevent the Little Rock school board from transferring any school property without approval of the curt.

The Georgia decision, which followed a lengthy non-jury trail last December, was the first in the state to directly slap down segregation practices at a state college or public school.

The decision sent officials hurrying to their offices on a usually non-business Saturday morning to study Sloan's orders.

Neither the college nor state officials would comment except to say an appeal will be taken.

In passing on the merits of the case, Judge Sloan said specifically that it was up to the college to establish its entry requirements and that he would have no objection to them so long as they did not, in the court's opinion, violate the constitutional rights of applicants.

Sloan's decision struck at the heart of Georgia laws requiring strict segregation of all public schools and state colleges. The state has severe laws on the subject which include a provision automatically closing any institution that permits integration. Anyone who teaches in an integrated school in the state would be subject to prosecution and any institution involved would have its allocation of state funds withdrawn immediately.

Georgia Atty. Gen. Eugene Cook said that he definitely would appeal the order but would not comment further.

Sloan's decision struck at the day another federal order declaring segregated transportation practices in the city of Atlanta unconstitutional.

Still another important civil rights case is pending in the federal courts here. It involves a general attack on segregation of the Atlanta public school system. A trial and decision on that case is anticipated before September, 1959.

Plaintiffs in the case before Sloan were Barbara Hunt, Iris Mae Welch, and Myra Elliott Dinsmore, three women who attempted in June 1956, to enroll at the Georgia State College of Business Administration here, one of the 17 units of the university system under control of the board of regents.

During the trial phase of their case in December they asked for a declaratory judgment against the segregated practices at the college and an injunction that would relieve them from obtaining the signatures of three alumni before they could enroll. This is a requirement throughout the university system.

But the plaintiffs, contended that because there are no Negro alumni at the college, they were to all effects prevented from complying with this regulation.

They said they applied at the college in good faith although they acknowledged they had obtained legal counsel in their fight from the NAACP.

The defendants contended that the Negroes did not comply with requirements set up for all applicants to state institutions. They said the Negroes did not bring required transcripts with them, and they also attacked the character of two of the three women who admittedly have illegitimate children.

One of the requirements for entrance at the college is that the applicant must have good moral character.

Judge Sloan ruled that he is bound by the decisions of the U.S. Supreme Court which already has called segregated college practices unconstitutional.

He cited the due process and equal protection clauses of the 14th admendment.

He said that a scholarship program now in use by the board of regents for Georgia Negroes elsewhere in the country does not meet the requirement of the Negroes' constitutional rights.

Student Ban Urged After Georgia Ruling

ATLANTA, Jan. 10 (AP).—A Federal judge today struck hard at racial segregation in Georgia's State colleges, and Gov.-Elect Ernest Vandiver quickly suggested that the schools temporarily quit accepting any new applications for admission.

United States District Judge Boyd Sloan ruled that the Georgia State College of Business Administration, second largest of the 19 units of the university system, cannot deny admission to Negroes on the basis of race and color alone.

Calling the decision regrettable, Mr. Vandiver, who becomes Georgia's 76d governor next Tuesday, disclosed his action in a prepared statement issued through his office.

New Law to Be Sought

He said he had suggested to Regents Chairman Robert O. Arnold that units of the university system "suspend for the time being the acceptance of any new applications for admission from any person until such time as members of the board of regents have had an opportunity to thoroughly study the decision rendered today."

Apparently anticipating some such decision, Mr. Vandiver is reported to be planning to ask the Legislature which convenes Monday for laws closing State Negro colleges if any white units close as the result of being ordered to integrate.

While today's order applies only to the 5,550-student Atlanta Business College, it struck down a key regulation of the university system for maintaining segregation. That was a requirement that applicants must be indorsed by alumni of the institution to which they are seeking admission.

Judge Sloan also declared that operation of the Atlanta college on a racially segregated basis is "violative of the rights secured to plantiffs, and of rights secured to other Negro students of Georgia, who are similarly situated, by the due process and equal protection clause of the 14th Amendment."

As Georgia Attorney General Eugene Cook was quick to point out, Judge Sloan did not order admission of the plantiffs—three Negro women—to the Atlanta school. He said they were qualified to apply and have their applications considered.

Appeal Likely

The State likely will appeal. Even if the judge declines to stay his injunction pending a final ruling, the three applications will have to be processed.

It still will be some time yet before a Negro is actually admitted to a previously all-white State college. Under Georgia law, that would close the unit by cutting off its funds.

The lawsuit over admission of Negroes to the Atlanta school was brought by four Negroes in September, 1956. Three of them are women. They are Barbara Hunt, 25, a clerk in Atlanta University, a Negro college; Mary Elliott Dinsmore Holland, 26, now unemployed, and Iris Welch, 45, a clerk in a Negro drug store.

The fourth plaintiff, Russell T. Roberts of Atlanta, dropped out for personal reasons after the suit was filed.

In trial of the case, the State relied heavily on the alumni certification regulation. But it also questioned the moral and scholastic qualifications of the applicants, claiming they had not exhausted their administrative remedies, and insisted they had applied merely to file a lawsuit.

Orders Georgia To Open School

ATLANTA — (UPI) — Federal Judge Boyd Sloan formally ordered Georgia State college this week to stop refusing admission to Negro applicants solely on the grounds of race or color.

The formal order followed a decision by Sloan last Saturday in the non-jury trial instigated by three Negro women. It directed regents of the university system, chancellor Harmon Caldwell, college President Noah Langdale, jr., and college Registrar J. B. Blair to:

1—Cease requiring Negro applicants to furnish certificates as to their personal character and abilities "which may be certified only by alumni of white institutions."

2—Cease refusing admission at Georgia State college to "Negroes who are qualified for admission, solely on the grounds of race or color."

The three women, Barbara Hunt, Iris Welch and Myra Dinsmore, tried to enroll at the college here in June, 1956, but were rejected for failure to meet entry requirements. The requirement that stopped them was one requiring alumni endorsement of their character.

NEGROES ANSWER AGE LAW WITH YOUNGER APPLICANTS

Journal 4
Constitution 9
Sun. 5-10-59

By MARGARET SHANNON

The youthful appearance of 10 Georgia Negroes seeking to enroll at Georgia State College and Georgia Tech seems to supply the Negro answer to the Vandiver college entrance age-limit law.

The answer: Younger applicants.

Sun. 5-10-59

But backers of the measure, including some of the governor's segregation brain trust, don't act disturbed about developments. They still insist it's a good law for keeping Negroes out of white colleges.

Gov. Ernest Vandiver has defended it several times. He urged its passage and refused to veto it despite opposition to the bill by the State Board of Regents, who run the state's colleges.

THE LAW SAYS beginning students must be under 21 for undergraduate study and under 25 for graduate work. The regents have also adopted stringent rules for administering the law.

Teachers and students whose education has been delayed by military service are excepted from the age limits, as well as such others as the regents choose to exempt. But the regents' rules are not very generous even in these respects.

Until filled-in preregistration forms come in from the nine Negro women who say they want to enter Georgia State, their ages cannot be given with certainty. The college has not released their names.

BUT MEMBERS of the admissions office staff who saw them say they all appear to be young enough to meet the age requirements, except maybe one, and she said she's a teacher.

Two of the three Negro men who picked up application blanks at Georgia Tech seemed young enough, and the third between 25 and 30.

One of the trio said he'd attended Wayne State University in Detroit, and one said he has been to Fort Valley State College, one of Georgia's state-supported Negro schools. The other was a high school graduate.

ONE INDICATED he wanted to major in physics, another in mechanical engineering and the third in electrical engineering.

Eight of the nine Negro girls visiting Georgia State expressed an interest in undergraduate work and one in graduate study.

The age-limit law was inspired by the age of Negro students involved in integration attempts in Georgia and other states.

The Negro who broke the race barrier at the University of Texas was 46. Autherine Lucy, the Negro who won admission to the University of Alabama and later was expelled, was 22 when she first filed suit, 26 when admitted.

ONE OF THE three Negro women plaintiffs in the Georgia State case tried in December was 23 when she first applied for admission, another 21 and the third around 45.

The thinking behind the age-limit law, according to an authoritative segregationist source, goes this way:

Negroes heretofore involved in college entrance suits have been older than ordinary college age, so there must be some hesitancy or fear of failure on the part of younger Negroes.

And, even if younger Negroes apply, they are likely to be less well-prepared scholastically than their white contemporaries.

THIS HAS MORE than a theoretical base. Tests given both students and teachers, white and Negro, show the Negro learning level lower here than whites in the same grade or with similar time in college.

Thus, reason the segregationists, the age-limit law will be useful because the younger Negroes are less likely to pass scholastic aptitude standards than older Negroes who might had had some college work before trying to enter white colleges.

One of the contributing factors to the lower Negro levels of learning cited by segregationists is the generally poor educational opportunities for Negroes which existed until recent years. They say improvements have not yet brought Negro attainments in education up to white levels.

IF ANY OF THE dozen interested Negroes follow through on applications at Georgia State and Tech, the theories of the age-limit backers may be proved or disproved.

At any rate, its advocates are not beating a retreat—not yet.

The law has imposed a heavy administrative burden on state colleges and undoubtedly already has kept some whites out of school. The law's supporters consider it's worth the price to prevent race mixing.

Atlanta youth, 18, seeks admittance to U. of Georgia

ATLANTA — Hamilton E. Holmes 18-year-old valedictorian of his high school class, last week announced that he had applied for admission to the University of Georgia at Athens.

Officials at the university said that registration for the fall quarter has been closed and that white students have been turned away because all dormitory space has been taken.

University officials apparently forgot, however, the possibility that young Holmes may not want to live on campus and would prefer to live in town.

State Is Prepared To Shut Colleges, Vandiver Warns

Says NAACP Is Plotting to Close Schools

By BRUCE GALPHIN

Gov. Vandiver warned Wednesday that there have been no changes in plans to shut down Georgia colleges which may be ordered integrated.

Journal 4
Constitution 9
Sun. 5-10-59

He labeled the request of 10 Negroes for admission forms at two colleges here "another conspiracy on the part of the NAACP to shut down our schools."

An NAACP spokesman, former Atlanta branch president John H. Calhoun, declared that the 10 "apparently were acting on their own initiatives."

But Vandiver asserted that the Negroes "aren't interested in education . . . they're only interested in destroying our schools."

ASK FOR FORMS

The latest integration move came Tuesday when seven Negro women asked for registration forms at the Georgia State College of Business Administration and three Negro men at Georgia Tech.

[redacted] Tuesday and the women were mailed blanks Wednesday. College officials said that if the Negroes submit applications, the requests will be treated in routine fashion.

Tuesday's development was the first since Federal Judge Boyd Sloan declared segregation at Georgia State illegal in a ruling last January.

"FREEZE" RESCINDED

It was also the first move since the regents rescinded their "freeze" on enrollments two weeks ago.

If the Negroes apply, they might contend that rejection violated Judge Sloan's injunction.

Constitution
Sun. 5-10-59

Under the state appropriations act, funds are automatically cut off if a college is mixed. Furthermore, the governor under a 1959 act has the power to shut down any unit of the university system.

Asked at his Wednesday press conference whether some compromise arrangement might be reached in the case, Vandiver said there has been no change in plans to shut down integrated units.

Names of the 10 Negroes have not been released. College officials said it was customary to withhold names pending processing of applications.

Six of the seven women asked for undergraduate registration forms. They appeared to be under the 21-year-old age limit imposed by a 1959 act. The seventh asked for graduate school forms. She appeared to be under the prescribed age of 25.

Tech has no pre-registration forms similar to Georgia State's, and Registrar William L. Carmichael handed the three Negro men the requested forms. He said two appeared to be under 21 but that the third apparently was older.

The woman seeking graduate school applications was accompanied by a Negro man identified by Georgia State officials as the Rev. Samuel W. Williams, professor of philosophy at Morehouse College and pastor of the Friendship Baptist Church.

Georgia U. Gets Applications Of Two Negroes

Herald Trib.
Sun. 5-10-59
Constitution

ATHENS, Ga. (AP)—Two Negroes have applied for enrollment in the undergraduate school of the all-white University of Georgia. Officials said Saturday they have been informed along with others that there is no room.

Registrar Water N. Danner said the Negro applicants were the same as had obtained the signature of the Fulton county clerk of Superior Court on their application forms. They were Hamilton Earl Holmes and Charlene Alberta Hunter, 17-year-old graduates of Turner High School, Atlanta. Both are young enough to qualify under the state's recently set age limit for undergraduates.

The registrar already had said the university has been closed to freshmen because of lack of dormitory space and only bona fide residents of Athens are being considered. He estimated that 500 applicants with good records have been turned down.

Negro Women Apply To Enter White College

ATLANTA (AP)—Three Negro women have applied formally for enrollment at Georgia State College but the school's director of admissions says none is qualified.

William S. Patrick said applications were received Monday by registered mail from Alice Wyche, 24 of Charlotte, N.C., and Ernestine Brown, 25, and Mary Evelyn Rogers, 20, both of Atlanta. Miss Wyche gave a Charlotte home address but said she had been living in Georgia three years.

OTHERS MAY BE COMING

Six other Negro women who last week obtained registration data from Georgia State have not yet been heard from. The deadline for preliminary application for the summer quarter was Sunday. Any postmarked Sunday or earlier will be processed.

A federal judge ruled in January that the downtown Atlanta college could not refuse Negroes admission because of race. None of Georgia's public schools or colleges are integrated.

Patrick reported that on the basis of birth dates listed on the applications, by the time fall registration begins all three of the Negro women will be past the age limits of a new Georgia college entrance law—under 21 for undergraduate students, under 25 for graduate study.

He gave the following analyses of the applications:

Mary Evelyn Rogers—Her high school record does not comply with minimum standards for Georgia State freshmen and she has not taken a required entrance examination.

Ernestine Brown—She already is over the age limit, did not furnish any transcripts of previous work and failed to file a college entrance test score.

Alice Wyche—She did not supply a transcript of previous work, she apparently had not taken a required admission test and the deadline for admittance to the graduate division — which she sought—was May 1.

Two More File to Enter Ga. Colleges

ATLANTA — Applications of two more young Negroes to enter a white school have been received. Both students, high school graduates of Atlanta, are honor students and want to enroll in the University of Georgia at Athens.

They are Hamilton E. Holmes, 17, son of Dr. M. H. Holmes, who sued successfully to end bias at Atlanta's golf courses, and Charlene Alberta Hunter, 17, daughter of an Army chaplain.

Young Holmes was valedictorian of his class, a football and basketball star, and Miss Hunter was third in the same class and editor of the Turner High School annual.

Both young people are likely to meet all the requirements of a scholastic nature and thus qualify for admission. The school authorities say no more fall enrolees can be accepted because all dormitory facilities are gone. Out-of-town students must say in dormitories at the University of Georgia.

The two can get around this by moving to Athens and entering as day students, residing at homes in Athens.

Their getting the application forms caused Governor Vandiver to call a conference with 17 legal and political leaders.

Nine Negroes have also gotten forms for entry to Georgia State College of Business Administration here.—TWA.

REGENTS TRYING TO FIGURE WAY OUT

Law to Bar Negroes Hits White College Students

By MARGARET SHANNON

A law which the Legislature passed to keep Negro students out of white colleges is keeping white students out of white colleges by the hundreds.

The law has been passed two months and the State Board of Regents hasn't yet been able to figure out what do do about it. So its edict to colleges in the University System was: Don't do anything; just wait.

SOME OF THE results of the waiting:

1. Georgia State College in Atlanta has 650 fewer students for the spring quarter than it had last year.

2. The Augusta Center of the University of Georgia has 276 students. Last spring quarter it had 645.

3. Armstrong Junior College at Savannah enrolled 485 students in its evening classes. It had 787 last year.

Georgia State, being the kind of school it is, got the worst blow of the University System's big three. Georgia Tech and the University of Georgia at Athens don't have much of a spring quarter turnover ever, so it didn't much matter to them.

A year ago, however, it enrolled 205. This 91 per cent drop in spring-quarter enrollment of new students set the Chatham County legislative delegation to demanding a special session of the General Assembly to repeal the age limit law. (The Chatham legislators voted for the bill last session.)

ARMSTRONG'S over-all enrollment—both old and new students in day and night courses—went down less drastically. It fell from 1,149 to 912—a 21 per cent decrease.

Many of the potential new students were airmen at Hunter Air Force Base in Savannah. Such students take courses to qualify them for Air Force missile, electronics and other scientific schools.

About 175 Hunter men usually attend Armstrong, and 150 of them are over 21.

But Armstrong's and Georgia State's plight pales besides that of the off-campus centers of the University of Georgia—centers devoted unabashedly to the education of students to whom the Vandiver administration and the Legislature have now said the state owes no education.

HARDEST HIT is the Augusta Center, where the average

But where they're trying to educate adults—working people and the like—it has meant heartbreak and heartburn.

THE LAW CAUSING all the consternation is one of Gov. Ernest Vandiver's segregation plans, the product of his brain trust of constitutional lawyers.

It says a person must be under 21 to start to college in the University System as an undergraduate student and under 25 to enter as a graduate student.

The Board of Regents didn't want the law, but Gov. Vandiver insisted on it.

So the regents told the colleges just not to admit any overage new students while how to administer the law was being decided. The deciding didn't get done in time to help spring-quarter enrollment.

AT GEORGIA STATE, no new students were admitted at all, no matter what their age. Enrollment is 3,700, compared to 4,350 this time last year.

Georgia State didn't reduce its regular faculty as a consequence, but it cut its staff of part-time instructors from 22 last spring quarter to six now.

Armstrong in Savannah, using not quite so deep a freeze age is 31. Last spring quarter, the enrollment was 645. This spring's was expected to be 600. But came the freeze and the total registration was 276.

The center had to cancel 22 courses.

There were howls from Augusta officials and assorted other higher-ups. Lt. Gov. Garland Byrd, visiting there, said he understood Gov. Vandiver had told the regents to act as quickly as possible to relieve the situation.

No relief has come. And there isn't going to be any for the spring quarter. Gov. Vandiver has said he'll meet with a regents' committee Wednesday on the matter of how to thaw the freeze by summer quarter enrollment time.

* * *

THE LATEST WORD from the Board of Regents is that it will act on new admission regulations at its April 15 meeting—if the regulations are ready to be acted on.

Vandiver legislative leaders promised in the course of debate on the age limit bill that, if it passed:

1. No Negro would get into any white college.
2. No white would be kept out.

The first promise has been kept. The second hasn't been. Figuring out how to keep the second is taking a long time.

Georgia Fixes College Policy

Rigid Rules On Race Mixing Include Limits On Age

REGISTRATION RESUMES

ATLANTA, April 22.— State supported colleges were given rigid new admission policies Wednesday for use in operating under the state's ban on student racial mixing.

The action removes a freeze on registrations of new students imposed after a United States District Court ordered the Georgia State College here not to bar Negro students on account of race. The freeze had kept thousands of students from registering for the spring quarter.

Following the court ruling the Legislature enacted an age-limit law designed to discourage suits by Negro applicants. It bars initial admission of persons more than 21 years old to undergraduate study and puts a limit of 25 on admission to graduate schools.

University system regents Wednesday adopted two sets of regulations, one on general admission procedures and the other on administration of the age-limit law.

Allows Exceptions

The age-limit law permits the regents to make exceptions for students with such ability as to justify their additional education at state expense. The colleges were given the right under the new policies to require whatever tests and conduct whatever interviews they think necessary in deciding about making exceptions under the law.

The new regulations require higher academic ability and permit colleges to reject applications when enrollment reaches capacity.

The age-limit law exempts teachers and veterans who were prevented from entering college by reason of military service.

The regulations provide that any applicant who meets other admission requirements will not be denied admission because of age if, in the judgment of admission officials, he meets the listed conditions.

Factors Listed

These conditions include that the applicant must show good intent and purpose; display a proper sense of social responsibility and a reasonable promise of favorable personality adjustment; possess such general fitness, including psychological factors, that his admission would further the interests of himself and the college and that his character and ability are such as to justify additional education at public expense.

Colleges also were authorized to consider whether further education of the applicant would contribute to the overall economic welfare of the state. In reaching that decision the schools can consider the need in the state for persons trained in the applicant's field, ability of the applicant to serve in the field, the nature of his employment or profession, his relative standing in the high school or college last attended and any other fact or circumstance that might illustrate ability and fitness.

2 More Negroes Seek Entry to Georgia State; Adviser Fails to Show

'Mystery' Aide for 7 Skips Date

BY JACK KAPLAN

Two new Negro women sought registration information at Georgia State College Thursday, but James Dennis, "mystery" counselor for seven others who applied Tuesday, did not keep a conference appointment.

The new applicants were accompanied by the Rev. Samuel W. Williams, pastor at the Friendship Baptist Church and philosophy professor at Morehouse College, who was with the seven Negro applicants Tuesday.

The names of the new applicants will not be released until they have completed all the pre-registration applications, according to William S. Patrick, director of admissions for Georgia State.

LOOKING FOR FORMS

Two of Tuesday's applicants were there seeking forms Thursday. They said they had not yet received forms sent out by the college.

Patrick said he could not understand why the forms had not been received.

"We have half a dozen witnesses to the fact that they went out by 10:30 Wednesday morning," he said.

One of the new women had applied for admission to the college in December.

Dennis, self-appointed leader of the group which applied Tuesday, had asked for an appointment with Patrick for 3 p.m. Thursday. The interview was granted, but Dennis, who is not known by Atlanta Negro leaders, did not show up.

Dennis did not ask for application blanks for himself, but Patrick said the women did not make a move Tuesday without getting Dennis' advice.

Patrick said he believed that Dennis' failure to appear was "a step backward" for the group.

He also said the two additional applicants did not appear to follow the plan of the original seven. Unlike the first group, these two gave complete names and addresses.

Patrick said the applications would "be handled exactly like all others."

"It seemed to me," he said, "that Dennis wanted some kind of special treatment, but we will continue to handle all applications alike."

Patrick said all of the Negroes who have thus far indicated they would apply for admission have appeared to be under the new age limit "with one possible exception."

He said he did not have all their ages.

Also Tuesday, three Negro men picked up application blanks at Georgia Tech.

The action at Tech and Georgia State was the first move by Negroes to enroll in all-white state-supported colleges since U.S. District Judge Boyd Sloan's ruling in January that segregation at Georgia State is unconstitutional.

The new Negro applicants at Georgia State bring the total to nine so far. Eight have applied for undergraduate work and one on the graduate level. All are women.

3 Negroes Are Ruled Ineligible

6 Fail To File At Georgia State of several disqualifying factors in their records.

ULTIMATE INTENTION

There was some speculation, however, that the ultimate intention might well be a court suit aimed at testing the recently enacted law that sets age limits on both undergraduate and graduate students at state colleges.

Georgia State was the target of a Negro's suit that resulted early this year in a U.S. District Court ruling that Negroes could not be denied admission to the college on racial grounds alone.

After rejecting the Negro women's applications Monday, Patrick pointedly noted that "quite a few white people were caught in the same predicament" and were ruled ineligible for summer quarter work.

DEADLINE CITED

He said Sunday, May 10, was the deadline for filing pre-registration forms for the summer quarter although letters postmarked May 10 but received Monday were considered—as in the case of the rejected Negroes.

Another Georgia State official said that "several white persons showed up Monday with their applications in their hands. They were told they had missed the deadline and their applications could not be accepted."

Negroes' Intent Due Today at Georgia State

Georgia State College finds out Monday whether any Negroes will go through with their intentions of applying for admission to the summer quarter.

Nine Negroes came to the college last week to get pre-registration forms, the first step in the registration of any applicant. Any forms postmarked Sunday will be processed.

After their first trip to the college, the Negroes failed to show up again and their spokesman, James Dennis, also did not keep an appointment with Admissions Director William S. Patrick to discuss the cases.

6 Others Don't File For Entry

By MARION GAINES

Three Negro women Monday applied for admission to Georgia State College but were ruled ineligible for summer quarter work at the all-white institution by Admissions Director William S. Patrick.

Patrick said pre-registration forms returned by the Negroes by registered mail indicated all three failed on several grounds to meet preliminary qualifications for admission.

Nine Negroes last week requested pre-registration forms from Georgia State, but only the three who were rejected Monday had returned the forms to the admissions office by the deadline.

NAMES LISTED

The Negro women whose applications were ruled unqualified were identified by college officials as:

Alice Wyche, 24, native of Charlotte, N. C., who said she has been living in Georgia for the past three years; Mrs. Ernestine Brown, 25, of 274 Bowen Cir., SW, Apt. 2, and Mary Evelyn Rogers, 20, of 48 Northside Dr., NW.

Patrick pointed out that only one of the three — Miss Rogers — is now within the state college entrance age limit set forth in an act passed by the 1959 General Assembly at Gov. Vandiver's behest.

OVER AGE LIMIT

Based on information provided in their pre-registration forms, Patrick said, "all three will be over the age limit by the opening of the fall quarter. Registration for the fall quarter begins Sept. 15."

As for the six Negroes who did not return pre-registration forms Monday, Patrick said it is "too late" for them to file for summer quarter admission but the forms will "still be good next September."

Georgia State officials would not comment on why the Negro women went ahead and filed the pre-registration forms in the face of the fact that they were told specifically what the admission requirements are.

(1)—Alice Wyche—Lacked transcripts of her previous work at Austin University where she said she received a BS degree in 1956 in the School of Public Relations and Communications. In addition, she was seeking admission to Georgia State's graduate division but had not taken the required Graduate Record Examination.

(3) Mrs. Ernestine Brown — Filed no transcripts "either from high school or college" and did not submit a college entrance test score.

According to the forms, Mrs. Brown is the only one of the three who is married. Her husband was listed as Value Winston Brown and she said she has two children, ages 5 and 8 months. Born in Atlanta, she attended Howard High School, Clark College and Carver Vocational

All the Negroes who appeared at Georgia State last week "were told specifically what the admission requirements are," Patrick said. They also were given mimeographed copies of the requirements, he added.

FORMS INFORMATION

Patrick said the Negro women's pre-registration forms showed they did not meet the admissions requirements for these reasons:

NONE QUALIFIED'

Three Negro Women Apply To Enter Georgia College

ATLANTA (AP) — Georgia State College received enrollment applications from three Negro women by registered mail Monday.

William S. Patrick, director of admissions, announced that none was qualified for enrollment.

One of the applicants, he reported, gave a Charlotte, N.C., home address but said she had been living in Georgia three years. The other two are from Atlanta.

Patrick named the three as: Alice Wyche, 24, Charlotte.

Ernestine Brown, 25, and Mary Evelyn Rogers, 20, both of Atlanta.

ATLANTA SCHOOL

Still unaccounted for were six other Negro women who last week obtained registration data from the all-white downtown Atlanta school, where a few months ago a U.S. judge ruled Negroes could not be denied admittance because of race.

Patrick said initial examination of the pre-registration forms submitted by the trio show them to be ineligible for registration for the summer quarter.

And on the basis of birth dates listed, he added, all three by time to register for the fall term will be past the age limits of a new Georgia College Entrance law.

APPLICATION NEWS

The admissions director gave the following analyses of the applications:

Mary Evelyn Rogers' high school record does not comply with minimum scholastic standards for Georgia state freshmen. Her transcript from Hubbard High School in Forsyth does not include algebra, a required subject, and she does not have the required academic units. Nor has she taken a required entrance examination.

Ernestine Brown did not furnish any transcripts of previous work. These may be received later, but she failed also to file a college entrance test score.

Alice Wyche also lacked a transcript from her previous studies at Austine University. Her application failed in two other respects—she sought admittance to the graduate division, for which the cutoff date was May 1, and she apparently had not taken a required admission test.

AGE LIMITS

Mary Evelyn Rogers if the only one of the three currently within the age limits set by Gov. Ernest Vandiver's 1959 college entrance measure—a bill described when it was passed as aimed solely at maintaining segregation in state-supported colleges.

Mary Evelyn Rogers is the only interest as business education, will be 21 in July, before such a course is available at the college. That would put her beyond the age limit for undergraduate study.

Ernestine Brown is beyond both the undergraduate and graduate study age limits. She listed her aim as a bachelor's degree in business administration.

Alice Wyche said she is interested in a master's degree in business administration. But in August, before start of the fall term, she will be 25, or beyond the age limit.

The deadline for preliminary application for the summer quarter was Sunday but admissions officials are processing all forms postmarked no later than that date.

Regents Head Asks Tough Entry Rules

MACON (AP) — Robert O. Arnold, chairman of the board of regents, proposed Monday admission qualifications so stringent for the University System of Georgia "that damn few white people and no Negroes can get in."

Deploring the lack of training which pupils receive in high school, Arnold told the Macon Rotary Club that there re instances of high school graduates being admitted to the system "who cannot read or write."

He said he had been asked on occasion how strict the regents—who operate the university system—should be in setting up admission requirements.

"I think we are going to have to get so strict that damn few white people and no Negroes can get in," was the reply.

Arnold also blasted the U. S. Supreme Court and said that the college of business administration in Atlanta "has kept us in court and looks like it will keep us in court."

He referred to a suit in federal court by Negroes seeking admission to that institution.

Reviewing the university system program, Arnold said that total enrollment for the spring quarter is down 5,000 students from a year ago when the system counted 34,000 students.

Arnold said he had served on the regents board under three governors, having been appointed by Gov. Herman Talmadge. He paid special tribute to Gov. Marvin Griffin who, he said, had once served as a teacher and therefore was "deeply interested" in education.

Negroes Ask to Enter University of Georgia

ATHENS, Ga. (AP)—Two Negroes have applied for enrollment in the undergraduate school of the all-white University of Georgia. Officials said Saturday they have been informed along with others that there is no room.

Registrar Water N. Danner said the Negro applicants were the same as had obtained the signature of the Fulton county clerk of Superior Court on their application forms. They were Hamilton Earl Holmes and Charlene Alberta Hunter, 17-year-old graduates of Turner High School, Atlanta. Both are young enough to qualify under the state's recently set age limit for undergraduates.

The registrar already had said the university has been closed to freshmen because of lack of dormitory space and only bona fide residents of Athens are being considered. He estimated that 500 applicants with good records have been turned down.

Earlier, Horace Ward, an Atlanta Negro, sought admission to the university's law school. After several years of litigation in U.S. court he was ruled out for failure to follow through properly with his application.

Negroes earlier this year won a federal court decree that they could not be discriminated against in university system enrollment. So far, no suit has been filed specifically demanding the admission of individual Negroes.

Pulse of the Public

Georgia State College Graduate Protests Proposed Age-Limit Bill in Legislature

Atlanta — I gather we are still entitled to express our opinions about legislation, although at the rate things are going, any day now I expect to be told to shut up.

I refer to the current legislation regarding the age limit for entering state-supported colleges. This is verily a huge step forward toward being told, like Russians are, what we can or can't do with our lives, and I am thoroughly incensed about it. Here is my argument against this particular bill:

I entered Georgia State College at age 56 and received a degree there last year. The benefits I have received from my college education are immeasurable in giving me self-confidence, if nothing else.

I had intended, if nothing prevented, to continue to study for a master's degree, simply because I enjoy learning at my age things for which I had no time nor inclination most of my life. There are not too many of us at my age who desire to occupy themselves thus instead of sitting around interfering with their children's affairs or passing the time waiting for senility to creep up on them. If we pay for such a pastime, I don't see how anyone can have the right to deprive us of this method of self-improvement. We certainly don't take up that much room in the colleges.

Another thing: We pay taxes for this purpose.

Here is one thing I noticed during my sojourn at Georgia State. Many of the best-rated students were mature men and women, most of whom did not have the opportunity to attend college when they finished high school. Most of these, like myself, could not afford the higher tuition rates of the excellent but privately owned colleges because they had families to support, but were sufficiently ambitious to want to improve their lot. Should such people be deprived of their chance?

MRS. RUTH G. DeKINDER.

Character Rule Voted By Regents

New admission regulations based on the applicant's character and personality were adopted for the University System by the Board of Regents Wednesday, apparently as a cushion against future anti-segregation court rulings.

The resolution empowers units in the University System to select or reject applicants on a basis of their "social responsibility, adjustment or personality, sturdiness of character and general fitness for admission to the institution."

NO SEGREGATION PLAN

Although it is similar in character to Alabama's placement regulation, L. R. Siebert, secretary to the board, denied that the resolution was designed as a segregation measure.

Segregation "didn't enter the board's discussion at all," Siebert said, and neither was any mention made of the recent federal court ruling which threw out Georgia State College's requirement that applicants have the recommendation of an alumnus.

WANT BEST STUDENTS

"For a long time the board has known we should have a better selection of students," Siebert said. "After we finish the dormitories currently planned we probably won't be getting any more and there is a tremendous demand for admission. It's good business to select the best prepared students and we can find those by tests, aptitudes, grades and interviews."

Up to passage of this resolution, Siebert admitted, screening of students by personal interview has been largely confined to graduate schools and students on the border-line scholastically.

The board also approved recommendations of the committee on buildings and grounds, to push along a $6,000,000 dormitory construction program on the campuses of the University of Georgia, Georgia Tech, North Georgia College and Georgia Teachers College at Statesboro; and construction of an 80-bed infirmary to begin at Georgia Tech about May 1.

SOUTHERN TECH

Preliminary plans for the proposed nine-unit, $2,000,000 Southern Tech campus at Marietta were approved by the board. The campus is moving from Chamblee to Marietta on a 119-acre tract largely supplied by Marietta and Cobb County. Architects' drawings submitted to the board showed plans for 1,200 students immediately with accomodations for 2,500 in the future.

The board also accepted the resignation of John Sammons Bell as deputy assistant attorney general assigned to the board and commended him for his "competent advice and splendid services." Bell, chairman of the State Democratic Committee, resigned, effective Feb. 1, to comply, he said, with the spirit of Gov. Vandiver's honesty program.

NEW REQUIREMENT

Under the new admissions resolution each institution of the University System shall require applications for admissions to be filed at least 20 days before registration.

Enrollment Freeze Is To Halt State College Entry

An enrollment freeze on prospective undergraduate students 18-years-old and over and graduate school applicants over 25-years-old is expected to prevent some young Georgia men and women from gaining entrance into a state-supported college or university.

This age exclusion is the result of one piece of segregation legislation enacted by the Georgia General Assembly during its recently ended session.

The age legislation will immediately affect the "overage" prospective applicants to Georgia institutions during the upcoming start of the spring quarter registration.

The age limits, as interpreted by the General Assembly, will apply to Negro and white colleges alike. The only exception to the rule as set up by the lawmakers will be teachers and veterans.

Meanwhile, the would-be freshmen of 21 or older and the would-be beginning graduate student of 25 or older will have to wait until the University System comes up with some procedures to determine the "fitness" of the "over-age" student to start college or try to get in some college that is not tax-supported.

The five other segregation bills Gov. Ernest Vandiver, asked for and got are:

1. Allows him to close a single school ordered integrated instead of all in the school district.
2. Gives the Governor authority to shut down any University System unit, or school within a unit, ordered integrated.
3. Permits income tax credit for contributions to bona fide private schools.
4. Forbids municipal independent school systems from levying taxes to support integrated public schools.
5. Authorizes the governor to supply attorneys for city or county school or other officials who need it in segregation or other civil rights cases.

Despite the federal courts' decision striking down segregation laws, segregation lawyers and Gov. Vandiver contend that the decision does not directly affect Georgia.

They all concede, however, that the decision sets precedents that do not lend credence to Georgia school segregation laws. Vandiver has promised that if these can be struck down, others will be enacted.

Georgia To Defy Court

School Entry Lists Closed

ATLANTA —(UPI)— The State Board of Regents prepared Sunday to order registration shifted at Georgia's 19 colleges and universities as a counterattack against a federal desegregation order.

Robert O. Arnold, chairman of the board, said the move was being carried out at the suggestion of incoming Gov. Ernest Vandiver. However, the action is not expected to have any immediate effect since registration for the current quarter has already been completed at the 19 units of the university system.

The move was made to prevent any immediate effort by Negroes to enter all-white Georgia schools as an aftermath to the Saturday ruling by Federal Judge Boyd Sloan that segregation at Georgia State College of Business Administration here is unconsitutional.

Arnold said the board of regents would not have to meet to carry out Vandiver's recommendation. He said all that is needed is for the regents to send instructions to the schools to close temporarily their doors to additional students.

Vandiver said he suggested the action to permit time for further study of Judge Sloan's ruling.

Vandiver, a 40-year-old lawyer who takes office Tuesday, said his incoming administration "will exhaust every resource of the state to sustain and uphold Georgia's way of life and her sacred traditions."

Vandiver said Sunday he will propose legislation at this session of the Georgia legislature to close only the white school to which a Negro student was admitted.

Under present law, when a school is ordered integrated in Georgia, the whole system would be closed.

Vandiver said the new proposal would also empower him to close the school from which the Negro applicant came.

He said his leaders will introduce in the legislature next week a package of segregation bills. "We want to have in our arsenal all possible weapons," he said.

14e(1) 1959 GEORGIA STATE SUPPORTED COLLEGES DISCRIMINATION AGE LIMIT BILL

Lopsided Passage Is Predicted for College Age Limit

Smith Sees House Okay This Week

By GENE BRITTON

Administration leaders Sunday predicted House passage "by a lopsided vote" of Gov. Vandiver's college "age limit" bill despite warnings from educators that it might blast holes in the state's system of higher education.

Speaker George L. Smith II said the House will pass the measure this week "by a lopsided vote." Floor leaders of both houses, Sen. Carl Sanders and Rep. Frank Twitty, said they thought "favorable action" would be completed on all the governor's proposed legislation within the next few days.

The bill is apparently aimed at limiting the number of Negroes who may apply for admission to the state's all-white colleges and universities since, most of those who have already applied have been in their late 20s or older.

CUT ENROLLMENT

Passed in the Senate by a 52-2 vote, the measure would set an age limit of 21 for students applying for admission to undergraduate schools and 25 for those seeking to do graduate work.

Presidents of both the University of Georgia and Georgia Tech warned Sunday the bill would cut deeply into their enrollments.

Dr. Edwin Harrison, Tech president, said an age limit law could have a particularly "damaging effect on our graduate program."

He said 65 per cent of the Tech graduate students in 1958 would have been ineligible to pursue their studies under such a law.

AID FACULTY

The harm would be to the school as well as the students, he said, since graduate students "are of inestimable service to us as teachers, research workers and laboratory technicians."

Tech's faculty might also suffer, he said.

"If we're going to attract and keep an outstanding faculty we're going to have to have a good graduate program," he explained. He said there is sometimes a "special reward" in graduate teaching, not found in teaching undergraduates.

About seven per cent of the entering freshmen last year were above 21, he said.

"I presume most of those were veterans," he continued. An age limit on college entrance would be an "imposition on fellows who had been called into the Armed Forces," he added.

1,000 AT ATHENS

Dr. O. C. Aderhold, president of the University of Georgia in Athens, said about 1,000 students at the university would have been adversely affected if the age limit law had been in operation at the beginning of this school year.

He said 10 per cent of the freshmen class and about 30 per cent of the students in graduate and professional schools would have been eliminated.

Robert O. Arnold, chairman of the Board of Regents of the University System of Georgia, said careful consideration should be given to the age limit bill before its final passage.

"I think Gov. Vandiver has shown a very fair attitude, and I believe he will allow everyone to be heard," he said.

TO EXPRESS VIEWS

He said he thought the state's educators would be given a chance to express their views, possibly before a legislative committee, before the final vote.

No committee public hearings on the bill have been announced, however.

Two votes were cast against the bill in the Senate. Sen. Charlie Brown of Atlanta said he thought it would wreak havoc with the educational program at Georgia State College of Business Administration in Atlanta where many adults are continuing their education. Sen. Russell J. Mercer of Metter said he thought it would put a stumbling block in front of older people who might want to become teachers.

Dr. Noah Langdale, president of Georgia State, was not available for comment.

Administration leaders point out that there is a provision in the bill by which the Board of Regents is empowered to make "special dispensations" and that school teachers who take summer college courses are exempt from the bill.

DeKalb Rep. James A. Mackay raised a question Sunday over the possibility of the bill's being in violation of the state Constitution.

"There is no logical ceiling on education," he said, adding: "I think the bill is patently unconstitutional."

He pointed to a section of the Georgia Constitution which reads: "The provision of an adequate education for the citizens shall be a primary obligation of the state of Georgia."

The educators who expressed concern over the fate of their schools' programs Sunday were silent on the question of constitutionality.

Bill Is Voted 160-26 After Hot Debate

By BRUCE GALPHIN

The House approved a 21-year age limit on college applicants over objections of a carefully mounted but hopelessly outnumbered opposition Wednesday.

The vote was 160-26.

Two minor amendments tacked on in the House will send the bill back to the Senate before it goes to the governor.

Opponents charged that the bill either didn't mean what it said or that it would wreck adult education in Georgia and throw thousands of adults out of college.

EDUCATORS OPPOSED

Rep. Quimby Melton of Spalding, a member of the Board of Regents, told the House all the regents and university officials were opposed.

But administration forces drowned the "anti" group with arguments that the bill would at least be an expression of public opinion and throw up stumbling blocks to integrated suits.

A State of the Republic Committee amendment adopted by the House changed one word in the bill. Instead of allowing the Regents to make exceptions for students of "unusual" ability, it said the Regents could admit students of "such" ability as to justify the expense.

VETERANS EXCEPTED

Also approved was a proviso by Rep. Henry Peyton of Coweta making exceptions of armed forces veterans.

Speaking against the bill, Rep. Edgar Wilson of Bibb declared that the House was being asked to pass something on the argument that the Board of Regents could "win at it."

"It's a sorry day when we have to sneak around the back way to accomplish our aims," Wilson said.

But Speaker Pro Tem George Bagby asserted, "It's not a subterfuge. It's another attempt to keep the Negroes out of the schools of Georgia."

"The Board of Regents is not going to keep any white person out of the University of Georgia under this bill," Bagby warned.

TWITTY SPEAKS

And floor leader Frank Twitty declared: "If there is any dean or president in the university system who says he cannot take this bill and admit any qualified student, then I call on that dean or president to resign."

"You know why we're trying to pass this bill," Twitty continued. "We're trying to put a weapon in the hands of the people who run our university system."

The floor leader said the Supreme Court might invalidate the measure, but asserted: "We're going down fighting regardless of how many times they strike us down."

Rep. J. Ebb Duncan of Carroll said that "this is the third time in three General Assembly sessions I have opposed this bill or one just like it. This bill was drawn by Buck Murphy (attorney B. D. Murphy) and submitted to Gov. Griffin last year."

CITES TROUBLE

Duncan said the Board of Regents would have to stay in "session continually" to handle exceptions to the age limit.

Rep. A'Delbert Bowen of Randolph remarked that "the trouble caused at Little Rock . . . (and) Virginia was not caused by people over 21. . . . I believe the NAACP is certainly going to be able to find people under 21."

However, Rep. William P. Trotter of Troup noted that most college integration test cases, including the recent Georgia State College decision, involved older persons.

Melton told the House that he had been a defendant in two integration suits as a regent. But he said "the bill at the moment would assist the regents not one whit."

"Every time we grant special dispensation to a white student we would weaken our position in federal court," Melton said.

Rep. Wilson Brooks of Fulton said the bill would "defeat the purpose for which Georgia State College was originally founded." He cited a letter from the college's president reporting that 52.9 per cent of the college's undergraduates were over 21 and 90 per cent of their graduate students over 25.

(The bill also sets a 25-year-old limit on graduate and professional school enrollment.)

Rep. M. M. (Muggsy) Smith of Fulton, who often has a noisy audience for his speeches of opposition to segregation bills, declared:

"Now you know just how Herman Talmadge feels. He speaks up there (Washington) and nobody listens."

Rep. John Odom of Camden made a fiery speech of opposition in which he pleaded, "Let's have this legislative independence that we've been preached about by every gubernatorial candidate for 50 years."

PROPOSAL BEATEN

Before the main vote, the House defeated, 164-19, Rep. Edgar Blalock's proposal to postpone action for one week.

Following is a list of those voting against, or not voting on either side, the college age-limit bill:

Voting "Nay:"

Representatives Wilson Brooks, J. H. Cox, J. E. Duncan, J. H. Floyd, A. A. Fowler Jr., R. A. Griffin, Ben Jessup, S. H. Johnson, W. J. (Bill) Lee, James A. Mackay, R. C. Massee, C. Matthews, Ralph McClelland, W. Hugh McWhorter, Quimby Melton Jr., Marvin E. Moate, John D. Odom, T. A. Parker, J. T. Phillips, W. H. Pickett, Raymond M. Reed, Guy W. Rutland Jr., M. M. (Muggsy) Smith, W. S. Stuckey Sr., G. J. Williams, Harold S. Willingham and Edgar H. Wilson.

Not Voting:

R. E. Andrews, W. D. Ballard, Mac Barber, J. L. Barnett, Oris Braswell, George B. Brooks, G. H. Carswell, S. P. Carvens, Harry Dicus, A. Dilworth, M. J. Hale, R. Hill, Dr. J. H. Miller, R. H. Watson and H. E. Winkle.

AGE -LIMIT BILL

A MARGARET SHANNON SPECIAL

College Age Limit Bill

By MARGARET SHANNON

Gov. Ernest Vandiver was aware of the stringent opposition of the State Board of Regents and University System officials to his college entrance age-limit bill.

But he listened to his segregation advisers instead of the educators.

He did not seek the regents' advice or consent before proposing the measure.

The failure of a scheduled conference of regents and the governor to come off Tuesday did not mean that Gov. Vandiver was not advised of their feelings.

HE HAD BEEN TOLD of it earlier in a conference with Regents Chairman Robert O. Arnold, University System Chancellor Harmon Caldwell, about four college presidents and some of the regents' office staff members.

The meeting was not concerned solely with the age-limit bill. But the matter was discussed plainly enough for Gov. Vandiver to know where the educators stood.

The bill, which got final legislative approval Thursday and needs only the governor's signature to become law, sets an age limit of under 21 for undergraduate students entering state-supported colleges and of under 25 for starting graduate work.

HERE IS THE INSIDE story—or part of it, anyway—of what went on between the time the regents learned of the bill and its passage.

University System officials first learned of the bill Jan. 8—five days before Gov. Vandiver disclosed it in his inaugural address, and exactly one week before it was offered in the State Senate.

The Vandiver segregation proposals had been a rather closely guarded secret. He'd had a contingent of lawyers working on them for some weeks.

Among them were ex-Regent Charles Bloch of Macon and B. D. (Bucky) Murphy, a successful defender of the Board of Regents in Negro Horace Ward's suit for admission to the University of Georgia law school at Athens and more recently a loser in the Georgia State College integration case.

THE EDUCATORS were rather taken aback that the age limit proposal was being resurrected.

When the plan had last come up in the Marvin Griffin administration, they'd quietly enlisted the aid of Everett Williams, a state senator and Griffin-appointed regent, and Gov. Griffin had dropped the scheme.

This time, before the regents really had mobilized for action, the Vandiver age limit bill had passed the Senate on Jan. 20.

Board of Regents members and officials felt then that the only hope of blocking the measure lay in the governor, since the General Assembly was so overwhelmingly with him.

The conference already mentioned, at which the age limit bil was among matters discussed took place sometime after introduction of the bill.

IN ANOTHER MOVE, regents or board officials consulted Atty. Gen. Eugene Cook.

Questions were raised about the (state) unconstitutionality of the bill. The Georgia Constitution vests in the Board of Regents "the government, control and management of the University System of Georgia and all its institutions."

Mr. Cook reportedly conceded the possible unconstitutionality, but did not choose to act.

The same possibility apparently occurred to or was conveyed to Macon attorney Bloch.

He said last week he wrote a letter to Regents Chairman Arnold. It is believed the letter advised the chairman that all doubt about constitutionality would be removed if the Board of Regents would adopt the age limit bill as one of its own regulations.

* * *

IN VIEW of the regents' stand against the bill, it would be a backdown to do so.

Fears expressed to Gov. Vandiver by regents' representatives and college presidents were not completely fruitless.

As a result of those or other protests, the governor sent some regents' officials to segregation attorney Buck Murphy.

(Rep. Ebb Duncan of Carroll County, in House debate last week, tagged the measure "a Buck Murphy bill.")

The officials didn't budge Mr. Murphy, who was chief of staff (legal adviser) to former Gov. Griffin.

* * *

STILL OF THE notion that the only way to lick the bill was through Gov. Vandiver—instead of through a public assault on it—regents sought another conference with the chief executive.

Early last Monday, the meeting was definitely set up for Tuesday noon.

The delegation was to include Chairman Arnold, one of the Board of Regents committees (probably the key education committee), the chancellor, a few college presidents (probably Edwin Harrison of Georgia Tech, O. C. Aderhold of the University and Noah Langdale of Georgia State among them) and others.

Gov. Vandiver didn't come to his office that day. He had a cold. The regents' delegation didn't go out to the mansion to see him.

THE NEXT DAY, the House passed the bill, 160 to 26. On Thursday, the Senate agreed to House amendments. The legislating was over.

It is known that college executives and regents' staffers already have conferred about implementing the bill. If the governor signs it, they will be ready.

It is also believed they think it will not help one iota in preserving segregation in the University System—which some of them started working at when Gov. Vandiver was still a student at the university.

The Board of Regents is under a federal court injunction forbidding it to establish Georgia State admission requirements "which will deny to Negroes equal protection or due process of law."

* * *

THE REGENTS also are enjoined from denying admission to Georgia State "to Negroes who are qualified for such admission solely on the ground of their race or color."

Did Vandiver leaders in the House seal the doom of the age limit bill in the federal courts with their statements urging its enactment?

Shouted floor leader Frank Twitty: "The bill is designed to keep our University System segregated. That is the only purpose of this bill."

Declared Speaker Pro Tem George Bagby: "This is designed to keep the nigger out."

THIS IS THE BILL the Legislature has handed to the Board of Regents, which has been enjoined against practicing racial discrimination—at Georgia State anyway.

But the regents chose to make their fight behind closed doors instead of in the public domain, where the business of having to get a special dispensation to enter a tax-supported college if you're only a year out of your teens and similar arguments might have been effective.

Now no one will ever know whether the result would have been different if the regents had chosen to battle in the open.

Solon Ponders School Age Bill

Will Give Plan Careful Thought Before Voting, Rep. Freeman Says

By CHARLES POU

A veteran legislator Saturday said he is "very much concerned" about provisions of a Vandiver administration bill which would set a 21-and-25-year-age limit for students at state-supported colleges.

Without saying he would flatly oppose the Senate-passed measure when it comes before the House, Rep. William Freeman of Forsyth commented:

"I am very much concerned about provisions of that bill, and I think it should be given very careful thought. However, I am for it if it will help the segregation issue."

The measure, which first was suggested two years ago by the Georgia Education Commission but dropped before it reached the Legislature, breezed through the Senate on a vote of 51 to 2. It sets a limit of 21 for entering undergraduate students and 25 for graduate students.

THE BILL was offered as a segregation measure on the basis that most Negro plaintiffs in college integration suits have been older than 21 and 25 years. Proponents of the bill contend college registrars could make exceptions for GIs and worthy white students.

But it is known some university system officials are urging that the measure be withdrawn. They contend it may effect accreditation of state colleges.

Rep. Freeman, one of the most influential members of the House, raised the question that the measure might be unconstitutional. He said he hasn't studied thoroughly that possibility but pointed out the 1945 constitution provides the state "shall provide adequate education for citizens of Georgia."

That, he said, presumably would include "adult citizens."

Meanwhile, a majority of the lawmakers were at Jekyll Island Saturday for a weekend of inspecting state facilities. A bill which would transfer the Georgia Milk Commission (the old Milk Control Board) to the Department of Agriculture was a chief topic of conversation among the legislators and it may become the most controversial proposition to come up this session.

ALL OF THE MAJOR Vandiver administration bills proposed so far now have received ready passage by either House and Senate.

Rep. Howard H. Tamplin of Morgan, who is for the Jekyll trip, said he is sure the milk bill will win "overwhelming" passage when it comes before the House. A public hearing has been set on the measure for 2 p.m. Monday.

The Morgan lawmaker, chairman of the House milk and milk control subcommittee, said he "would appreciate it if the governor would remain neutral on the bill." Gov. Vandiver has pointedly observed it is not an administration bill.

But it is being pushed by the politically powerful Georgia Farm Bureau and the Georgia Milk Producers, Inc. It would in effect abolish the Georgia Milk

Commission, long headed by Charlie Duncan, and put its functions under the agriculture department.

Langston University President Desires To Retire; Board of Regents Takes No Action

LANGSTON. — Dr. G. Lamar Harrison, president of Langston university, advised the Board of Regents for A&M colleges that he desires to retire on June 30, 1960, but the board took no action on his request.

President Harrison, in giving his reason, stated that he preferred to retire at age 60 rather than age 65 while he was still young enough to go into some other activity. He pointed out that since Langston university is located in a small town, it would be unfair to the new president for him to remain in Langston after he retired at the age of 65.

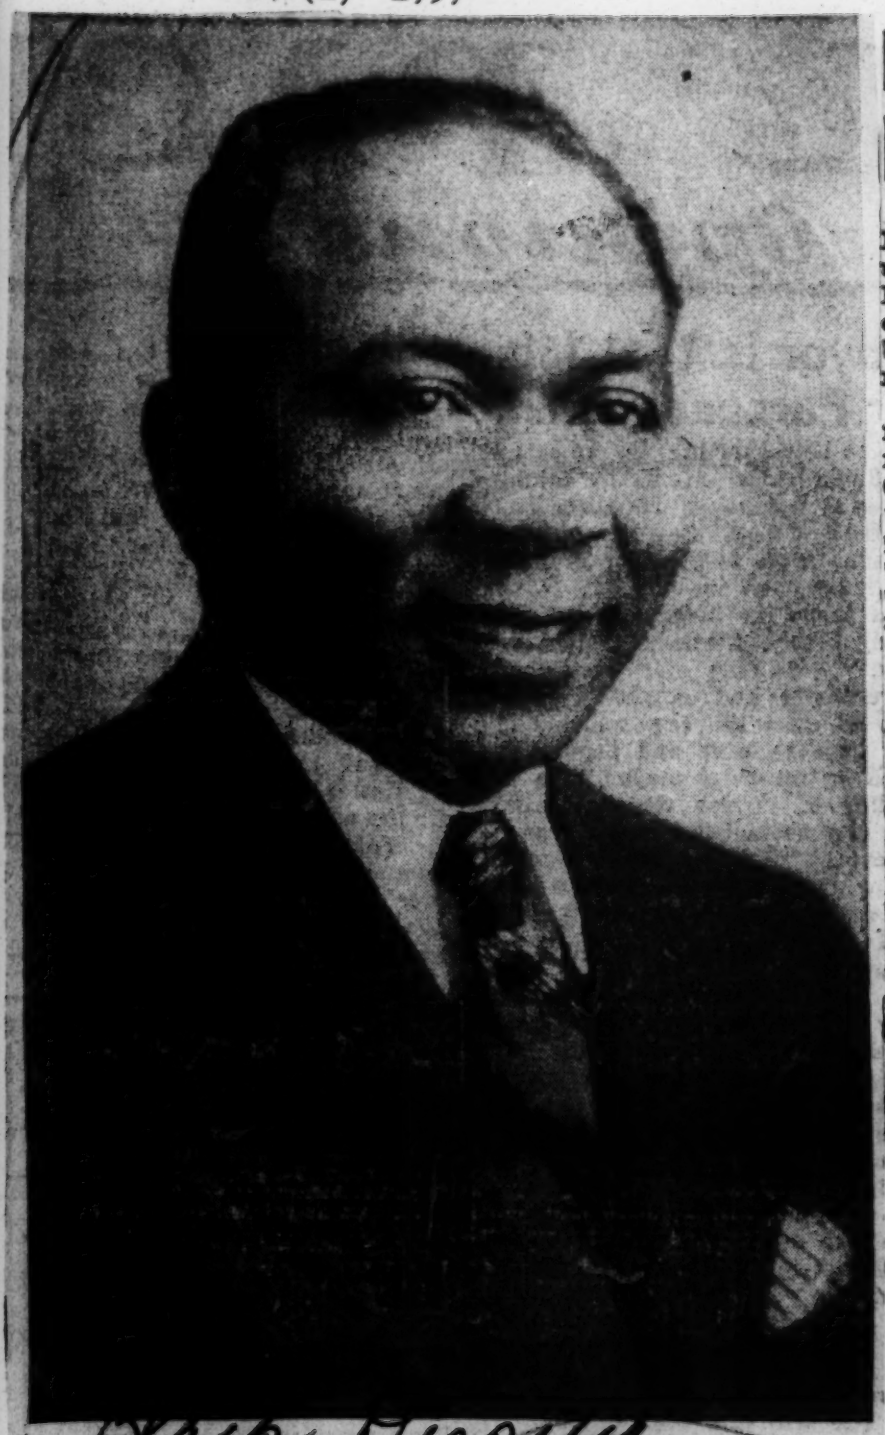
He emphasized that it is more difficult for a person to make adjustments to a new job and a new environment after he passes age 65. President Harrison has been offered an opportunity to join a real estate firm in Chicago.

Dr. Harrison has served as president of Langston university for 20 years.

Coming on the heels of Dr. Harrison's intent to retire was the announcement of the State Board of Regents that the university has been allotted its largest budget in history—a whopping $614,600, of which $529,918 is state funds.

The president said he has been able to raise the average salary to $6,200 per year.

"Everybody got from $400 to $700 raise," he concluded.



Dr. G. Lamar Harrison, president of Langston university, left Saturday, February 14, for Honolulu, Hawaii, to attend the inauguration of Dr. Laurence Snyder as president of the University of Hawaii. Dr. Snyder served for many years as dean of the Graduate School at the University of Oklahoma. The inauguration of Dr. Snyder was Feb. 17.

Registration At LSUNO Set Jan. 29, 31

Registration for the second semester at Louisiana State University in New Orleans is scheduled for January 29 through January 31, according to the current student handbook.

Presently, 53 Negroes are attending classes at LSUNO as a result of a Federal Court order last fall which opened the facility to all citizens regardless of race or color.

Residents of Louisiana who are graduates of state approved high schools are eligible for admission. Applicants who are not graduates of state approved high schools, and who present satisfactory evidence of education, training, experience and maturity may be considered for admission by examination.

Applicants who are not residents of Louisiana must be graduates of state approved high schools and must rank in the upper half of their high school graduating class to be admitted.

Concerning fees, the handbook states: "The Louisiana State University Board of Supervisors on July 3, 1958, adopted a resolution fixing the General Fee at $25 per semester for full-time students. This new rate applies to LSUNO as well as LSU. It was also resolved to increase the out-of-state fee from $100 to $150 per semester.

Fees are payable on a semester basis. Generally, the cost of textbooks and supplies range from $25 to $40 for the academic year. Upon registration the student should be prepared to pay all fees.

The court-ordered admission of Negroes to LSUNO caused a few minor incidents at the institution, however, peace has prevailed since the university officials made an investigation and disciplined several white students who were responsible.

Thus, it is expected that a substantial number of Negro high school graduates will be on hand when registration begins for the second semester January 29.

NEGRO ENTRANCE TO LSU ARGUED

Appeals Court Considers Matter

The United States fifth circuit court of appeals heard arguments Wednesday and took under advisement the case involving admission of Negroes to Louisiana State university's New Orleans branch.

The LSU board of supervisors and other university officials asked the court of appeals to reverse the action of Federal District Judge J. Skelly Wright who issued an injunction in September restraining them from refusing admission to Negroes because of their race.

Suit was brought by a group of Negroes who had been denied admission.

William P. Schuler, assistant attorney general, and William H. Shaw, Homer, special attorney for the LSU board, argued that Judge Wright should have upheld a motion to dismiss the suit on the grounds that the LSU board is a special agency of the state and immune from suit under provisions of the 11th amendment to the United States constitution.

They also contended that Judge Wright should have refused to entertain the position taken by the Negroes because they had not exhausted certain administrative remedies available to them after they had been turned down by the registrar.

In a brief argument defending the action of the district court, A. P. Tureaud, attorney for the Negroes, told the court that the questions raised by the LSU attorneys have all been settled in the Orleans parish school board segregation case and in the supreme court of the United States in the school segregation cases.

LSUNO Mixing Order Upheld

Court Rejects Appeal of Board of Supervisors

The United States fifth circuit court of appeals Thursday upheld a federal district court ruling which enjoins officials of Louisiana State university from enforcing segregation at the school's New Orleans branch.

In a brief per curiam opinion the circuit court rejected the appeal of the board of supervisors of LSU and other officials in which they sought to overthrow the injunction issued last September by District Judge J. Skelly Wright.

Judge Wright issued the injunction after the registrar at LSUNO had refused to admit Wilson Fleming Jr., and other Negroes who sought to enter the school.

69 NEGROES ADMITTED

Last fall, LSUNO opened its first classes to freshmen students. Of about 1460 enrollin&, 69 were Negroes admitted under the federal court order.

In their appeal, attorneys for LSU releid on two main points. The first was that the school's board is a special agency of the state and a suit against the board is, in efect, a suit against the state and contrary to the federal constitution.

In this connection the appeals court pointed out that it has already held to the contrary in the Orleans parish school board segregation case and cited an opinion from the fourth circut court of appeals in the Charlottesville, Va., school segregation case which held:

"If high officials of the state and of the federal government . . . may be restrained and enjoined from unconstitutional action, we see no reason why a school board should be exempt from such suit merely because it has been given corporate powers. A state can act only through its agents, and whether the agent be an individual officer or a corporate agency, it ceases to represent the state when it attempts to use state power in violation of the constitution and may be enjoined from such unconstitutional action."

Their second contention was that the Negroes had failed to exhause administrative remedies before bringing suit. The appeals court held this position "not tenable in view of the decision of the institution, evidenced by two letters from the registrar, that 'the policy of the board . . . does not permit . . . admission.'"

The opinion concluded "The law does not require the doing of a vain and useless thing."

Chief Judge Joseph C. Hutcheson Jr. and Judges John R. Brown and John Minor Wisdom concurred in the opinion.

Negro Sailor Now Student At Memphis

14e(1)

Memphis, April 13 (U.P.)—Memphis State University has enrolled its first Negro student, a hospital corpsman at Memphis Naval Air Station, in the school's base extension, M.S.U. President J. M. Smith said Monday.

Joseph Terry Boyd, 31, of Memphis was enrolled last month when the university set up the extension division at the base in suburban Millington, Smith said.

Boyd said he plans to enroll for classes on the Memphis State campus after his discharge next year. Smith said Boyd has already qualified by passing his entrance examination.

A suit seeking integration at Memphis State, filed by lawyers for the National Association for The Advancement of Colored People, is still pending in Federal Court here.

Memphis Univ. To Admit Qualified Negroes In Fall

MEMPHIS, Tenn. — (UPI) — The president of Memphis State university disclosed in federal court Friday that qualified Negro applicants will be admitted to the hitherto all-white university this fall.

President Jack Smith told Federal Judge Marion S. Boyd that the Tennessee State Board of Education has directed that qualified applicants be admitted to the University regardless of race. Boyd was hearing a case brought by Negroes who applied unsuccessfully to enter MSU last year.

Boyd declined to issue a ruling on Negro efforts to integrate the University.

'DECISION UNNECESSARY'

"In view of President Smith's testimony here today that all qualified colored students will be admitted to Memphis State university this fall semester, a decision by the court would seem unnecessary," he said.

"There is no point in requiring by injunction the defendants to do something which they have said in open court they intend to do."

Boyd presided at a two-hour hearing in which Negro woman attorney Constance Motley of New York City argued that the court should declare that the Negro students had been "unlawfully excluded in 1958, and that the University should no longer include them on grounds of fear and violence."

Meanwhile, in Georgia, two Negroes — who appeared to qualify under the state's new legal age limits, picked up applications Friday for admission to the all-white University of Georgia in Athens.

Walter Danner, registrar and director of Admissions, said admissions for the fall quarter had already been halted because the University was filled to capacity.

TWO GET APPLICATIONS

Danner said the Negroes, a young man and woman, were accompanied by two Negro adults. He added they quietly entered his department on the campus, picked up application blanks and catalogues and left, attracting little attention.

Boyd said he plans to enroll for classes on the Memphis State campus after his discharge next year. Smith said Boyd has already qualified by passing his entrance examination.

A suit seeking integration at Memphis State, filed by lawyers for the National Association for The Advancement of Colored People, is still pending in Federal Court here.

Memphis Univ. To Admit Qualified Negroes In Fall

MEMPHIS, Tenn.—Qualified Negro applicants will be admitted to the hitherto all-white Memphis State university this fall, the president of the institution disclosed Friday in federal court.

President Jack Smith told Federal Judge Marion S. Boyd that the Tennessee State Board of Education has directed that qualified applicants be admitted to the University regardless of race. Boyd was hearing a case brought by Negroes who applied unsuccessfully to enter MSU last year.

Boyd declined to issue a ruling on Negro efforts to integrate the University.

Three Negro students seeking entrance to MSU, who passed screening tests last year, are Misses Sammie Burnett and LaVerne Kneeland and Ralph Prater. Five other Negroes passed entrance examinations with these three in 1958, but during the one year period of delay in the case, they decided to enter other colleges after receiving scholarships.

'DECISION UNNECESSARY'

"In view of President Smith's testimony here today that all qualified colored students will be admitted to Memphis State university this fall semester, a decision by the court would seem unnecessary," he said.

"There is no point in requiring by injunction the defendants to do something which they have said in open court they intend to do."

Danner said the Negroes, a young man and woman, were accompanied by two Negro adults. He added they quietly entered his department on the campus, picked up application blanks and catalogues and left, attracting little attention.

Back in Tennessee, State Solicitor General Tillison B. Humphries said that as legal adviser to the state board of education that he knew of no "resolutions before the board to preclude Negroes from Memphis State in the absence of violence."

Boyd asked Smith if the State Board of Education "had told him to admit this fall all comers, including members of the colored race."

BOARD INSTRUCTED

Smith answered that the State board had so instructed me.

Smith further stated that he had received letters from the plaintiffs seeking admission in 1959. He said he had asked them for transcripts of their work during the past year and, upon receipt of the transcripts, had notified them of his desire to meet with them concerning their academic qualications for entrance.

In later testimony Smith added that other Negro applicants had taken entrace examinations for Memphis this summer. He did not indicate whether or not they had met entrance requirements.

Memphis School Suit Dismissal Hearing Put Off

MEMPHIS, Tenn. — Federal District Judge Marion S. Boyd Thursday postponed until March 6 a hearing on a state petition for dismissal of a suit aimed at desegregation of Memphis State University. The case had been scheduled for Friday.

U. S. Court of Appeals for the Sixth District in Cincinnati, Ohio, had denied Tuesday to attorneys for eight Negro applicants a petition for a hearing on a temporary injunction.

The case was appealed to Sixth District Court after Federal District Judge Marion S. Boyd refused to schedule a hearing for the injunction which sought to restrain the State Board of Education from denying the applicants admission to MSU last September.

The Court of Appeals stated in its ruling that Judge Boyd had authority to deny hearing the request immediately until a motion by the State, seeking dismissal of the applicants' suit, could be heard.

Judge Boyd ruled that the motion for dismissal of the case had precedence on the petition filed by attorneys for the eight applicants.

Tennessee State contends that the applicants have not exhausted all legal remedies in state courts.

Judge Boyd has scheduled the hearing on the State's motion for dismissal today (Fri- Feb. 20). A date had not been set for a hearing on the petition of the applicants.

The state attorneys contend that four of the original eight applicants have succeeded in enrolling in accredited colleges.

Atty. H. T. Lockard, representing the applicants, had filed a second petition seeking another temporary injunction, requesting that the applicants be admitted to MSU, pending court action on the first petition.

Appeals Court Judges handing down decision were Florence E. Allen, William C. Mathes and Shackelford Miller, Jr.

Technically, Boyd's action suspended indefinitely any action on the suit and the state's countersuit.

Mrs. Motley said if the Negroes are admitted for the fall term the will take no further action.

There are no integrated schools in Memphis.

B. Humphreys argued the suit was a dead issue since it asked specifically for admission of the four plaintiffs in the fall semester of 1958.

"Your Honor couldn't possibly put them in the fall term of 1958 unless he turned back the clock," Humphreys said.

Mrs. Constance Motley of New York, representing the Negro students countered:

gain this fall as he did last ast after the state Board of Edu- cation had decided to permit Ne- groes to enter. These plaintiffs need protection from arbitrary ction because they lost a whole ear last school term. There isn't anything to prevent Dr. Smith from acting in a similar manner this fall."

Atty. Humphreys countered "we might not like it, and I don't say we do, but we recognize the Supreme Court of the United States. We respect and bow before it. But I think that the plaintiffs are trying to beat us over the head unnecessarily."

Atty. Motley retorted "we are seeking to enjoin the university from excluding Negroes solely because of race. We are not asking this court to pass upon the qualification of the applicants."

President Smith also testified that the same racial tension which existed last year is not present this year.

He testified that he "felt that to integrated MSU would have to destroy it." Because of the threat of "racial violence."

Smith spelled that "racial violence threat" out as: (1) Little Rock affair (2) Massive resistance of school integration in Virginia. and (3) because of the failure of the court to hear the suits brought against bus segregation and library segregation in Memphis. (which are still pending.)

Atty. Motley replied "The United States Supreme Court ruled last September in a North Carolina suit that the threat of violence or violence itself does not constitute grounds for refusing to admit Negroes to a college."

President Smith revealed that he will hold a conference with the four students Thursday (July 16) who were the plaintiffs in the case. He testified that "the conference will determine whether they will be admitted without further examination or not." He went on to say "All other Negro applicants will be processed as any other applicant this fall." He added "some Negroes took entrance examinations last week and some passed."

The integration plan was revealed during testimony by Jack M. Smith, president of Memphis State University. It was further explained by State Solicitor General Allison B. Humphreys who said, the state attorney general's office had notified the State Board of Education it could not seek to delay racial integration at the university this fall as it had during the 1953 fall term.

The testimony was made before Judge Marion S. Boyd on a motion brought by the NAACP for "summary judgement," and a counter motion by the State of Tennessee for dismal of the case."

Judge Boyd refused to give a decision on either motion, however be technically stopped further litigation in the suit by stating "questions raised here have become more or less moot."

However, Judge Boyd said in ending the case decision on those motions (motion for summary judgement by the NAACP and the motion for dismissal by the State of Tennessee) seems to be unnecessary. There is no longer a controversy. It would not be necessary to invoke an injunction to make the defendants do something they have already agreed in open court to do. Solicitor General Humphreys has stated in open court that the state Board of Education has been instructed against further delay" in admitting Negro applicants to Memphis State university.

He continued "pleadings in this case have multiplied. The court isn't certain that a summary judgement should be granted. Therefore we should not concern ourselves further with this case. To go further might delay entrance of Negroes at the institution (MSU) a year or more. It appears moot to the court at this time. The court on its own motion postpone any further motions on this case. Further hearings are not necessary".

Judge Boyd added "the court has considerable discretion of ordering injunctions. Especially where state and federal officials are mindful of their responsibilities and are trying to do right. This matter is settled. The court will get up an order to reflect the courts feelings."

However, before Judge Boyd "settled the case" Attorneys for the NAACP H. T. Lockard and Mrs. Constance Baker Motley of New York City, strongly urged Judge Boyd to honor their motion for "summary judgement." Atty. Motley said "We would like to have a ruling because Dr. Smith (president of MSU) might decide later that he wants to exclude Negroes from the institution (MSU)

NAACP Suit Attains Goal —Negroes Will Enter MSU

By THOMAS MICHAEL

Negroes will attend Memphis State University this fall.

That fact, already conceded publicly by MSU president J. M. Smith, became definite yesterday through testimony in Federal Court by Mr. Smith that no attempt will be made to exclude any applicant this fall on the basis of race.

The testimony came in a hearing before Judge Marion S. Boyd on motions in the suit brought by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People in behalf of four Negro applicants excluded last fall.

It also brought an end to the suit, for all practical purposes. "The questions raised become more or less moot," Judge Boyd said, noting that Mr. Smith's testimony in open court had rendered them so.

Conference Set

As to the four young Negroes in whose behalf the suit was brought, Mr. Smith will confer with them Thursday on details concerned with their admission to MSU this fall. The conference will determine whether the four must take another examination to gain admission.

All other applications by Negroes for admission will be handled in accordance with the regular admission rules and requirements which apply to all prospective students, Mr. Smith testified.

State Solicitor General Allison B. Humphreys testified that the state attorney general's office had advised the state Board of Education it could not this year undertake to defend a position like the one taken last fall —that Negroes should be excluded because their presence in the school might lead to violence.

Precedent Cited

Mrs. Constance Motley, NAACP attorney handling the case, pointed out that the United States Supreme Court ruled last September in a North Carolina case that the threat of violence, or even actual violence, does not constitute grounds for denying Negroes admission to a college.

The NAACP attorney sought repeatedly to have Judge Boyd render a declaratory judgment in favor of her clients, or to enjoin the defendants from further denying them admission. Judge Boyd said that to do either would serve no practical purpose, adding that the injunctive powers of a Federal judge should be used sparingly, "especially against state and local officials who are mindful of their duties, and who mean to do right."

It was brought out that a number of Negroes took MSU entrance examinations last week and some passed.

NAACP Action On MSU Fails

Four Negro Students Won't Be Admitted Feb. 3 As Ruling Is Upheld

By THOMAS MICHAEL

An attempt by NAACP attorneys to speed up the judicial processes, so as possibly to bring about admission of Negroes to Memphis State University for the term beginning Feb. 3 failed yesterday in Federal Court.

H. T. Lockard, representing four Negro students seeking admission, asked that a hearing on two motions now before Judge Marion S. Boyd be decided in time for the students to enter the university for the second semester, provided a favorable decision was obtained.

Injunction Asked

One motion is by the NAACP attorneys for a temporary injunction against the university abiding by a decision of the State Board of Education granting MSU a year's delay from last September in admitting Negroes.

The second motion was filed by state attorneys, headed by Atty. Gen. George McCanless, asking that the suit brought in behalf of the Negro students be dismissed.

State Solicitor Gen. Allison B. Humphreys put MSU President J. M. Smith on the stand to testify that an investigation showed the four Negro students are presently enrolled in accredited colleges. This was to refute the NAACP contention that they are being done irreparable damage in being denied admission to MSU for the coming term.

Hearing Set

Judge Boyd then ruled that the case should take its regular course through the courts. Noting that the dismissal motion takes precedence, he set the hearing for that motion for Feb. 20. The date for the other motion will be set later if the state's motion is denied, he said.

A. W. Willis Jr. assisted in presenting the case in behalf of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Integration Hearing Set

MEMPHIS, (AP) — Federal Judge M. S. Boyd set Feb. 20 for a hearing on a motion to dismiss a suit seeking integration of Memphis State University.

The motion was filed by the state in response to a suit sponsored by the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People. The NAACP suit asks that the court set aside a State Board of Education ruling that MSU can delay racial integration for a year.

The motion for dismissal, filed by the state attorney general, contends that state law provides that an appeal from a Board of Education administrative decision must be heard in a state court.

A legal battle started last fall when the board approved the delay, reversing an earlier ruling that opened state supported colleges to Negro students at the start of the year.

The NAACP suit was filed in behalf of eight Negro students who passed entrance exams at Memphis State before the board ruling. Their lawyer, H. T. Lockard, was seeking hearings on both the state's motion and the NAACP suit before the college's spring semester begins Feb. 2.

Board Of Education Liffs Ban

President Smith Says New Policy Begins In Fall

MEMPHIS (UPI) — Jack Smith, president of Memphis State University, testified in federal court that the State Board of Education had instructed him to admit Negroes this fall.

Federal Judge Marion Boyd, hearing efforts of colored persons to enroll, asked Smith if the board "had told him to admit this fall all comers, including members of the colored reace."

SMITH ANSWERED that the "state board has so instructed me."

Smith testified that in 1958 he had recommended that Negroes not be admitted because he feared violence, but would not do so "at the present time".

STATE SOL. Gen Allison B. Humphries said that as legal advisor to the state board, he knew of "no further resolution to preclude Negroes from Memphis State in the absence of evidence of further violence."

Lifting of Negro Ban Ends Suit Against School

MEMPHIS, Tenn., July 10 (AP)—A Federal Court suit aimed at integration of Memphis State University was thrown out today after the school's president testified Negroes would be admitted for the fall term.

Judge Marion S. Boyd suspended the action when MSU president J. Millard Smith said he had been instructed by the State Board of Education to admit qualified Negroes this fall. Smith said he had publicly announced previously that he intended to obey the board's ruling.

Four Negroe students who had passed the all-white college's entrance examinations filed the suit with the backing of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Last month, Kennard indicated to McCain he would try to enroll at Southern for the winter quarter which began Monday. Kennard tried to enroll three years ago, but his application for admission was never completed.

HATTIESBURG, Miss., Jan. 5. — Clyde Kennard, Mattiesburg Negro, Monday abandoned his attempt to enroll at all-white Mississippi Southern College.

"Upon the honest advice of many competent people, I have decided that to insist on my right to enroll at Mississippi Southern College at this point, perhaps, would not be in the best interest of the general community."

Kennard had indicated to Dr. McCain that he would try to enroll at Southern for the winter quarter. Registration for the quarter began Monday.

Three years ago, Kennard made his first effort to enter Southern, but his application for admission was never completed.

Negro Again Seeks Entry To Southern

HATTIESBURG, Miss. (AP) — Clyde Kennard of Eatonville has renewed his bid to enter Mississippi Southern and become the first Negro to attend a Mississippi school.

Kennard, a 30-yard-old veteran, asked Southern to act on the request for admission he filed last year.

However, Dr. William D. McCain, president of MSC, said Friday he doubted that Kennard planned an all-out drive to crack the school's segregation policy.

Kennard attended the University of Chicago after armed service duty in Europe and Korea. He applied to MSC last fall as a transfer student. He later said he would not pursue his effort for that time.

Dr. McCain said Kennard's old petition is still on file. The school official said no new application had been filed.

Clennon King, a former instructor at Alcorn College for Negroes, was the last Negro to try to break the state's school segregation barriers.

When King arrived at the University of Mississippi, highway patrolmen whisked him away. He was committed to the state mental hospital, but was released after being certified sane.

Negro Jailed After Trying To Enter Mississippi College

By The United Press International

HATTIESBURG, Miss., Sept. 15.—Clyde Kennard, a Negro farmer, was jailed Tuesday minutes after he tried in vain to become the first member of his race to enter a Mississippi white college.

Two constables arrested the 30-year-old bachelor on the campus of Mississippi Southern College. They said he had been speeding and they said they found whisky—illegal to possess in Mississippi—under the front seat of his car.

Kennard had announced in advance that he would appear on the campus to register for fall classes. But the officers who arrested him denied that their action had anything to do with the integration try.

The Negro was released under $600 bond after being held in jail about five hours. He said he does not drink and has never been engaged in hauling liquor. He denied there was whisky in his car.

He also said he was "undecided" about continuing his efforts to enroll at Southern but that he would "probably" try again.

Drove Station Wagon

Kennard, who has attended the University of Chicago for three years, appeared on the campus in his late-model station wagon shortly after registration began. Earlier, he had planned to go directly to the registrar's office but Dr. W. D. McCain, the school president, telephoned him Monday night to request a personal interview.

Kennard said he conferred for 12 minutes with Dr. McCain and Zack Van Landingham, investigator for the state Sovereignty Commission, Mississippi's official agency for maintaining segregation. Kennard then returned to his car where he found Constables Lee Daniels and Charlie Ward waiting for him.

The college, in a brief statement, said Kennard "was denied admission because of deficiencies and irregularities in his application papers."

Dr. McCain said the college was forbidden by law to reveal the contents of applications filed with the registrar, but he said "hundreds of students" are refused admission every year for the same reason listed in Kennard's rejection.

Joined As Lookout

Constable Daniels said he and Mr. Ward saw a car speeding early Tuesday about eight miles from here, near the area where Kennard lives. It is unusual for constables to ride together but Mr. Daniels said he and Mr. Ward had joined to maintain a lookout for a reported whisky-hauler.

Daniels said the speeding car entered Mississippi Southern and he and Ward found it parked on the campus with its driver gone. Kennard said he had not noticed the officers chasing him.

The constables said they arrested Kennard upon his return to the car and later found five half-pints of assorted liquor, two of them untaxed, under the front seat of his car.

Kennard was arrested and placed in the Forrest County jail on charges of reckless driving and illegal possession of liquor. The two constables took Kennard to a justice of the peace court soon after his arrest but Kennard declined to be tried at that time, asking for more time to prepare a defense.

Justice T. C. Hobby set bond at $600—$500 for the whisky charge and $100 for the reckless driving charge. Some of Kennard's Negro friends and members of the local NAACP began raising money for his release.

No Date For Trial

Later, two of his neighbors—George Kelly and James Bourne—put up the bond money and Kennard was released. No date was set for his trial.

Highway patrol chief Bill Hood, other patrolmen, and campus police were on the campus when Kennard showed up to register.

Kennard has said the NAACP is not backing his integration attempt but that he would welcome the organization's financial support if his case went to the courts. NAACP officials in Jackson said they were "keeping in touch" with the situation.

Kennard, born in Mississippi, attended the University of Chicago while living with a sister after his discharge from the Army. He said he would like to complete his education as a political science major but cannot afford to leave his farm to attend any college but Mississippi Southern.

He tried to enter Southern twice before but he did not press his application when officials resisted. During the earlier attempts, he was investigated by the Sovereignty Commission.

Loves Mississippi

"The state should let one or two Negroes into white colleges each year," he said last week. "Then the Federal Government would not interfere and the state could maintain control. If I don't get in now somebody else will pretty soon and it might be someone who doesn't care about Mississippi. I love Mississippi."

Eloise Fairley, a cousin of Kennard, said after his arrest: "It is obvious those men planted that whisky in Clyde's car. Clyde neither drinks nor smokes. In fact, he doesn't even drink soft drinks."

Only one other Negro has tried to enter a white college in Mississippi by appearing on the campus to register. Clennon King showed up for summer school at the University of Mississippi in 1958, was arrested on the campus by the Highway Patrol and whisked away to jail and later placed in the state mental hospital. Adjudged sane by psychiatrists, he now lives in Los Angeles.

The college rejected Clyde Kennard's application because of deficiencies and irregularities in the papers he submitted. This attempt was Kennard's third to integrate Southern.

Mississippi has no integrated schools.

Constables Lee Daniels and Charles Ward arrested Kennard after he left the college administration building and returned to his car. Arrested for possession of illegal whisky and reckless driving, Kennard had four half-pint bottles of moonshine whisky in his car, deputies said.

The officers said they received a tip that a load of whisky was headed their way. They said they had seen Kennard in his car and tried to stop him, but he "stepped on the gas" and got away on a gravel road.

Dr. W. D. McCain, president of the college, said he knew nothing of Kennard's arrest.

McCain said Southern has turned down "hundreds of students for the same reason,, because of deficiencies in scholastic records."

Kennard was rejected when he tried to enroll at Southern last year. He did not pursue the attempt and his original application remained on file.

Kennard said he attended the University of Chicago after service with the armed forces in Europe and Korea.

Negro, Barred By White School, Grabbed, Jailed

Hattiesburg, Miss., Sept. 15 (U.P.)—A Negro man, refused admission to Mississippi Southern College for the third time, was arrested and jailed Tuesday as he left the campus.

Officials of the State-supported school rejected the application of Clyde Kennard, 30, on grounds of "deficiencies and irregularities." Police arrested Kennard on reckless driving and liquor charges when he left the campus after a conference with Southern's president, D. W. D. McCain.

Kennard's relatives and friends claimed the arrest charges were trumped up.

Kennard, who formerly attended the University of Chicago, was the second Negro to attempt to enroll in a white college or university in Mississippi. The first, Clennon King, was arrested on the campus of the University of Mississippi in Oxford in 1958, jailed, and later placed in a mental institution.

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (AP) — When the capped and gowned seniors of the University of North Carolina parade across the stage June 1 for their diplomas, three of their former classmates — the institution's first Negro undergraduates—will be absent.

The three students, from nearby Durham, have dropped out of school.

"All three of us had scholastic difficulties," said Leroy Frasier.

Leroy, speaking for himself and his brother, Ralph, said they hoped to build up their grades and re-enter the university.

"I don't have any gripes against the college," he added. "I am responsible myself for not being in school right now. I think my brother feels the same way."

John Lewis Brandon, the third member of the trio, said, "Maybe I didn't have as good background as I should have had. I think it's a very good school and I'm glad I was able to be a part of it."

John, 21, returned to Durham and went to work at the Duke Medical Center there. He plans to take correspondence courses and reapply at the university.

Leroy, 21, enrolled in a state institution for Negroes at Durham. His 20-year-old brother entered the Army and is now stationed at Ft. Jackson, S.C.

The Frasiers and Brandon won a court suit in 1955 to enter the undergraduate school.

First Negro Undergraduates Have Scholastic Difficulties

By CHARLES L. WEST

CHAPEL HILL, (AP) — When the capped and gowned seniors of the University of North Carolina parade across the stage June 1 for their diplomas, three of their classmates — the institution's first Negro undergraduates—will be absent.

These Durham Negro youths, who opened the undergraduate school to their race, have dropped out of school.

"All three of us had scholastic difficulties," said Leroy Frasier. But, speaking for himself and his brother, Ralph, Leroy said they hoped to build up their grades and re-enter the university.

"I don't have any gripes against the college," Leroy added candidly. "I am responsible myself for not being in school right now. I think my brother feels the same way, and I imagine John (John Lewis Brandon) does too, but I can't speak for John."

"I think it's a very good school," John said. "I am glad I was able to be a part of it."

The trio left UNC last summer because their grades fell below the average necessary to enter the general college. Leroy, 21, enrolled in North Carolina College, a state institution for Negroes at Durham, his hometown. Ralph, 20, entered the Army and is now stationed at Ft. Jackson, S.C.

"Maybe I didn't have a good background, like I should have had," said John, explaining his scholastic difficulties. He plans to work a while, taking correspondence courses as he does so, and re-apply at the university in the future.

Leroy blamed his scholastic troubles on a combination of lack of application and poor background.

Own Makings.

"But I realize the problem was one of my own making," he commented. "Race was not a factor."

His mother, Mrs. L. B. Frasier Sr., suggested, however, that "the publicity that followed them might have had something to do with their difficulties."

The graduate school of the university had been admitting qualified Negroes for several years before the Frasiers and Brandon won a court suit in 1955 to enter the undergraduate school. Consequently, they began their studies almost unnoticed.

Their peaceful enrollment contrasted sharply with the problems a sister Southern institution, the University of Alabama, was having about the same time. There, rioting white students pelted a Negro coed, Autherine Lucy, with eggs.

The three Negro undergraduates here roomed in a dormitory with white students at the center of the campus and their relations were "very, very warm," Leroy said.

"I felt like I was a part of the school and I still feel that way," he continued.

No Difficulties.

A few months after he entered the university, Leroy told a reporter there had been no difficult adjustments to make on the white campus.

"You don't feel it unless you make yourself feel it," he said then. "You have to look at it positively and not take the attitude that something is going to happen."

He still feels that way. This, he said, is about what he would advise any Negro entering the university:

"The fact that you are a Negro student won't matter. There is not going to be any trouble made for you."

"As far as I know," he continued, "none of the three of us met any situations worth noting, which we wouldn't have met in any other college."

At present, the university has 23 Negro students, four of them in undergraduate school and the others either in graduate or professional schools. Four are candidates for graduate degrees next month.

Leroy hopes to have his grades built up in time to re-apply for enrollment this fall.

"I think it is without a doubt the finest school in the South," he added.

TEXAS A & M COLLEGE
DISCRIMINATION

Women Denied Right To Enroll In Male College

From The Associated Press
Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON, April 6.— The Supreme Court Monday dismissed a suit by two Texas women for admission to all-male Texas [illegible].

The court's terse, unanimous order offered no comment or reason for the dismissal.

The effect was to uphold a Texas Supreme Court decision which denied the women admission to the all-mal, state-operated, university.

The women argued they have as much right to attend an all-male school as Negroes have to attend all-white schools.

Filing the suit were Mrs. Lena Ann Bristol, 24, mother of two young children, and Mrs. Barbara Alice Tittle, 20, widow with a small child.

They based their case on the same grounds that the Supreme Court recognized in its 1954 de-

[illegible] argued they are being denied the equal protection of the law which the Fourteenth Amendment aguarantees to all persons.

"It cannot be rightly said," their brief asserted, "that a male person is entitled to more consideration than a female person."

They also attacked the "assumption that the Negro as a group has been more extensively oppressed than the white female."

One effect of the order will be to strengthen the legality of segregating public school children by sex, a move that has been discussed in some parts of the South as a means of lessening the psychological impact of racial integration.

South Is Setting Pattern With Its New Approach For Regional Education

SREB Director Says Thwarting Integration Is Not 16-State Organization's Purpose Despite Some Southerners' Claims

By TOM CHASE
The Associated Press Staff

ATLANTA, June 20.—An organization some Southerners claimed was designed to thwart integration has developed such a successful regional graduate student exchange program that it has been copied by groups in New England and the West.

The organization is the Southern Regional Education Board now celebrating its 10th anniversary.

What is the SREB and what has it accomplished? How does it operate and how is it affected by steadily spreading racial integration?

The director of the 16-state organization, Dr. Robert C. Anderson, took time out to discuss these and other points during an interview at permanent headquarters in Atlanta.

He conceded that some of the original planners thought the SREB might delay integration while at the same time improving higher education and the economy of the South.

'No Longer True'

"But that is no longer true," he said. "The governors of all the 16 states have agreed that SREB should stay out of the integration situation entirely. It is a state and Federal matter, not a regional one."

Dr. Anderson is a 38-year-old native of Birmingham, Ala., who attended Auburn and the University of North Carolina and received a doctor of philosophy degree in education at New York University.

He pointed out that the SREB position on integration was clarified back in 1951. At that time Esther McCready, a Negro citizen of Maryland, applied for admission to the University of Maryland School of Nursing.

When the case came up the SREB intervened as a friend of the court and said:

"The board's position is that it shall make regional arrangements to supplement facilities within the states. It is not the purpose of the board that the regional compact and the contracts for services thereunder shall serve any state as a legal defense for avoiding responsibilities (of educating its citizens) under existing state and Federal laws and court decisions."

She Was Admitted

Miss McCready later was admitted to the Maryland School of Nursing.

Since the SREB compact was signed, 12 of the 16 states concerned have admitted Negroes at the graduate level. Dr. Anderson said that certainly was evidence the board had not thwarted integration.

Even if all the states were integrated, he said, there still would be need for the SREB, which currently is working on a proposal to assist the states in planning expanded research in economic development.

"The biggest contributions of the board in the future will be in the area of research," he said.

The 16 states established the SREB in 1949 and authorized it to enter into agreements with states, colleges, universities and other educational agencies in order to provide adequate services and facilities for graduate education.

States Ratified

The legislatures of the states ratified the compact and agreed to contribute $20,000 annually for operation of the SREB. The board itself includes the governor of each state and four other persons appointed by him. At least one of them must be a state legislator and one an educator. The present chairman of the board is Gov. Cecil H. Underwood of West Virginia.

The SREB program permits students to step across state lines for their specialized education at no extra cost. For example, Florida, which has no dental school, can send dental students to other states by buying places for them in out-of-state schools. They then attend the out-of-state school without paying out-of-state tuition.

About 360 students enrolled the first year of the program. But since 1953, an average of 1,000 students—prospective doctors, dentists, veterinarians and social workers—have participated annually.

Dr. Anderson said that last year about 300 students were Negroes and 700 whites.

In the past 10 years, 11.5 million dollars has been paid through SREB by 14 states to 21 schools in 11 states in the region. This includes all the states except West Virginia and Delaware.

On July 5-7 in White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., the new approach to higher education problems will be aired at the National Conference on Regional Education. The SREB and its counterparts in New England and the West are joint sponsors.

Graduate Fellowships Go To 97 Programs In 37 Institutions

ATLANTA, Nov. 8. — First-year distribution of National Defense Education Act funds shows that Southern universities are marked for a vital role in the nation's expanding program of higher education.

Analysis of four areas of the act affecting higher education proves the South to be leading in one, about average in two others, and seriously lagging in a fourth, Dr. John K. Folger, associate director for research at the Southern Regional Education Board, revealed Sunday.

35.1 In Dixie

From a total of 1,000 graduate fellowships awarded in the United States, 351 were in Southern schools, giving the South 35.1 per cent of the awards. Dr. Folger feels this figure is particularly significant in light of the fact that in the past eight years, only 11.5 per cent of the nation's doctoral degrees have been awarded in the South.

The graduate fellowships are to be used in 96 Southern programs in 37 institutions located in all 16 states. They are divided among the fields of physical sciences, biological sciences, arts and humanities, social sciences and education.

During the past eight years, Southern universities have awarded 12.6 per cent of the nation's doctoral degrees in the physical sciences. Yet 40.4 per cent of the fellowships in the physical sciences will be used in Southern universities, Dr. Folger points out.

Other Percentages

For the same period the South awarded 11.9 per cent of degrees in biological sciences and will receive 33.5 of fellowships in that field; 9.9 per cent of degrees in arts and humanities came from the South, and 32.1 per cent of fellowships will be used here in that area; 11 per cent of degrees in social science came from the South and it will receive 34.8 per cent of the fellowships, and finally the South awarded 10.8 of the degrees in education and will receive 29.7 per cent of the fellowships.

"By its wide distribution of grants in the South, the FDEA is implementing its purpose to provide better geographic distribution of graduate opportunities in the United States," said Dr. Folger.

Bryant Elected On Dixie Hospital Bd.

Nashville Banner Nashville Tenn.

Hampton, Va., Nov. 11.—James W Bryant, Hampton Institute business manager, has been elected a member of the Dixie Hospital board of trustees for a term of three years. Members of the board are elected by the Dixie Hospital Association made up of representatives of about 35 area civic and service organizations and approved by the board of trustees.

A 1933 graduate of Tuskegee Institute, Bryant studied machine accounting at New York City's International Business Machines school, in 1949, and received the master's degree in business administration, in 1951, from the Wharton School of Commerce, University of Pennsylvania.

Joining the registrar's office at Tuskegee in 1936, Bryant became chief accountant at J C Smith University, Charlotte, N C., in 1941-42. A director of Booker T Washington Business College in 1942-43, he served two years as business manager, Florida Normal College, St Augustine, Florida.

He pointed out that the SREB position on integration was clarified back in 1951. At that time Esther McCready, a Negro citizen of Maryland, applied for admission to the University of Maryland School of Nursing.

FRIEND OF COURT

When the case came up the SREB intervened as a friend of the court and said:

"The board's position is that it shall make regional arrangements to supplement facilities within the states. It is not the purpose of the board that the regional compact and the contracts for services thereunder shall serve any state as a legal defense for avoiding responsibilities (of educating its citizens) under existing state and federal laws and court decisions."

Even if all the states were integrated, he said, there still would be need for the SREB, which currently is working on a proposal to assist the states in planning expanded research in economic development.

"The biggest contributions of the board in the future will be in the area of research," he said.

But just what is this organization that set the pattern for the formation of the New England Board of Higher Education and the Western Interstate Commission for Higher Education?

The 16 states established the SREB in 1949 and authorized it to enter into agreements with states, colleges, universities and other educational agencies in order to provide adequate services and facilities for graduate education.

The states concerned are Alabama, Arkansas, Delaware, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maryland, Mississippi, North Carolina, Oklahoma, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, Virginia and West Virginia.

The legislatures of the states ratified the compact and agreed to contribute $20,000 annually for operation of the SREB. The board itself includes the governor of each state and four other persons appointed by him. At least one of them must be a state legislator and one an educator. The present chairman of the board is Gov. Cecil H. Underwood of West Virginia.

A provision of the U. S. Constitution forbids states from entering into agreements or compacts with other states or foreign powers without consent of congress.

But in the case of the SREB Congress did not act on the compact. It took the position the constitutional question did not apply because education traditionally is a concern of the states.

The SREB program permits students to step across state lines for their specialized education at no extra cost. For example, Florida, which has no dental school, can send dental students to other states by buying places for them in out-of-state schools. They then attend the out-of-state school without paying out-of-state tuition.

About 360 students enrolled the first year of the program. But since 1953, an average of 1,000 students—prospective doctors, dentists, veterinarians and social workers—have participated annually.

Anderson said that last year about 300 students were Negroes and 700 whites.

In the past 10 years, 11 ½ million dollars has been paid through the SREB by 14 states to 21 schools in 11 states in the region. This includes all the states except West Virginia and Delaware.

Another facit of SREB activity is research on a state or region-wide basis to determine the most economical way of educating citizens.

Louisiana learned through such a study it would be better to use the SREB program than build a veterinary medical school of its own. So the state used the money intended for the school to build a veterinary research center—something which did not exist in the region.

Five years ago a survey showed there were only three graduate nursing students in the region. Master's degree programs were established in six schools. Now more than 150 nurses have been graduated from master's degree programs and about 150 more have completed their course work.

The research work of the SREB receives about half its support from a five-year $450,000 Carnegie Corp. grant earmarked for studies in higher education.

In addition, the SREB has been instrumental in bringing in more than 1½ million dollars in grants from public and private foundations for regional cooperative use. Research and nursing programs have been supported with the aid of these special grants.

The SREB'S mental health program has received a $90,000 grant which permits it to award up to $500 to anyone employed in a mental institution in the region. The money may be used for study at other hospitals in the United States or Canada. More than 100 of these awards have been made to date.

Studies in progress include such problems as who goes to graduate school and why and whether it is possible to shorten the length of time needed to get a Ph.D. degree.

Other studies are being made in particular fields like forestry, dentistry, veterinary medicine and architecture to find out just how many of these people the region needs and whether the states have enough educational programs to meet the demand.

Another example in regional teamwork is a recent agreement between 13 colleges and universities in nematology, the study of a microscopic roundworm which destroys or damages many crops in the South.

To help alleviate a regional shortage of agricultural scientists and teachers, the 13 schools are sponsoring an advanced graduate credit course on the subject this summer. A grant from the National Science Foundation will help 37 students from 12 states attend.

These are just a few of the examples of the SREB at work. But they indicate that William A. Tuck, then governor of Virginia, had the right idea when he told the first SREB meeting in June, 1949:

"You have started something which will loom on the horizon 50 or 100 years from now even larger than it does today."

SREB Will Aid Special Education

ATLANTA (Special) — A two-year grant of $44,160 for regional doctoral programs in special education was announced by the Southern Regional Education Board in a formal ceremony here.

The funds will be used to provide fellowships to students studying at the University of Texas and Peabody College for a doctoral degree in the education of handicapped or gifted children.

"This is the first major grant of its kind in support of a regional cooperative effort to train leaders in special education," William C. Geer, SREB regional programs associate, said.

The grants will be made to doctoral candidates who show unusual leadership potential in special education. At least three fellowships per year will be awarded to students at the University of Texas and Peabody College. The two schools will receive a small sum to cover the indirect costs of training these students.

"The greatest need in special education today is for leaders," Geer pointed out. "We urgently need people who can train teachers, do research and hold important administrative posts. There are more jobs in teaching and administration than there are people to fill them, and more money for research than there are researchers to use it," he said.

Application for the grant was made jointly by the Southern Regional Education Board, the University of Texas and Peabody College. The project will be directed by Dr. William G. Wolfe, professor of educational psychology at the University of Texas, and Dr. Lloyd M. Dunn, coordinator of special education at Peabody College.

It is financed by the United Cerebral Palsy Associations through their research and educational foundation. Grant presentations were also made to the SREB for its program to train teachers of exceptional children and to the Georgia State Department of Education, the University of Georgia, the Medical College of Georgia and the University of Texas, bringing the total amount of awards to $80,261.

Dr. Anderson, Head Of SREB, To Help Investigate Needs

ATLANTA — Dr. Robert C. Anderson, director of the Southern Regional Educaton Board, has been named a member of the Surgeon General's Consultant Group on Medical Education, Dr. Leroy E. Burney, surgeon general of the Public Health Service, announces.

The 21-member group, composed of national leaders in medicine, education and public affairs, has been invited by Dr. Burney to seek answers to this question:

"How can the nation be supplied with adequate numbers of well-qualified physicans over the next decade?"

In his letter inviting Dr. Anderson to serve as a member of the Consultant Group on Medical Education, Dr. Burney pointed out that whether there now is an absolute or relative shortage of physicians, the need for physicians will increase in the immediate future. The concern of the Public Health Service with this problem, he said, is shared by the medical and allied professions, by leaders in education and the public.

Dr. Anderson joined the SREB in 1953 and was named director in 1957. He received his undergraduate education at Alabama Polytechnic Institute. He was awarded his Master's degree from the University of North Carolina and a Ph.D. degree from New York University.

Dr. Anderson served as assistant to the dean of the School of Education at NYU from 1948 until 1950 when he became director of the graduate school at Memphis State College.

Southern Regional Board May Be Permanent

By AL KUETTNER
United Press International

ATLANTA (UPI) — One of the most unusual education experiments in the nation, the Southern Regional Education Board, is 10 years old this month and appears to be a permanent fixture.

The board weathered its organizational storms has in the past decade administered $ million "education contracts" among its 16 member states and the agency is now comfortably headquartered in a new $250,000 home near the Georgia Tech campus in Atlanta.

The major function of the SREB is to provide graduate and specialized education in the region by exchanging students among the states where needed higher education facilities are available.

Suppose there are 25 persons in South Carolina who want to study veterinary medicine. Obviously, it would not be feasible for South Carolina to establish a school for so small a number. But in Auburn, Ala., there is a very fine school of veterinary medicine which can handle more students than it has.

Home-State Rates

Under the SREB compact, of which both South Carolina and Alabama are members, the South Carolina students are admitted to Auburn at residence rates and on the same priority basis as students living in Alabama.

The SREB, in turn, is financed by appropriations from the member states and the board funnels money back to the cooperating institutions.

In the past 10 years the board has received more than a million dollars from the 16 states in th has received more than a million dollars from the 16 states in the compact and has also accepted more than $1,500,000 in funds and grants. Approximatey $11,500,000 worth of education contracts have been signed with the various institutions in the regional setup.

The regional education idea was conceived by a group of educators at the request of the Southern Governors Conference.

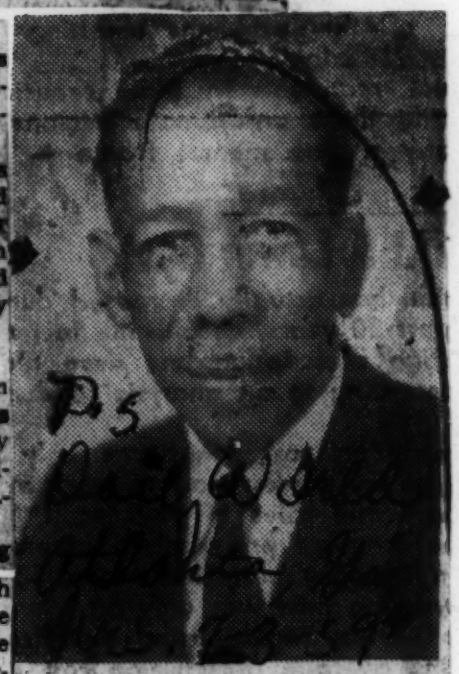
In the past 10 years it has saved such schools as famed Meharry Medical College (for Negroes) in Nashville, Tenn. from folding up for lack of funds and has greatly strengthened many other schools.

Expanded Program

The SREB is now engaged in extensive research in such fields as "how to train teachers," "why go into teaching," "training college teachers" and self-evaluation programs.

The board also is administering a broad program of mental health research and training. This phase of the work, recommended by the 1954 Southern Governors Conference, was started after studies showed "a tremendous shortage of personnel in all mental health disciplines (in the South), proportionally greater than in the nation as a whole.'

The board had to weather a storm of criticism from liberal forces who argued that it was a means of preserving segregation in southern schools. That attitude still prevails but is gradually diminishing as the board's program expands. Today only 28 per cent of the students involved in the regional exchange program are Negroes.



FAMU PRESIDENT REAPPOINTED—Reappointment of Dr. George W. Gore Jr., president of Florida A. and M. University to a four-year term on the Southern Regional Board of Education has been announced by Florida Governor D. Roy Collins. Dr. Gore's new term which began on July 1, continues through June 30, 1963. Previously he had served for one year in filling an unexpired term and on June 30 completed his second consecutive four year term.

Dixie Regional Setup Copied

North, West Use Graduate Student Exchange

By TOM CHASE

ATLANTA (AP)—An organization some Southerners claimed was designed to thwart integration has developed such a successful regional graduate student exchange program that it has been copied by groups in New England and the West.

The organization is the Southern Regional Education Board now celebrating its 10th anniversary.

What is the SREB and what has it accomplished? How does it operate and how is it affected by steadily spreading racial integration?

The director of the 16-state organization, Dr. Robert C. Anderson, took time out to discuss these and other points during an interview at permanent headquarters in Atlanta.

He conceded that some of the original planners thought the SREB might delay integration while at the same time improving higher education and the economy of the South.

NOT IN MIX SITUATION

"But that is no longer true," he said. "The governors of all the 16 states have agreed that the SREB should stay out of the integration situation entirely. It is a state and federal matter, not a regional one."

Anderson is a 38-year-old native of Birmingham, Ala., who attended Auburn and the University of North Carolina and received a Ph. D. in education at New York university.

He pointed out that the SREB position on integration was clarified back in 1951. At that time Esther McCredy, a Negro citizen of Maryland, applied for admission to the University of Maryland School of Nursing.

When the case came up the SREB intervened as a friend of the court and said:

"The board's position is that it shall make regional arrangements to supplement facilities within the states. It is not the purpose of the board that the regional compact and the contracts for services thereunder shall serve any state as a legal defense for avoiding responsibilities (of educating its citizens) under existing state and federal laws and court decisions."

Miss McCready later was admitted to the Maryland School of Nursing.

Since the SREB compact was signed, 12 of the 16 states concerned have admitted Negroes at the graduate level. Anderson said that certainly was evidence the board had not thwarted integration.

Even if all the states were integrated, he said, there still would be need for the SREB, which currently is working on a proposal to assist the states in planning expanded research in economic development.

AREA OF RESEARCH

"The biggest contribution of the board in the future will be in the area of research," he said.

But just what is this organization that set the pattern for the formation of the New England Board of Higher Education and the Western Interstate Commission for higher education?

The 16 states established the SREB in 1949 and authorized it to enter into agreements with states, colleges, universities and other educational agencies in order to provide adequate service and facilities for graduate education.

The states concerned are Alabama, Arkansas, Delaware, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maryland, Mississippi, North Carolina, Oklahoma, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, Virginia and West Virginia.

The legislatures of the states ratified the compact and agreed to contribute $20,000 annually for operation of the SREB. The board itself includes the governor of each state and four other persons appointed by him. At least one of them must be a state legislator and one an educator. The present chairman of the board is Gov. Cecil H. Underwood of West Virginia.

A provision of the U. S. constitution forbids states from entering into agreements or compacts with other states or foreign powers without consent of Congress.

But in the case of SREB Congress did not act on the compact. It took the position the constitutional question did not apply because education traditionally is a concern of the states.

The SREB program permits students to stop across state lines for their specialized education at no extra cost. For example, Florida, which has no dental school, can send dental students to other states by buying places for them in out-of-state schools. They then attend the out-of-state school without paying out-of-state tuition.

About 360 students enrolled the first year of the program. But since 1953, an average of 1000 students—prospective doctors, dentists, veterinarians and social workers — have participated annually.

Anderson said that last year about 300 students were Negroes and 700 whites.

In the past 10 years, $11½ million has been paid through the SREB by 14 states to 21 schools in 11 states in the region. This includes all the states except West Virginia and Delaware.

Another facit of SREB activity is research on a state or region-wide basis to determine the most economical way of educating citizens.

LOUISIANA RESEARCH

Louisiana learned through such a study it would be better to use the SREB program than build a veterinary research center — something which did not then exist in the region.

Five years ago a survey showed there were only three graduate nursing students in the region. Master's degree programs were established in six schools. Now more than 150 nurses have been graduated from master's degree programs and about 150 more have completed their course work.

The research work of the SREB receives about half its support from a five-year $450,000 Carnegie Corp. grant earmarked for studies in higher education.

In addition, the SREB has been instrumental in bringing in more than $1½ million in grants from public and private foundations for regional co-operative use. Research and nursing programs have been supported with the aid of these special grants.

The SREB's mental health program has received a $90,000 grant which permits it to award up to $500 to anyone employed in a mental institution in the region. The money may be used for study at other hospitals in the United States or Canada. More than 100 of these awards have been made to date.

Studies in progress include such problems as who goes to graduate school and why and whether it is possible to shorten the length of time needed to get a Ph. D. degree.

Other studies are being made in particular fields like forestry, dentistry, veterinary medicine and architecture to find out just how many of these people the region needs and whether the states have enough educational programs to meet the demand.

Another example in regional teamwork is a recent agreement between 13 colleges and universities in nematology, the study of a microscopic roundworm which destroys or damages many crops in the South.

To help alleviate a regional shortage of agriculture scientists and teachers, the 13 schools are sponsoring an advanced graduate credit course on the subject this summer. A grant from the national science foundation will help 37 students from 12 states attend.

These are just a few of the examples of the SREB at work. But they indicate that William M. Tuck, then governor of Virginia, had the right idea when he told the first SREB meeting in June, 1949:

"You have started something which will loom on the horizon 50 or 100 years from now even larger than it does today."

South Offered New Plan For Development

Newspaper Date 7-7-59

WHITE SULPHUR SPRINGS, W.Va. (AP) — The embryo of an expanded development program for the South was unveiled here Monday by Gov. Cecil H. Underwood of West Virginia.

He said it would "cut not only across state lines, but across academic and professional lines, involving state government and private industry as well as educational institutions."

Underwood said the new program was evolved at the request of Southern legislators who had noted the success of the Southern Regional Education Board (SREB) with smaller scale regional programs in mental health and atomic energy development.

The 10-year-old SREB, of which Underwood is chairman, would be the hub of the new program.

The West Virginia governor said he believed similar interstate education groups in New England and the West could handle planning for their regions.

Underwood expressed optimism for the social and economic future of the South. He then put a finger directly on his audience — the 140 delegates attending the first national conference on regional education — and said:

"I know we have the resources. Participating in the conference today, I am sure that we have the men.

"The regional agency is a logical tool for the states, the universities, the professions and industry to use in attacking some of our broad socio - economic problems and opportunities."

Specifically, the young Republican governor cited the Appalachian South, a nine-state area.

"This is an area with perhaps three times the resource potential of mountainous Switzerland and one-half per capita income," he said.

The Swiss, noted Underwood, have learned how best to use their mountainsides — for farming, for obtaining and conserving natural resources, and for manufacturing.

"But we in the Appalachian South have not learned these things," he said, "in spite of great colleges chartered to do (such) research . . . governments elected to consider the welfare of their people, and business and industrial leaders who have a vital stake in the improvement of the region's economy.

"However, we are beginning to learn and to utilize the facilities of the SREB."

As a beginning, Underwood said these two activities are under way:

1, The SREB staff in Atlanta is compiling information on all Southern research already undertaken by universities of the region.

2, The administration of research in Southern colleges and universities is being surveyed and areas of possible expansion are being noted.

The national conference concludes Tuesday with an address by Arthur S. Flemming, secretary of health, education and welfare.

Commission Approves Plan For $100,000 Negro Library

Construction Set For Spring; Site At Cleveland-Early

By GENE KOVARIK
Journal Staff Writer

Preliminary architectural plans for the construction of the $100,000 Negro library was approved today by the City Commission.

Final approval of the plans drawn up by the architectural firm of James Miller Davis is expected to be given by the library board in the near future.

Mayor W. A. Gayle said construction of the library will get under way late this spring and it is expected to be completed this fall.

15,000 BOOKS

The building to be located on the northeast corner of Early St. and Cleveland Ave. will hold 15,000 volumes of books. The land was purchased by the city in December of last year for more than $13,000.

Besides the general circulation area, the library will include a teen-age room, children's room, reading room, teen-age room, children's room, office, work area, rest room, meeting room, and a bookmobile loading ramp.

The building will be 113 feet long and slightly more than 64 feet wide.

In other action today, the commissioners accepted bids for the construction of sewer improvements on the Wilmington and Cloverland outfall.

The Montgomery firm of Hailey and Bumpass apparently submitted the low bid for the work of $45,313. Other firms submitting bids were M. R. Thomason & Associates, $60,133.41, and S. T. Newsom, $51,590.42.

Mayor Gayle said the commission will award the contract at an adjourned commission meeting this afternoon at 2:30 following tabulation of the bids by the engineer's office.

The commissioners also approved an employment resolution for the hiring of 19 persons by the Fire Department. These people will fill the vacancies created by the construction of the three new fire stations to be completed in March.

They were Volna C. Beard, Perry Burden, David F. Childers, Robert R. Crick, Merle Jay Douglas, Elmer E. Frederick, Robert F. Golden, Doyal M. Lott, Kenneth W. Merrill, Jack A. Morrison, James L. Mulder, James M. Nations, Charles B. Powell, Lynn Casey Rollan, John E. Sharpton, Benjamin H. Simpson, Hudie Junior Whaley, Clifton Lamar Wright, and Joe M. Woodall.

Bid Rejection Will Delay Negro Library Construction

Journal Montgomery Adv. p. 18

By GENE KOVARIK
Journal Staff Writer

The City Commission today rejected seven bids on the construction of the $100,000 Negro library and returned the bids unopened to the contractors.

Mayor W. A. Gayle announced that due to a mixup over wage scales not included in the advertising of bids, the city would readvertise for bids within a few weeks.

The decision by the mayor was made following a meeting in his office attended by Commissioner Frank W. Parks, a member of the architect firm which drew up plans for the library, and City Attorney Walter Knabe.

SEVERAL COMPLAINTS

The mayor said several contractors called his office complaining that no wage scale was set in the call for bids and therefore, they did not know which scale to use.

Gayle said the commission wants to be fair and the city will specify a wage scale in the next bid advertisements.

The seven contractors who submitted bids today were Stuart Co., C. F. Halstead, Dixie Contracting Co., Bear Brothers Construction Co., Andrew & Dawson, Kendrick Upchurch and Chester Williams.

LOW BID

In other action today, James A. Head submitted by low bid of $8,765 for the furniture in the Negro library building.

The library is to be built at the northeast corner of Early street and Cleveland avenue, and the readvertisement for bids today is expected to delay the start of the project for a few weeks.

A public hearing was set for July 7 on the proposed rezoning of property from residential B to light industrial.

Work Opens On Library For Negroes

Plans for the construction of the $100,000 Negro library were stepped up today as the City Commission accepted a bid for the razing of a building on the proposed site.

Joe Elijah was the high bidder and agreed to pay the city $157 for the salvage.

The proposed library sites is at the northeast corner of Early street and Cleveland avenue.

In other action today, the commissioners approved the employment of three replacements by the city. They are Lester Smith, utility worker, Fred M. Rucker, police patrolman, and Eual C. Holley, equipment operator.

The commissioners also granted a chauffeur license to James A Salmar. 709 Oak St.

Lawmakers Misuse Library of Congress

Translation Ties Up Linguists, Dozens of Magazines 'Borrowed'

By David Wise

WASHINGTON, Apr. 11.—Who is the Congressman who tied up linguists at the Library of Congress for weeks translating two Japanese books for a constituent?

The Library knows, but it isn't telling. Nor will it disclose the name of another Congressman who subscribes for free to dozens of magazines each month by "borrowing" them from the Library.

Both cases were cited by L. Quincy Mumford, the Librarian of Congress, at a recent closed session of the Joint Congressional Committee on the Library. He used them as examples of abuses of the Library by some lawmakers.

Cracking Down

As a result, it was learned, the committee is cracking down on its fellow Congressmen. Letters will go out to all Senators and Representatives Monday under the signature of Rep. Omar Burleson, D., Tex., vice-chairman of the committee, stating—in polite language—that no more Japanese books will be translated for voters, and putting an end to magazine and newspaper freeloading.

One committee source said the magazine-reading Congressman was getting dozens of periodicals each month "from A to V—'Atlantic Monthly' to 'Vogue'" and that they arrived from the Library "like a milk route." The Congressman's reading list, the source said, included "Charm," "Ebony" and several New York City newspapers.

Withhold Names

The source added that the Congressman was cited by the Library as the worst, but by no means the only, offender, and said the new rules "should result in a 60 per cent suspension of the magazine free-loading."

Asked for the name of the Congressman who sent in the Japanese books, reportedly novels, Miss Elizabeth E. Hamer, Library public relations officer, replied:

"Congressional requests are always confidential. This is just a rule of the Library." There was a pause and she added: "They weren't novels."

Miss Hamer added that as to magazines, "the collection of the Library is not supposed to substitute for individual subscriptions."

Mr. Mumford had no comment on both counts. "I am not at liberty to discuss details," he declared.

Cited at Session

But Rep. Burleson confirmed that both cases were cited at the committee session. "There is a continuing problem and has been for a great period of time," he said. "A few take advantage over what is normally the demand on the Library."

Q. How about the Japanese books?

A. Yes, they were translated. They were sent to the Congressman by a constituent.

Q. And the magazines?

A. Yes, some Congressmen more or less regularly are getting magazines through the Library. We want to place some limitations. Some of these demands are unreasonable.

Rules Outlined

It was learned that the letter from the committee setting forth new ground rules for the Congressmen states:

"In view of the possible serious consequences of the practice of repeated borrowing of current periodicals, the Library should honor this type of request only when a specific article or series of reports is desired."

As to translations, the letter lays down the following rule: "That the Library accord the same treatment given the general public—namely that no more than a few lines of text can be translated."

EISENHOWER LIBRARY

Geneologist's Study Set For Eisenhower Library

Dependent Chicago, Ill. p. 11
Sat. 7-11-59

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind. — (UPI) —Treasured correspondence and photographs accumulated by most women eventually are destroyed or lost by later generations, but one Indiana woman has the assurance her collection will have a permanent niche in history.

Mrs. Fannie B. Richardson, Greenwood, the Eisenhower family geneologist, has been notified by the U. S. Archivist Wayne Grover, Washington, D. C., that her collection of correspondence, pictures and clippings accumulated in the course of her work will be placed in the new Eisenhower Presidential library to be built in Abilene, Kan.

The material covers 19 years during which the Indiana woman compiled a 1,000-page Eisenhower lineage and reference book now to be found in most libraries.

SOLVES MYSTERY

At the time Mrs. Richardson had started the study it was solely to solve the mystery of her own grandfather, Ira Anderson Lynch. He had failed to return from the Civil War, but through her first geneological studies, Mrs. Richardson discovered he had survived that catastrophe and had made a new life for himself in another state for many years before dying of natural causes.

In the course of her study, the Greenwood woman found that her mother, Anna Meranda Lynch Taylor, was a descendant of Hans Nicholas Eisenhower, who came to America in 1741. So, it developed was President Eisenhower, but at that time, Mrs. Richardson said the name was so unfamiliar to most librarians she had trouble getting the data she wanted.

Now, the White House refers family history questions to Mrs. Richardson, a fifth cousin of the President's son, John.

LACKED SPACE

Mrs. Richardson said the letters, photographs, clippings and other material which were the foundation for her book took up so much room in her Greenwood home that she and her husband, Ora, hadn't known what to do with it.

But a visit with her former division chief, W. Neil Franklin, for whom Mrs. Richardson had worked in Washington, led to the suggestion the material might be wanted for the Eisenhower library. A few days ago, Mrs. Richardson received a letter from Grover thanking her for the material and asking her to have it ready about January, 1961.

The Greenwood woman has tabulated the letters, and filed the photographs and clippings in plastic binders sheets. To date, there are about 1,000 pages of the material. In addition, she has accumulated addresses of Eisenhowers in every state except Alabama, Maine and Nevada. She thinks there probably are some of the family living in those states, too, but she doesn't have their names.

In City of Atlanta

Library Is Integrated Quietly

ATLANTA (AP)— Atlanta has joined a number of major southern cities in quietly integrating its public library system.

The decision was disclosed Saturday, three days after Atlanta library employes were instructed to serve Negro patrons as well as whites.

A few Negroes visited the big downtown public library without attracting attention or causing any disturbance.

A library spokesman said the ruling applied to the downtown library and 14 white branches in the city. There are three Negro branches and one of them has been used by whites for some time.

In effect, the decision opened the entire Atlanta library system to members of both races.

"We found no law prohibiting it," explained the library board chairman, Hix Green. "There has been some demand by Negroes for service, so we decided to go ahead and do it."

Closed Meeting.

The decision was reached at a closed board meeting Tuesday attended by Mayor William B. Hartsfield, police Chief Herbert Jenkins and city Atty. Jack Savage. It was put into effect the next day.

Green said no public announcement was made at the time because the board hoped to get over the integration hurdle with "as little fanfare as possible."

Similar actions have been taken in the past in some major cities in Arkansas, Tennessee, Florida, Kentucky, Louisiana, North Carolina and Virginia.

On the other hand, segregation continues at public libraries in Montgomery, Ala., first capital of the confederacy, and Mobile and Birmingham, Ala., Columbia, S.C., Raleigh, N.C., and at several smaller cities in Tennessee and Florida.

Generally, university and school libraries follow the segregation pattern throughout the area.

An Associated Press survey showed this situation:

Georgia—Atlanta public libraries integrateed, other segregated.

Tennessee—Nashville public libraries have been open to Negroes for the last 10 years. The Negroes just started using the libraries and nothing was done to oppose them. The Chattanooga public library quietly integrated more than a year ago. At Memphis, however, the public libraries are segregated with special libraries for Negroes.

Arkansas—The Little Rock public library has been integrated for some time and the bookmobile unit also is integrated.

Alabama—Libraries are segregated at Montgomery. The county bookmobile serves both Negro and white schools. Public libraries are segregated at Birmingham but three branches and one bookmobile available to Negroes. The libraries at Mobile also are segregated.

Louisiana—Libraries are integrated at New Orleans and are manned with white staffs.

Virginia—The Richmond city library is integrated.

Kentucky—The Louisville public libraries and staffs are integrated.

North Carolina—Charlotte and Winston-Salem libraries are used by Negroes and whites and both cities have branch libraries for Negroes. There is no enforced segregation at the municipal library at Durham. Greensboro has a separate Negro library but some Negroes use the main library to a small degree. Raleigh has two public libraries, one for Negroes, one for whites.

South Carolina—Public libraries are segregated in Columbia.

Florida—The Miami public library is "free to all who come," according to an official. The Leon County public library at Tallahassee is about four years old and has never been segregated. Tampa libraries are pretty much segregated with occasional breakovers but no trouble.

Senators. So far, the 1959 General Assembly has a load of 1,378 bills — which is 369 fewer than the '57 Assembly had. Of those introduced so far this year, 986 came from Representatives and 392 from Senators.

The Legislature is grinding out the legislation at an increasing rate, while introductions are remaining fairly constant. So far, 667 acts and resolutions have been ratified this session. The total at the same stage in 1957 was 853 ratifications.

Even if nothing else, this Assembly is going down in history as a resolute body. Its ratifications include 55 resolutions. The 1957 Assembly's total included only 31 at this point.

Central Library Opened

A directive has been issued to eliminate segregation practices at Atlanta's Carnegie Library and its branches, it was reported over the weekend.

The WORLD learned from an unofficial source Saturday morning that the board had been issued a library card for use in securing books at the Forsyth Street, Carnegie Way, N. W. branch.

It was last Wednesday, a day after the ten- member library board of trustees met with Mayor Hartsfield and other city officials in connection with the library's "policy" of segregation, that Hix Green, Sr., head of the board, said Negroes had been coming in the main library for some time and that he expected that Negroes would be "allowed to continue coming in."

The board had met Tuesday afternoon at the Atlanta Athletic Club during a luncheon to discuss with Mayor Hartsfield, Police Chief Herbert Jenkins and City Attorney Jack Savage the board's "policy" of segregating Negroes from the downtown main library.

Hartsfield said after the meeting that the alleged segregation of Negroes was a policy of the board and that "there is no law on the books requiring the libraries to be segregated."

Hartsfield said that during the meeting held in a private room of the Athletic Club, Library Director John Settlemayer had reported that several Negroes have made applications for membership cards.

Atlanta Library Is Desegregated

ATLANTA, May 24 (AP) This city's downtown public library was secretly desegregated — without incident — several day ago, officials disclosed Saturday.

"We found no law prohibiting it," explained Library Board Chairman Hix Green. "There has been some demand by Negroes for service, so we decided to go ahead and do it." Since then, a few Negroes have patronized the library without attracting attention or causing any disturbance.

"We found no law prohibiting it," explained library board chairman Hix Green. "There has been some demand by Negroes for service, so we decided to go ahead and do it."

The decision to admit Negroes was reached at a closed board meeting Tuesday attended by Mayor William B. Hartsfield, Police Chief Herbert Jenkins and City Attorney Jack Savage. It was put into effect Wednesday. Since then, a few Negroes have patronized the library without attracting attention or causing any disturbance.

Atlanta Orders End To Segregation In Library

ATLANTA — (UPI) — Orders have been issued to end segregation Practices at Atlanta's main public library, it was reported over the weekend.

The question of allowing Negroes to use facilities of the library was raised earlier this week. Library officials said the issue had been raised a number of times since the 1954 Supreme Court segregation decision.

The library board held a closed meeting last Tuesday night to discuss whether to adopt a new policy. The decision to allow Negroes to use the library was a result of that meeting, the report said.

Negroes until now have had three branch libraries for their use in Atlanta, although none is as complete as the main branch, until now reserved for whites.

Color bar falls

ATLANTA — Without making a public announcement, Atlanta's public library system was quietly integrated Friday. For the first time, colored patrons are now permitted to use the main downtown library as well as 11 branches hithertofore restricted to whites.

The three colored branch libraries were also opened to white readers. The decision was made by Hix Green, library board chairman, after a conference with Mayor Hartsfield, Police Chief Herbert Jenkins and Jack Savage, city attorney.

Crowded Library Poses Fire Hazard

(This is the concluding article of a series on a survey of local library facilities made by the Junior Chamber of Commerce.)

By JANE HALL.

The Richard B. Harrison Library for Raleigh and Wake County Negroes, located on South Blount Street, might be termed a fire trap.

The library, housed in an old two-story frame dwelling renovated for library use, is jammed with books. Not only is there no room to expand but the crowded conditions in the building pose a real fire hazard.

These inadequacies, and many others, are pointed out in the recent study made by a committee headed by Howard Twiggs.

The study deals with Raleigh and Wake County libraries; specifically the Olivia Raney Library and the Harrison Library in Raleigh, both of which also serve the county through bookmobiles and branches.

Going Before Council.

A Jaycee delegation will go before the City Council on Monday to ask that the city obtain a survey of library facilities and recommendations for improvements. And on Sept. 8, the Jaycees will take their proposition to the County Commissioners.

Headed by Mrs. Mollie Lee, who holds a graduate degree in library science from Columbia University, the Harrison staff does as well as it can with what it has and that's mighty little — particularly so since it is supposed to serve Raleigh and Wake's Negro population of approximately 50,000.

With a 1958 appropriation of $36,720.51, Harrison operated a bookmobile for county and city distribution (it provides library service for St. Agnes Hospital, the Wake County Tuberculosis Sanatorium and Woman's Prison); and maintained two branch libraries in Raleigh — in Chavis Heights and Washington Terrace — and a branch in Apex.

In spite of crowded conditions and the lack of an auditorium, Harrison maintains an adult education program and has a film service that it uses extensively in its adult education program.

Of the 1958 appropriations, $13,650 came from the city, $17,731.17 from the county, $2,472.26 from the State, and $2,400 from the Federal government.

Expenditures during 1958 show that $19,800 went for salaries and maintenance, while $7,525 was spent to add 3,041 new books.

Staff of Five.

Harrison has a staff of five including three trained in library science and the three branch libraries are operated by part-time workers. According to Mrs. Lee, the present staff is adequate for the limited physical facilities but salaries are much too low to hold trained personnel.

Currently, Harrison has approximately 30,000 volumes and in 1958 had a book circulation of 71,067; thus each book avaliable was used more than twice. Its per capita circulation, however, was under 1.5.

Although figures are not available to compare the per capita appropriation for Harrison with those of libraries in other cities, its position is scarcely better than that of Olivia Raney Library, the study points out.

Wake County has a Negro population of approximately 50,000 and assuming that Harrison is supposed to serve a population of 50,000, this would place the per capita appropriation at about 73 cents, or far below all major North Carolina cities.

Budget Progress.

Still, the study notes, Harrison Library has made significant progress in appropriation and budget. Less than 10 years ago its appropriation from all sources totaled $19,000. This figure has doubled in 10 years.

Even so, the current amount falls far short of what is needed to do an adequate job."

The American Library Association states that minimum standards for a library serving 50,000 requires a per capita expenditure of $3.41. The per capita expenditure of Harrison is slightly less than 22 per cent of this figure.

Like the Olivia Raney, Harrison is greatly handicapped by its present building. Both stories of the two-story frame dwelling, renovated for library use, are used to store books. There is no room for expansion.

Floor space in all the Harrison Library facilities is estimated not to exceed 8,000 square feet. According to the minimum standards of the American Library Association, a library system to serve 50,000 would require approximately 22,750 square feet.

NEW YORK — Election of Stanley C. Hope, president of National Association of Manufacturers, as chairman and John H. Wheeler, president of Mechanics and Farmers Bank of Durham, N. C., as a member of the board of directors of United Negro College Fund, Inc. has been announced by Thomas A. Morgan, retiring chairman. The election was held at the College Fund's annual October meeting conducted in Atlanta.

10-31-59

President of Sound Scriber Corporation, Mr. Hope retired from the presidency of Esso Standard Oil Company last year. He was also a trustee of Esso Education Foundation established to provide financial assistance to privately supported colleges and universities. In 1958, Mr. Hope served as national campaign chairman of the UNCF appeal. He is a resident of New York City.

A GRADUATE of UNCF's Morehouse College, Atlanta, Mr. Wheeler received a law degree from North Carolina State College. He is a member of the North Carolina bar and has argued cases before the U. S. Supreme Court.

Mr. Wheeler has headed a number of UNCF campaigns in Durham where he resides. In 1956, he was a panel member for a symposium conducted by the College Fund in New York City, with the Hon. Chester W. Bowles, as principal speaker.

He has been an instructor in political science at Lincoln and at Brooklyn college and was associate editor of the 1950-51 "Who's Who in the United Nations' yearbook.

THE THREE services Mr. Raullerson will direct are: the cooperative intercollegiate examination program, the Florina Lasker fellowship awards, and the newly-instituted faculty fellowship grants made possible by a $300,000 grant from the General Education board.

Fund colleges get $500,000

Baltimore, Md.

NEW YORK — The United Negro College Fund last week distributed $500,000 to its 33-member colleges and universities, bringing the total 1959 distribution to $1,403,000.

Earlier grants from campaign funds were allocated to UNCF members in January and June.

The annual, nation - wide campaign raises approximately 10 per cent of the combined educational budgets of the colleges.

Allocations to members are determined by a formula developed by the college presidents. The colleges use the funds primarily to provide scholarships and augment faculty salaries.

The fund's 33 - member institutions are all private, accredited colleges and, with one exception, are located in the South.

Fills New Post For College Fund

Chicago Defender

NEW YORK — Calvin H. Raullerson has been named director of the newly - created Division of Educational Services of the United Negro College Fund by W. J. Trent, jr., executive director. The new division incorporates the three educational services UNCF administers for its 33 member institutions.

Raullerson joined the College Fund organization in 1952. As assistant to the executive director, he has been active in general fund raising and public relations fulfilling many speaking engagements.

An alumnus of Lincoln university (Pa.), Raullerson did graduate work at Harvard university and received his master's degree from New York university in 1949. He was an instructor in political science at Lincoln and at Brooklyn college prior to his joining the College Fund staff.

The three services Raullerson will direct are: the Cooperative Intercollegiate Examination Program; the Florina Lasker Fellowship awards; and the newly-instituted Faculty Fellowship grants.

The Faculty Fellowship program, initiated this year to strengthen the member colleges, was made possible by a $300,000 grant from the General Education Board. Each year it will enable a number of UNCF college teachers, who are already candidates for Ph.D.'s or other doctorates, to obtain these degrees.

The UNCF Is Vital In The Missile, Jet And Space Age

Daily World Atlanta, Ga.
Mar 6 1959 Pg 4

Our liberal arts colleges are America's best instruments for survival in the missile, jet and space age in which we are living. They must provide the brains, skills, science and technology which the universe needs to provide hope, prosperity, intelligence and peace for all nations.

The thirty-three colleges comprising the United Negro College Fund have blueprinted their function for these vital services in the United States as well as goals for harmonizing people throughout the world.

With limited resources these colleges have undertaken a job which is so encompassing that it staggers the imagination. Yet they well know that to continue to provide a broader basis for education it will take better faculties, with liveable salaries, money for capital improvement, better equipment, and to strengthen academic objectives through improved curriculum.

This is a tremendous job that confront our colleges. Limited philanthropy and foundation support cannot do the whole job. It thus becomes the task of Americans to shoulder a part of the gigantic financial load that our institutions are carrying with limited resources.

The United Negro College Fund is seeking a national goal of $2,500,000. The Atlanta campaign committee is soliciting $62,000. Six Atlanta institutions — Atlanta University, Clark, Gammon Theological Seminary, Morehouse, Morris Brown and Spelman colleges — share in the fund. They received in excess of $150,000 from the fund in 1958. Campaign workers raised $53,000. This is adequate testimony to the sweeping returns our colleges receive.

John D. Rockefeller, III is chairman of the National Council of UNCF. John J. McCloy is national treasurer. Bruce Barton heads the National Campaign. Here in Atlanta, John Wesley Dobbs and J. B. Blayton, Sr. are co-chairmen working with Dr. Benjamin E. Mays, coordinator.

Support the Atlanta campaign of the United Negro College Fund. It is your best investment towards broader educational opportunities, substance for living in the missile, jet and space age and for an enduring and lasting peace.

Hampton, Tuskegee Students Win Awards

New York — Outstanding senior students Shirley Ann Johnson of Hampton Institute, Va., and Jacqueline Quinn, Tuskegee Institute, Ala., are the winners of the 1959 Florina Lasker Fellowships, W. J. Trent, jr., United Negro College Fund executive director, announced here today.

Graduate Study

The fellowships were established in 1949 by the trustees of the late Florina Lasker's estate to "aid the education of Negro women." Candidates are chosen from among senior women students of the 33 member colleges of the United Negro College Fund. Winners receive between $1,000 and $2,000 to finance a year of graduate study. Each student is free to choose her own field of study and select any suitable university for her graduate work.

Miss Johnson has chosen Columbia University, New York City, for advanced studies in social work. Miss Quinn has selected Smith College, Northhampton, Mass., for advance work in physical education.

Tougaloo Gets UNCF Allocation Of Funds

Tougaloo, Miss.—According to announcement made today by President Samuel C. Kincheloe, Tougaloo Southern Christian College has received $9,010 from the United Negro College Fund. This will represent Tougaloo's share in the second distribution of money made by the Fund to its 33 privately accredited member colleges and universities during 1959. This brings the total amount allocated to Tougaloo during the current calendar year to $14,691.

The College Fund is now conducting its 16th annual, nationwide campaign to raise 10 percent of the yearly educational budgets of its member institutions.

UNCF Scholarship Tests Set For Nov. 30-Dec. 12

Journal and Guide
Norfolk, Va.

NEW YORK—Admission and scholarship examinations for United Negro College Fund member institutions are scheduled this year for Nov. 30 through Dc. 12, Dr. Benjamin E. Mays, College Fund president, has announced.

"The Cooperative Intercollegiate Examination Program will again be administered by the College Fund for the 1960-61 school year," Dr. Mays said. UNCF has conducted the program since 1958.

"WE ARE shifting the testing period from February-March to the earlier dates to give more students an opportunity to take advantage of the $200,000 in scholarship aid available through this testing program," Dr. Mays said.

The tests are open to high school juniors and seniors seeking scholarships and admissions to 30 of the 33 UNCF privately supported, four-year colleges and universities. The examinations also may be taken by students who are considering college at some future date.

More than 6,000 candidates are expected to take the examinations this year, in 265 centers across the country. The Educational Testing Service of Princeton, N. J. handles scoring and interpretation of test results.

Last year a few colleges used the tests as a basis for freshman admissions as well as for scholarships. This year all participating colleges will utilize the tests for this dual purpose.

ACCORDING TO Dr. Mays, said "Pre-admission testing of high school prospects provides an objective method of selecting college freshmen. And the tests will help alleviate the problem of freshmen failures—a problem all colleges face."

Since the inception of the testing program, the number of candidates has increased each year from 2,800 in 1952 to more than 5,800 last year.

More than 70 percent of the students taking the examinations were from southern states. The Virgin Islands, District of Columbia, and 28 states were represented last year.

UNITED NEGRO COLLEGE FUND

UNCF Sponsored Schools—The Open Door

A Tuskegee graduate heads an Iranian rural program; a Morehouse alumnus directs America's economic mission to the Sudan. And a Lincoln U. graduate is the first prime minister of the new African Republic of Ghana.

These three men represent a vital new force in America — graduates of United Negro College Fund-sponsored colleges who step into responsible positions throughout our country — and the world — to make positive contributions to community life.

Some 160,000 have graduated from 33 UNCF colleges through the years. More than half of them have taken up careers in education, helping to alleviate the acute teaching shortage in the United States.

Others, in overseas posts, are invaluable in carrying good will to other colored peoples of the world. In the struggle to keep the Free World devoid of Communism, this has been an invaluable contribution.

Besides their "good will" value, UNCF graduates help underdeveloped areas — especially in Africa and Middle and Far East — progress to modern-day agricultural and educational efficiency.

Negro athletes tour the world even behind the Iron Curtain. Many of these gifted performers are also graduates of UNCF-sponsored colleges, whose well-rounded curricula includes a balanced athletic program.

But the primary purpose of UNCF is to improve opportunities for higher education for Negro youth — especially in the South. To insure the quality of this education, UNCF strives to help its member colleges maintain the high standards set by regional associations.

How does the UNCF propose to do this? To better understand the answer to this question, a definition is in order:

The United Negro College Fund is a federation of independent, accredited colleges and universities joined to seek financial support through a single annual nation-wide appeal.

Perhaps the best summation of the work UNCF graduates do on foreign shores is this statement of Samuel B. Coles—late author, missionary and UNCF alumnus:

"After 30 years in Africa, I am convinced that the work there should be carried on by American Negroes."

The same is true in other areas. In fact, the value of Negroes representing America has been underscored in other ways. At Brussels, in last year's World's Fair, visitors to the American pavilion were pleased to find a large presentation of Negro youths as hosts and hostesses — several were UNCF students.

Contributions are turned into books and laboratory equipment; bolster faculty salaries; repair buildings and, above all, ensure that no young person of ability is denied an equal opportunity for a first-rate education.

This ideal is finally becoming a reality. The situation was quite different, of course, a century ago—when the history of UNCF colleges began.

In 1854 John Dickey—a Princeton graduate — founded Lincoln university. After this momentous beginning, other steps were gradually taken. Eleven years later, Edmund A. Ware and Horace Bumstead established Atlanta university.

Hampton institute was next; founded in 1868 by Samuel C. Armstrong. A product of Hampton was instrumental in the next phase — Booker T. Washington started Tuskegee institute in 1881.

New England churchwomen opened the first college for Negro women in 1870. The last quarter of the 19th century saw a rapid rise of church-sponsored private Negro colleges. Many UNCF member colleges retain these church affiliations, but faculties and student bodies are non-sectarian.

As the list of Negro higher institutions of learning expanded, the need for organized support increased. With this in mind, the colleges themselves founded the UNCF in 1944 and chartered it as a permanent organization.

The first of America's "education chests," UNCF pioneered the pattern for some 40 other groups of colleges now campaigning actively for support. The era of progress is still with us; two new member colleges—Barber-Scotia and St. Paul's — were added last year.

All but one of the UNCF members are located in the South, where 70 percent of all college-age Negroes live. Doors to other private and most state colleges are still closed to Negroes. The future of UNCF institutions has nothing really to do with desegregation; it simply rests on whether or not they are good colleges.

It's this high standard of education that supplies our communities with its Negro leaders — the teachers, physicians, scientists, lawyers, businessmen, ministers, social workers, agricultural and industrial technicians who are so vital to our way of life.

UNCF-sponsored colleges are constantly expanding and improving this much-needed source of leadership and talent. It's one "open door" policy—happily —that's here to stay.

Expect 5,000 To Take Tests

NEW YORK — The United Negro College Fund will administer group examinations for its member colleges again in 1959, according to Dr. Benjamin E. Mays, Fund president.

The tests are available to high-school juniors and seniors seeking scholarships and admissions to any of these privately supported, accredited, four-year colleges.

"More than 5,000 candidates are expected to take the UNCF's Cooperative Intercollegiate Examinations this year," Dr. Mays said.

The tests will be given in 285 centers throughout the country between Feb. 23 and March 7. Scoring and interpretation of test results are handled by the Educational Testing Service of Princeton.

The College Fund assumed responsibility for administering the cooperative exminations in 1958, when more than 4,600 candidates were tested. Some 70 percent of the students taking the examination were from southern states. The Virgin Islands, the District of Columbia and 28 other states were also represented.

Coordinated testing for scholarships was inaugurated by 15 of the Fund's member colleges in 1951. The tests have been increasingly successful during the ensuing years.

Last year, a few of the colleges also used the tests as a basis for freshmen admission. In 1959, the tests will serve all the participating schools in selecting both scholarship recipients and freshman students.

Pre-admission testing of high-school prospects provides an objective and uniform method of selecting freshmen, according to Dr. Mays, who is also president of UNCF's Morehouse College, Atlanta, Ga.

"High-school grades and rank-in-class do not always give an accurate picture because of the wide variations in grading systems and scholastic competition. Scores made on standardized admission tests do more than point up exceptional students. They remove much of the guesswork in the selection of college applicants. The tests should reduce the number of freshman failures in UNCF colleges.

"The cooperative plan has also reduced the expenses of the colleges by scheduling the jointly financed examination in strategically located centers," Dr. Mays ruption of high-school programs by enabling all interested students in an area to be tested at one sitting."

In addition to the testing program, the College Fund provides advisory services on academic curricula and business management for its member institutions. Through its annual nationwide appeal, the Fund raises 10 percent of the yearly operating costs of the participating colleges and universities.

Choirs Plan Varied Music For June UNCF Broadcasts

NEW YORK. — Sacred music spirituals, classical choral works, and folk songs will highlight the June schedule of the "Negro College Choirs," the weekly public service series heard over the ABC Radio Network. Music for the month will be presented by four of the 33 member colleges of the United Negro College Fund.

St. Paul's college (Lawrenceville, Va.) will open the month June 7. Directed by Roland L. Allison, the choir will include "Exultate Deo" by Scarlatti among its numbers.

Benedict college choir (Columbia, S. C.) under the baton of Emmett I. Wroten, will be heard in two traditional spirituals, "De Gospel Train" and "Plenty Good Room," as part of its broadcast June 14.

Clark College Philharmonic society (Atlanta, Ga.), directed by J. deKoven Killingsworth, will sing an unusual Brazilian folk song, "In Baia Town," during its radio concert June 21.

Bennett college's all-girl choir (Greensboro, N. C.), directed by Mrs. Mary Jane Crawford, will present "When I Survey the Wondrous Cross," as part of its program June 2. The choral work was composed by the late R. Nathaniel Dett when he was choir director at the college.

The weekly radio series originates in New York City, Sunday mornings, 10:30-10:55, for the ABC Radio network (WABC, N. Y., 11:05-11:30 p.m.) Check local listings for broadcast time in your area.

Train youth to aid U.S., colleges told

Afro-American 7-5

Baltimore Md,

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind. — Colored colleges Sunday were prompted to train students to aid America in the world's vast areas of uncommitted colored nations. 7-4-59

Sen. John F. Kennedy, Massachusetts Democrat, spelled this out in a speech to a United Negro College Fund convocation here when he declared:

"The vast majority of people in the uncommitted countries are colored. America should be the school of the world. 14-a

"THE REAL threat posed by the Soviet - Chinese coalition is to estrange us from our friends and allies of the uncommitted people of the world.

"It is up to you in the colleges you represent to recognize these challenges and take advantage of this opportunity that is now ours.

"They need our aid, our strength and skills, and above all, our sympathy and understanding."

Senator Kennedy said in earlier days colored Americans did not have the advantage of education, but that today there is "plenty of room for expansion in the social, political and industrial work involved in world development."

ENVISIONING the role colored Americans can play in world development, the Massachusetts Democrat called on the colored college to train students for "global responsibilities."

"Here, old prejudices are not entrenched; race is not important — talent is all that counts," he said.

Speaking of the Supreme Court decision outlawing segregation in public schools, the senator stated:

"That decree brought the end of an era — segregated facilities. However, colored colleges will have to carry the main burden of education for some time to come among colored Americans."

• • •

HE URGED society — colored and white persons — to raise their sights beyond the immediate difficulties of racial integration and focus it on the "challenges of our contracting universe."

Mr. Kennedy had just concluded a three - day tour of Wisconsin before addressing the UNCF meet.

He is expected to be a candidate for the 1960 presidential primary in Massachusetts.

NEW YORK — The United Negro College Fund distributed $326,000 to its 33-member colleges and universities Friday, according to W. J. Trent Jr., College Fund executive director. P. 15

"This is the second allocation made to the member schools during 1959," Mr. Trent said. "It brings the total amount distributed during the current calendar year to $903,000."

Bruce Barton, chairman of the board of a NYC advertising Agency and 1959 UNCF national campaign chairman, reported this year's nation-wide fund-raising appeal is ahead of last year's drive.

Mr. Byrd has solicited $1,000 annually from the company for a number of years, and collects more than $1,500 in the Richmond area campaign, which benefits 33 members colleges in the fund.

Five UNCF Choirs On NBC During Month Of August

NEW YORK — The choirs of Livingstone, Knoxville, St. Poul's, Clark and Philander Smith Colleges will be heard during the month of August on the ABC Radio Network program, "Negro College Choirs." The weekly radio series, now in its tenth year, features the choral groups of the member colleges of the United Negro College Fund.

The programs originate in New York City on Sundays and are rebroadcast by ABC stations throughout the country, on varying days and at different hours. Local newspaper radio listings may be checked for broadcast time in specific areas.

The choirs of the following colleges will be heard during the weeks of:

Aug. 2, Livingstone College, Salisbury, N. C.

Aug. 9, Knoxville College, Knoxville, Tenn.

Aug. 16, St. Paul's College, Lawrenceville, Va.

Aug. 23, Philander Smith College, Little Rock, Ark.

Aug. 30, Clark College, Atlanta, Ga.

The air-time for "Negro College Choirs" on New York City's WABC is Sunday, 11:05-11:30 p. m.

UNCF Seeks $2,500,000 In '59 Drive

NEW YORK—Goal for the 1959 nation-wide United Negro College Fund campaign is $2,250,000, Bruce Barton, national campaign chairman, announced here today. Mr. Barton is chairman of the board of Batten, Barton, Durstine and Osborn.

"When divided among 33 member colleges, $2,250,000 is a small sum," Mr. Barton said. "But it will provide 10 per cent of their yearly operating costs. Since the fund's first campaign in 1944, these colleges have depended on the annual appeal for this important percentage of their budgets."

The colleges use the money to provide scholarships, improve faculty salaries, buy library and laboratory equipment or wherever it is most needed.

THE 16TH ANNUAL college fund appeal will open April 1. Organized campaigns are conducted in more than 125 communities throughout the country. Where there are no formal campaigns, appeals are made by letter, TV, radio, newspapers and magazines. UNCF has raised more than $37,500,000, both for capital and current fund purposes, over the past 15 years.

The colleges and universities—all but one located in the South—have a combined student enrollment of more than 24,000.

Stars Will Speak Out In Support Of College Fund

NEW YORK—Count Basie, George Shearing, Billy Taylor and Dizzy Gillelspie will speak to radio audiences for the United Negro College Fund during its forthcoming nation-wide campaign.

The four outstanding jazz musicians recorded their radio appeals with backgrounds of musical excerpts from their famous record albums. These musically-backed spots represent a new idea for UNCF's public-service programs. Radio stations across the country will use the one-minute appeals when the UNCF campaign opens April 1.

ANOTHER UNUSUAL announcement is the appeal by poet and playwright Langston Hughes. Mr. Hughes speaks in the idiom of his fictional character "Jesse B. Simple" to tell radio audiences about the work of the College Fund. The talk was written especially for the Fund and recorded by Mr. Hughes in New York City.

THE EIGHT one-minute spot announcements are packaged on a 10-inch long playing disc.

To make the jazz spots possible, a number of recording companies and music publishers cooperated with UNCF. Roulette Records, Neal Hefti Music Inc., Roost Records, Rockway Publishing Co., MGM Records, Norgran (Verve) Records, Jones-Silhouette Music Corp., and Jule Styne-Sammy Cahn, composers and publishers. Over-all clearance for the project was granted by the American Federation of Musicians and Local 802.

ANNOUNCEMENTS of the College Fund's annual campaigns are carried in the Advertising Council's March-April Radio and TV Bulletins. With Bruce Barton, chairman of the board, Batten, Barton, Durstine and Osborn, as national campaign chairman, UNCF's 1959 appeal will be conducted by volunteers in 125 communities across the country.

The public-service discs, plus copy for live spot announcements, are available to radio and TV stations from United Negro College Fund, 22 East 54th street, New York 22, N. Y.

"MISS UNCF" CROWNED — Miss [illegible] Robinson of Wiley college, Marshall, Texas, is crowned Miss UNCF by Dr. William J. Trent, jr., executive director, during banquet which was a highlight of the 13th annual meeting of the National Alumni Council at Bennett college last week. Wiley college, with a per capita ratio of $4.39 per student, led all UNCF colleges with student givings of $2,136.37.

Negro Colleges Seek More Aid

The annual campaign of the United Negro College Fund is underway, and an effort is being made to raise $25,000 in this area. The national campaign is intended to add [illegible] a quarter million dollars to the operating funds of Negro colleges.

This fund drive is of great importance and value to earnest Negro youth in the South who have helped to finance their way through privately supported schools. Many of these are church-founded schools. With one exception, UNCF member institutions are located in the South. In Alabama, Talladega and Tuskegee are recipients of help—far more than is contributed within the state.

A number of prominent Birmingham clergymen and businessmen of both races aid in this campaign effort. Money thus contributed goes to a worthy utilization. Gifts may be sent to Paul L. Ware, director, 1700 Fifth Avenue, North.

250 Attend 13th Session Of UNCF Alumni Council

Chicago Defender

GREENSBORO, N. C. — With more than 250 delegates in attendance, the National Alumni Council of the United Negro College Fund closed its thirteenth annual session here at Bennett college Sunday with the selection of Detroit, Mich., as the site of the 1960 meeting.

Registration was swelled by the attendance of some 150 students (pre-alumni) largest such representation ever to attend a national meeting.

In addition to three workshops— one for alumni presidents and secretaries, one for alumni groups in campaign cities and another for the students — the delegates were challenged by addresses by Dr. Benjamin E. Mays, president of the UNCF; Harry Golden, of Charlotte, N. C., author of the best-selling "Only in America," and Dr. William J. Trent, jr., executive director of UNCF.

An added feature this year was the crowning of "Miss UNCF" in the person of Miss Ida Bell Robinson of Wiley college, Marshall, Texas, an honor accorded the Texas institution for the highest per capita giving of any UNCF student body. Wiley students, 486 strong, gave a total of $2,136.37 or a per capita ratio of $4.39 per student.

Second place went to Barber Scotia College at Concord, N. C., with a per capita ratio of $3.64. Miss Lorena Bruner was the institution's representative. Third place went to Tougaloo Southern Christian College, of Tougaloo, Miss., represented by Miss Ruth Thompson, with a per capita ratio of $3.12.

Walter Washington, council president and Gustav Heningburg, field representative, made their annual reports and achievement trophies were presented to the Inter-Alumni Council of Chicago, headed by George Moore, attorney, for its outstanding work through the years, and to the Bennett college Pre-Alumni Association for having the largest representation at the Conference. The group was organized by Mrs. Jean P. Haith, alumnae secretary.

At the opening session on Saturday, the delegates were welcomed by President Willa B. Player of Bennett who cautioned them never to take their colleges for granted or to forget the importance of united effort.

James E. Stamps, of Chicago, founding president of the council, who made the response, was later unanimously voted to be made president-emeritus. Mrs. Erma Dozier of Benedict College, Columbia, S. C., presented the council its first banner which she designed and helped to produce.

Dr. Mays, who addressed the delegates at the afternoon session, urged the student delegates to support their institutions after graduation, saying that "if the graduates did as much as they could, with just a little personal sacrifice, our colleges would not be in such need."

He branded as "stupid" the idea that support of UNCF colleges means perpetuation of segregation. "If our product is good," he stated, "and our doors open, there is no way in the world to keep segregation. Prospective students will be seeking the best education possible and we must be able to supply it."

Speaker at the Saturday night banquet, attended by some 400 persons of both races, was Mr. Golden who urged the Negro to take his cue from the Jew and turn more and more to education to prepare himself for living today and tomorrow.

"Education," he said, "proved to be the salvation of the Jews. The Negro mother for the next 30 years must say what Jewish mothers said to their children, 'Get an education, be a doctor, be a scientist.'

"Yours is a tremendous responsibility and your work as educators is more important than ever before. I hope to see your work prosper, not only for you, but for the South, for humanity and the world."

Dr. Trent, in the closing address made at the Sunday afternoon vesper service in Pfeiffer Chapel, deplored the indiscriminate practice of labeling and name-calling.

"In this country," he said, "it is so easy to refer to a liberal person whose views differ from our own as a communist, or to refer to a conservative person as an uncle Tom. This indiscriminate labeling of persons with whom we disagree, indicates that we have stopped thinking and are actually acting from sheer ignorance."

Dr. Trent revealed that there are now some 24,000 students attending the 33 member colleges of the UNCF and that the organization, since its inception 15 years ago, has raised more than 38 million dollars.

Dates for the 1960 meeting, with the Inter-Alumni Council of Detroit as hosts, will be February 13-14. A partial list of delegates and the institutions they represented follows:

UNCF: A Negro Must

14i United Negro

Louisville Defender

"The socio-economic position of the American Negro in relationship to the general society and the enforced separateness of the group from the mainstream of that society, presents the Negro group with certain necessities. Necessities, that is, if the joint Negro hope is to improve the relative socio-economic position, and erase the enforced separateness that makes limitation inevitable. Among these necessities, active support of higher education takes high priority.

3-28-59

"The group as a whole, has a stake in higher education. Every increase in the percentage of college-trained citizens increases the opportunities for employment for appreciation, and for living. Every such increase adds to the pressure on the general society to racially inspired restrictions.

P. 14

"Increase in the percentage of college-trained men and women largely on the facilities available.

"This means that the private colleges in the South play a very large part in Negro progress. For this reason, they not only deserve, but should get the best possible support.

"Here are some facts that ought be eye-openers for Negroes: Of the Negro college graduates in the country more than 90% are graduates of non-tax supported Negro colleges. In spite of the hue and cry over integration, and in spite of the fact that Negroes can attend tax-supported institutions of higher learning in nearly every state of the South, the private Negro colleges still represent the best educational opportunity for most Southern Negroes and many Northern ones). Any watering down of the educational opportunities offered would penalize the group for a generation.

UNCF heads in 5-way interview

ANNAPOLIS, Ind. — Four presidents of UNCF colleges and Dr. F. D. Patterson, founder of the United Negro College Fund, will hold a press conference for some 200 journalism students from Indiana colleges and universities at Butler University in Indianapolis, April 10.

Dr. Benjamin E. Mays, UNCF president and president of Morehouse College, Atlanta; and Presidents Milton K. Curry Jr., Bishop College; Stephen J. Wright, Fisk University; and Luther H. Foster, Tuskegee Institute, will join Dr. Patterson in answering questions.

UNCF Allocates $577,000 To 33 Member Colleges

New York, Jan. 30 — The 33 member colleges of the United Negro College Fund today received a total of $577,000 as the final allocation of 1958 campaign proceeds, Dr. Benjamin E. Mays, president of the Fund, announced. Earlier grants were distributed in June and November, 1958.

More than $1,843,000 was contributed to UNCF during its 1958 nation-wide appeal. Approximately 10 percent of the combined operating budgets of the colleges is raised by the Fund each year.

Allocations to member colleges are based on a formula developed by the college presidents. The formula provides that 45 percent of campaign proceeds be divided equally; 45 percent divided proportionately according to incomes from endowments, recurring gifts and supporting - church - board grants; 10 percent based on enrollment.

The colleges use the grants wherever needed, usually to provide scholarships, augument faculty salaries, buy library books and laboratory equipment. Scholarships enable many students to continue their education. Salary increases help the colleges keep good teachers and maintain academic standards.

UNCF members are private, accredited colleges, all but one located in the South.

Vice Chairmen Named To Aid UNCF Drive

NEW YORK — Mrs. John Cowles, Minneapolis; John H. Johnson, Chicago; and Eli Lilly, Indianapolis have accepted appointments as vice chairmen of the United Negro College Fund's 1959-nation-wide appeal. The announcement was made today by Bruce Barton, national campaign chairman and chairman of the board, Batten, Barton, Durstine & Osborn.

The vice chairman will assist Mr. Barton in directing volunteer workers in more than 125 communities across the country. April 1 marks the opening of the appeal on behalf of the 33 member institutions of the College Fund. The accredited, private colleges depend upon the annual campaign to provide 10 percent of their yearly operating budgets.

RAISE $131,000 HERE IN NEGRO COLLEGE DRIVE

A record $131,000 was raised in the United Negro College fund's 1958 financial drive in Chicago, it was announced Thursday. The nationwide drive also set a new record of nearly $1,900,000 in contributions.

Stuart List, publisher of the Chicago American and chairman of the drive in Chicago, said the money would be used to augment budgets of colleges and universities affiliated with the fund. It helps provide scholarships, improve faculty salaries and meet other important educational costs.

John Sengstacke, editor and publisher of the Chicago Defender, was co-chairman of the Chicago drive and Herbert V. Prochnow, vice president of the First National Bank of Chicago, was treasurer.

Dr. L. H. Foster congratulated the group for awarding a plaque to W. W. Whetstone for his outstanding service as retiring chairman. He was unable to attend due to illness.

Feted At Dinner In New York

NEW YORK—William J. Trent, jr., now in his 14th year as executive director of the fund, was honored by testimonials from workers, volunteers and friends of the United Negro College Fund at a surprise party at Fund headquarters.

Dr. F. D. Patterson, president of Phelps-Stokes Fund and founder of UNCF, spoke of the growth of the College Fund during Trent's years of service. Dr. Patterson told of his joining the organization during its formative period in February, 1944 and of the key role played by Trent in its development.

In 1944 only 27 colleges joined the Fund. During that first year, UNCF raised $765,000. In 1958 it raised $1,843,033. In 15 years the organization has raised more than $37,000,000 in support of its member colleges. Thirty-three private, accredited colleges and universities located, with one exception, in the South are now members.

The presidents of these 33 colleges presented Trent with an inscribed sterling silver tray in recognition of his outstanding service.

Mrs. Chauncey L. Waddell and Mrs. Richard O. Loengard, co-chairmen of the New York City Women's Committee, handled arrangements for the party.

Dr. Patterson read several of the many congratulatory letters and telegrams sent Trent by College Fund officers and well-wishers. Thomas A. Morgan, former chairman of the board, Sperry Corporation and chairman of the board of UNCF; Samuel D. Leidesdorf, president, S. D. Leidesdorf & Co., and chairman, UNCF foundations committee; and Roy Wilkins, executive secretary, National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, were among those sending congratulations.

Wilkins said in his letter:

"The Fund under your (Mr. Trent's) direction has vindicated the conception of the founders and that vindication in no small measure has been traceable to the energy and guidance, as well as the tact, with which you have worked.

"It is no accident tha the Fund has become a fixture in American life, that thousands of Negro young people have it to thank for undergirding their colleges, and that America generally is reaping the benefits resulting from the graduation of increased numbers of college-trained youth to meet the crises of the day.

"I am happy to send you not only my personal felicitations, but those of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People on your anniversary."

Celebrities Bat for UNCF

NEW YORK (ANP) — Count Basie, George Shearing, Billy Taylor and Dizzy Gillespie will speak for the United Negro College Fund during its forthcoming nation-wide campaign.

The four outstanding jazz musicians recorded their radio appeals with backgrounds of musical excerpts from their famous record albums. These musically backed spots represent a new idea for UNCF public service programs. Radio stations across the country will use the one-minute appeals when the UNCF campaign opens April 1.

Another unusual announcement is the appeal by poet and playwright Langston Hughes. Hughes speaks in the idiom of his fictional character, "Jesse B. Simple," to tell radio audiences about the work of the College Fund. The talk was written especially for the Fund and was recorded by Huges in New York City.

UNCF CHOIRS TO SING OVER THE ABC NETWORK

NEW YORK — (ANP) — The choirs of four member colleges of the United Negro College Fund will present varied programs of choral music over the ABC Radio Network during February, W. J. Trent, Jr., Fund executive director, announced here.

Classic choral works, folk songs, hymns and spirituals will be included in the choirs' February programming. The groups represent UNCF member colleges in Alabama, Louisiana, Georgia and North Carolina.

TUSKEGEE STARTS PROGRAM

The Tuskegee Institute choir, Tuskegee Institute, Ala., opened the month's radio broadcasts Feb. 1. Relford Patterson is the choral director.

On Feb. 8 Dillard University's choir, led by David L. Buttolph, will be heard. Dillard is in New Orleans, La.

The Johnson C. Smith University choir, Charlotte, N. C., is scheduled for Feb. 15. Christopher W. Kemp is the director.

Morehouse College, Atlanta, Ga., will present its all-male chorus under the direction of Wendell Whalum over the network Feb. 22.

PROGRAM IN 9TH YEAR

Now in its ninth consecutive year, the weekly "Negro College Choir" series originates in New York City for the ABC Radio Network, Sunday mornings, 10:30 to 10:55. In the New York City area only, the College Choir programs are heard one week later over WABC, Saturday evenings, 10:30 to 10:55. Local radio listenings can be checked for the broadcastr times in the various regions of the country.

The College Choir series is rebroadcast throughout the world by the Armed Forces Radio and Television Service and the Voice of America.

Bruce Barton heads 16th annual UNCF campaign

NEW YORK — Bruce Barton last week accepted the chairmanship of the United Negro College Fund's 16th annual spring appeal. The announcement was made by John D. Rockefeller, III, chairman of the Fund's National Council.

Chairman of the board of Batten, Barton Durstine and Osborn, Mr. Barton heads the Fund's campaign to raise support for its 33 member colleges.

He will lead thousands of volunteers who will work in more than 120 cities across the country. The 1959 campaign opens April 1.

Author of two best - selling books, "The Man Nobody Knows" and "The Book Nobody Knows," Mr. Barton has also contributed to national magazines and for a number of years wrote a syndicated newspaper column. He served two terms in Congress, in 1937-41.

MR. BARTON is active in many non - profit organizations. He is president of the Institute for the Crippled and Disabled, chairman of the board of the American Heart Association and a trustee of Columbia - Presbyterian Medical Center.

He serves as trustee of Berea College (Ky.) and Deerfield Academy (Mass.).

Contributions to the Fund's annual appeal help the member colleges meet approximately 10 per cent of their current operating budgets.

Last year's campaign raised a total of $1,843.033. UNCF colleges are located in the South with one exception. The combined student body is more than 24,000.

UNCF Distributes $291,675 To Seven Georgia Colleges

NEW YORK — A grant made Friday by the United Negro College Fund increased the 1958 campaign appropriations to seven Georgia colleges to a total of $291,575. The 1958 UNCF campaign in Georgia raised $60,284.

This allotment to the seven schools was $111,530. Earlier grants were distributed in June and Nov., 1958.

Allocations to member colleges are based on a formula developed by the college presidents. The formula provides that 45 percent of campaign proceeds be divided equally; 45 percent divided proportionately according to incomes from endowments, recurring gifts and supporting - church-board grants; 10 percent based on enrollment.

The seven Georgia institutions sharing the 1958 grants are: Atlanta University, Clark College, Gammon Theological Seminary, Morehouse College, Morris Brown College, Spelman College, all in Atlanta, and Paine College, Augusta.

Allocations are used by the 33 UNCF member colleges wherever needed, usually to augment faculty salaries, provide scholarships, buy library books and laboratory equipment. UNCF members are private, accredited coleges, all but one located in the South.

Five To Attend UNCF Conference

Five Chicagoans will attend the 13th annual United Negro College Fund Alumni conference, to be held at Bennett college, Greensboro, N. C., Feb. 7 and 8.

The local delegates will be George W. Moore, 5 E. Garfield blvd., inter - alumni president, Tougaloo Southern Christian college; Mrs. Clare L. McIntyre, 4020 E. 54th st., alumna of Philander-Smith college; Mrs. Leona J. Williams, 3845 Calumet ave., Dillard university; James E. Stamps, 4631 S. Parkway, Fisk university, and A. B. Dowsey, sr., 7452 S. Eberhart ave., past president of the National Alumni council.

Harry Golden, author of the current bestseller, "Only in America," will be the Saturday evening speaker at the annual banquet of the conference.

UNCF graduated from many sections of the country will attend the meetings. The delegates are volunteer workers, alumni directors and students from UNCF colleges, all of whom will participate in the annual college fund appeal.

Workshop meetings will be held to discuss methods and means of increasing alumni support for the 33 member colleges. Harold R. Harding, assistant director of the American Alumni council, will serve as workshop moderator during the Greensboro sessions.

Dr. Willa B. Player, president of the host college, Bennett, will deliver the welcoming speech. Morehouse college President Benjamin E. Mays, newly elected president of the Fund, and W. J. Trent, jr., its executive director, are also listed as speakers.

7 Negro Schools in Georgia To Share in $291,675 Grants

Seven Negro institutions in Georgia will share $291,675 worth of grants made possible by the United Negro College Fund.

In 1958 UNCF raised $60,264 in its campaign drive.

The seven Georgia institutions sharing the grant are:

Atlanta University, Clark College, Gammon Theological Seminary, Morehouse College, Morris Brown College, and Spelman College, all in Atlanta, and Paine College in Augusta.

The allocations will be used to augment faculty salaries, provide scholarships, and to buy library books and laboratory equipment.

Allocations to the colleges are based on a formula developed by the schools' presidents. The formula provides that 45 per cent of the campaign proceeds be divided equally; 45 per cent divided proportionately according to incomes from endowments, recurring gifts and supporting-church-board grants. Ten per cent is based on enrollment.

14th UNCF parley to be in detroit

GREENSBORO, N.C. — With more than 250 delegates in attendance, the National Alumni Council of the United Negro College Fund closed its 14th annual session at Bennett College Sunday. The 1960 meeting will be in Detroit.

Registration was swelled by the attendance of some 150 students (pre-alumni), largest such representation ever to attend a national meeting.

There were three workshops —one for alumni presidents and secretaries, another for alumni groups in campaign cities, and one for the students.

Delegates also were challenged by addresses by Dr. Benjamin E. Mays, president of the UNCF; Harry Golden of Charlotte, author of the best-seller "Only in America," and Dr. William J. Trent Jr., executive director of UNCF.

AN ADDED feature this year was the crowning of "Miss UNCF" in the person of Miss Ida Bell Robinson of Wiley College, Marshall, Texas, an honor accorded the institution for the highest per capita giving of any UNCF student body.

Wiley students, 486 strong, gave a total of $2,136.37 or a per capita ratio of $4.39 per student.

Second place went to Barber Scotia College at Concord, N.C., with a per capita ratio of $3.64. Miss Lorena Bruner was the institution's representative. Third place went to Tougaloo (Miss.) Southern Christian College, represented by Miss Ruth Thompson.

Achievement trophies were presented to the Inter-Alumni Council of Chicago, headed by George Moore, attorney, and to Bennett College Pre-Alumni Association for having the largest representation at the Conference.

President Willa B. Player of Bennett welcomed the delegates. James E. Stamps of Chicago, founding president of the council, who made the response, was later unanimously elected president-emeritus.

Mrs. Erma Dozier of Benedict College, Columbia, S.C. presented the council its first banner which she designed and helped to produce.

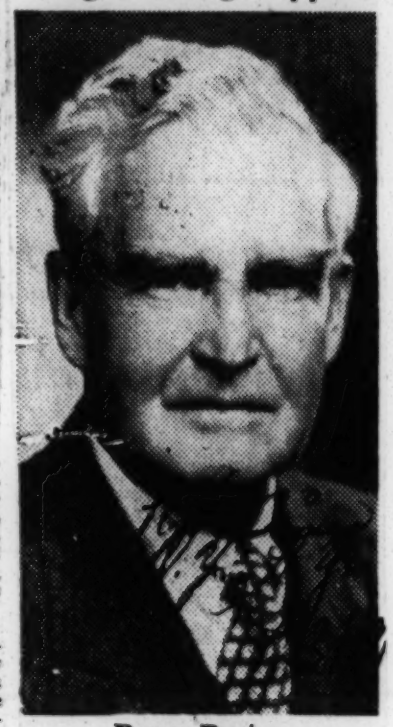
Ad Executive to Lead Negro College Appeal



Bruce Barton

The sixteenth annual spring appeal of the United Negro College Fund will be led by Bruce Barton, board chairman of the Batten, Barton, Durstine & Osborn advertising agency.

The drive, which starts April 1, seeks support for thirty-three member colleges. Mr. Barton will direct volunteers in about 120 cities.

13th Meeting Set For Feb. 7

NEW YORK — The National Alumni Council of the United Negro College Fund will hold its 13th annual conference at Bennett college, Greensboro, N. C., Feb. 7-8, Walter Washington, alumni Council president, announced.

The two-day meeting will be attended by UNCF graduates from throughout the country who serve as volunteer workers for the annual College Fund appeal in their respective communities.

Professional and volunteer alumni workers and representative students from the 33 UNCF member colleges will also participate in the scheduled workshops.

Harold R. Harding, assistant director of the American Alumni Council, will serve as a workshop moderator during the Greensboro sessions.

"Mr. Harding is in a key position to advise UNCF alumni on future plans and procedures," Mr. Washington said. "His organization specializes in the field of alumni relations and fund raisng for educatonal institutions. Its major purpose is to mobilize behind education the full strength of organized alumni support in all its spiritual, moral and practical manifestations.

"The National Alumni Council, representing 160,000 graduates and former students of UNCF's member colleges, should serve as a potent force in forwarding the growth and prestige of their alma maters."

Livingstone donates $2,094 to UNCF

SALISBURY, N.C. — One of the highlights at a recent Livingstone college chapel program was the presentation of $2,094 to the United Negro College Fund on behalf of the faculty and student body.

Miss Joyce Hodges presented President S. R. Duncan with a check for $1,059 on behalf of the student body and J. H. Brockett, Livingstone professor, a check for $1,035 on behalf of the faculty.

Negro Need Not Depreciate Race To Prove Citizenship--Trent

RALEIGH, N. C. — "The Negro has much to offer America and need not depreciate his Negro-ness in order to prove himself a full fledged citizen," said W. J. Trent, Executive Secretary, United Negro College Fund, to Shaw University students on Monday, January 12.

He claimed that there has been a false philosophy that the Negro must become as nearly like the other races as possible and stop highlighting his achievements as a race if he is to become eligible for integration. The Negro, he stated, should be proud of his achievements and should work on his shortcomings.

He pointed out that America, for generations, has built a wall around its Negro Citizens. First by slavery and then the brutal system of racial segregation. The Negro has been on one side of the wall and his white brother on the other. If the Negro made progress he had to make it work behind the wall. Now that the walls are breached, the Negro finds that his crutch has been taken away. He will not be able to excuse himself of his shortcomings because of the "system." He will have to compete with others who have over the years developed a concern for excellence."

MUST MEASURE UP

He said that Colleges as well as individuals must measure up and make some hard decisions: 1. Will they become first rate so they will be able to attract students of all races? 2. Will they demand excellence without compromise for their students? 3. Will the supporting constituents decide to provide adequate resources for a good college rather than a good, church-related college for Negro students? 4. Will the faculty dedicate itself to creating an atmosphere of scholarship and learning? These are some of the questions that colleges for the Negro Youth must answer if they are to move into the mainstream of American education.

In conclusion, he declared, that as the Negro moves, he must take with him his heritage. He must with pride bring to America his institutions and say, "Here, we have been working against this day when we might share fully with you the things that have been peculiarly ours as we share the things that have been peculierly yours." The Negro must solve within himself that what he is, and what he has accomplished, is something worthwhile and something of which he can be proud. And having solved these problems, this will help or hunt his chance to become a full fledged American. And finally, he must solve the problem of how to order his life now that the artificial barriers, based on race, are being breached. These, are central problems, but their solution will be a great triumph for human dignity.

The speaker was introduced by President W. R. Strassner. Music was furnished by the University Chorale Society.

Platform guests were Dr. H. V. Brown of Goldsboro, A. E. Brown, of Raleigh, Dr. Jas. A. Bover, president of St. Augustine's College, and Dr. J. R. Larkins, Consultant on Negro Welfare.

Four UNCF Choirs Present February Radio Programs

NEW YORK — The choirs of four member colleges of the United Negro College Fund will present varied programs of choral music over the ABC Radio Network during February, W. J. Trent, Jr., Fund executive director, announced Monday.

Classic choral works, folk songs, hymns and spirituals will be included in the choirs' February programming. The groups represent UNCF member colleges in Alabama, Louisiana, Georgia and North Carolina.

The Tuskegee Institute Choir, Tuskegee Institute, Ala., will open the month's radio broadcasts Feb. 1. Relford Patterson is the choral director.

On Feb. 8 Dillard University's Choir, led by David L. Buttolph, will be heard. Dillard is in New Orleans, La.

The Johnson C. Smith University Choir, Charlotte, N. C., is scheduled for Feb. 15. Christopher W. Kemp is the director.

Morehouse College, Atlanta, Ga., will present its all-male chorus under the direction of Wendell Whalum over the network Feb. 22.

UNCF Reports Record Sum Raised in 1958 Campaign

NEW YORK.—The United Negro College Fund raised a record sum of $1,843,033 in contributions to its 1958 campaign, W. J. Trent jr., College Fund executive director, announced here today.

"This is the largest amount ever contributed to the yearly UNCF appeal to augment the current budgets of its affiliated colleges and universities," Mr. Trent said.

"The 1958 total represents gifts from thousands of individuals and contributions from large corporations and small business firms, labor unions, foundations, churches, fraternal groups and campus community chests, including those at UNCF colleges.

"Year-end reports from campaign communities throughout the country indicate that the amounts raised and contributed by UNCF alumni and Negro organizations again exceeded the mark set in the previous campaign."

UNCF funds are distributed among the 33 independent, accredited member colleges located, with one exception, in the South. Their combined student enrollment numbers more than 24,000.

"No strings are attached to UNCF allocations to the colleges," Mr. Trent said. "The money is used where most needed. It provides scholarships, improves faculty salaries, buys laboratory equipment and library books, sets up student-health programs."

Since it pioneered cooperative fund raising for institutions of higher learning in 1944, the College Fund has raised a total of $37,516,091.

Gifts amounting to $19,766,091 have been contributed to help the colleges meet their yearly expenses. Another $17,750,000 was raised in a special five-year capital-funds campaign (1951-56) for necessary repairs and new construction.

UNCF Parcels $577,000 To 33 Colleges

NEW YORK.—The 33 member colleges of the United Negro College Fund last week received a total of $577,000 as the final allocation of 1958 campaign proceeds, Dr. Benjamin E. Mays, president of the Fund, announced. Earlier grants were distributed in June and November, 1958.

More than $1,843,000 was contributed to UNCF during its 1958 nation-wide appeal. Approximately 10 per cent of the combined operating budgets of the colleges is raised by the Fund each year.

Allocations to member colleges are based on a formula developed by the college presidents. The formula provides that 45 per cent of campaign proceeds be divided equally; 45 per cent divided proportionately according to incomes from endowments, recurring gifts and supporting - church - board grants; 10 per cent based on enrollment.

The colleges use the grants wherever needed, usually to provide scholarships, augment faculty salaries, buy library books and laboratory equipment. Scholarships enable many students to continue their education. Salary increases help the colleges keep good teachers and maintain academic standards.

UNCF members are private, accredited schools, all but one located in the South.

BATON ROUGE, LA. -- The Ciba Foundation, London, England, has notified a Southern University professor, Dr. Emily Horrington that she is a recipient of a research award for research revelant to the problem of aging.

Dr. Horrington, who was one of the top ten selections from ninety-one research problems under consideration, will receive a one hundred pound note from the Bank of England.

The Ciba Foundation is an international centre, established as an educational and scientific charity under the laws of England. It owes its inception and support to its founder, Ciba Limited of Switzerland, but is administered exclusively by its distinguished Trustees. Its purpose is to promote international cooperation in medical and chemical research.

Attention was drawn to Dr. Horrington and her work when she made a report to the Gerontological Society, Inc., which was held in November 1958 at Philadelphia. She had been working with a research team from Cornell University, engaged in a pilot study to find out the effects, if any, from surgically joining an old rat with a younger one.

The award, given by the foundation, is one of prestige and commendation to scientists engaged in research work on problems concerning aging.

Two Alabama A. & M. College Faculty Members To Engage In Further Study

Tues, 8-11-59

MRS. EUNICE W. MOORE

NORMAL, Ala. — (SNS) — Two faculty members of the Alabama A. & M. College announce completion of plans to engage in further study at leading universities.

The two are Dr. Charles W. Orr and Mrs. Eunice W. Moore. Dr. Orr will join a workshop group August 17 on Instructional Leadership at New York University. The three-unit credit course will deal with such topics as "Current Criticisms of the Schools," "The Valid Viewpoint," and "Techniques of Instructional Leadership."

An alumnus of the Alabama A. and M. College, Dr. Orr is director of Instruction.

Having been selected as a predoctoral associate for the 1959-60 school year by the speech department, Mrs. Moore will matriculate at the University of Washington, Seattle, to study toward the highest degree in speech and teach courses in introduction to public address.

p. 4

Predoctoral associates at the University of Washington are selected from applicants holding the master's degree on the basis of "scholastic achievement and evidence of promise in the teaching profession."

An honor graduate of Alabama A. & M. College, Mrs. Moore holds the master's degree in speech from the University of Southern California. She is a charter member of the local college chapter of Alpha Kappa Mu, national honor society.

Before joining the staff of her alma mater, Mrs. Moore, taught for six years at the Councill Training School at Normal where she was adviser to a third-place winner in the Holmes-Darst National Essay Contest, trainer of two national winners in the public speaking contests of the New Farmers of America, and adviser to the students whose poems were published in the National Anthology of High School Poetry and Prose. She is president of the local alumni chapter of her alma mater and editor of the National Alumni Review.

Scholar Gets RCA Award

Chicago Defender
Chicago, Ill.
Sat 10-24-59

Chicagoan Horace Webb became Howard University's third RCA Scholar when he was recently awarded an $800 scholarship by the corporation to continue his studies as a chemistry major at Howard.

A junior in the College of Liberal Arts, Webb is among scores of college science and mathematics students around the country awarded grants under the Radio Corporation of America's Scholarship and Fellowship Program.

In addition to the student grant, RCA also made an unrestricted gift of $500 to the university.

In 1957, the Chicago Hyde Park High School graduate received a scholarship award of $500 a year for four years from Howard, as a result of the university's national competitive examination.

The new RCA Scholar is a member of the Tutorial and Advisory staff, the American Chemical Student Affiliate Chapter and Alpha Phi Alpha fraternity. His brother, Paul, is also a chemistry major at Howard.

4 actor students win study grants

The Afro-American
Baltimore, Md.

NEW YORK — The four winners of the Ira Aldridge - Rose McClendon Memorial Scholarships for actor students were announced Thursday by Paul Mann, director of the Paul Mann Actors Workshop.

They are Helen Martin and Jay Riley, professional actors who have already appeared on Broadway; Herb Davis of NYC and Dietrah Thomas of Montreal, Canada.

Sidney Poitier and Lloyd Richards, director of the "Critics Circle" award-winning play "A Raisin in the Sun," are among the previous winners who received their theatre training under these scholarships awarded by Paul Mann.

The scholarships cover two years of instruction in acting technique, speech, voice, ballet and fencing. Though this is the first time that the winners are being made public, this is actually the sixth annual presentation.

Hampton Coed 19, Wins Shriner's Scholarship

LOS ANGELES — A Hampton Institute coed 19-year-old Hattie Louise Driver, was crowned "Shrine Queen Of 1959" here last week after giving a three-minute recital on organ, piano and trumpet to win the 13th annual Shrimer's Talent and Beauty Pageant.

She was awarded first prize scholarship of $1,500 after being chosen the most talented among nine other competitors in a brilliantly staged pageant before a crowd of 4,500 in Los Angeles' new multi-million dollar Sports Arena.

The affair was a highlight of the six-day, 58th annual convention of the Imperial Council, Ancient Egyptian Arabic Order of Nobles Of The Mystic Shrine, meeting for the first time in Los Angeles.

Miss Driver, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John W. Driver of Newport News, Va., was the entry of Zem Temple No. 122.

The 17-year-old Manuel High school student, who representing Syrian Temple No. 49, will receive a $1,000 scholarship.

Third place winner was pretty, 18-year-old Gabrielle Bradby of Detroit. She received a $500 scholarship. The daughter of Rev and Mrs. Robert L. Bradby of Detroit, she was the entry of Detroit's Marracci Temple No. 13.

Other finalists who shared in the $4,000 in prize money were Patricia Adrienne Prattis, 18 of Pittsburgh, who received $500 and Marylee C. Franklin, of Pasadena, Calif., who finished fifth. Miss Franklin, 20 received $500 in scholarship aid.

At Harvard—

$50,000 gift will help out Dixie pupils

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP)—A $50,000 gift has been made to Harvard College to help needy Southern students through undergraduate work at Harvard in the next two years.

The anonymous donor asked that the money be used to help white and Negro students from Southern high schools.

THE DONOR specified the gift is for "able students from impoverished backgrounds who might not otherwise have the opportunity to attend college."

The full $50,000 is to be spent on new freshman and sophomore awards in the classes of 1963 and 1964 during the next two academic years.

THE SCHOLARSHIP committee of Harvard College at its discretion may provide funds to support a candidate for Harvard during an extra year of preparatory schooling or summer study.

Preference will be given boys from Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Mississippi, Louisiana, North and South Carolina, Tennessee and Virginia.

To reign as queen of Page One ball

NEW YORK—Therese Washington, 18-year-old typist from Cumberland, Md., will reign as "queen" of the 1959 Page One Ball of the Newspaper Guild of New York.

Miss Washington was chosen for the honor of "Miss Page One of 1959" at a contest held Wednesday, in which 59 girls from 15 newspapers and newsmagazines were entered. She is the first colored participant to be honored in the 25-year history of the Guild event.

A PANEL of nine judges—newspaper columnists and outstanding figures in show business — chose the queen and also picked five "ladies in waiting" to serve her at the Page One Ball, slated for the Hotel Astor, June 26.

Among the judges was Jack Kelly of "Dragnet" TV fame and the celebrated movie star, Gig Young.

In addition to a $750,000 diamond-and-platinum tiara designed especially for her use by Harry Winston, prominent rare jewel dealer, Miss Washington will wear the fabulous queen's gown created by one of the East's best-known department stores.

The gown, according to the fashion designer, has a lace bodice and apron front. The center back panel of the bouffant skirt has cascade poufs. The gown itself will be white nylon.

THE TIARA CREATION and the gown were placed on display briefly during the contest last week.

The winner represented the Amsterdam News, while winners of the ladies-in-waiting honors went to young women sponsored by the New York News (2), New York Times, Newsweek and Life magazines.

Miss Washington, as queen of the affair, will receive a long list of gifts. Included will be a Ceil Chapman original gown, earrings by Jolie Gabor, perfume by Coty, gloves, shoes, handbags, solid gold wristwatch, sterling silver lipstick case, Bruno of Hollywood portrait of herself, fitted toilet case and lingerie.

BORN IN CUMBERLAND, Md., the new "Page One Queen," is a graduate of the Ursuline Academy. The daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Herman Washington, she came to New York in Janaury of this year. Her present position as typist-clerk with the Amsterdam News started in March.

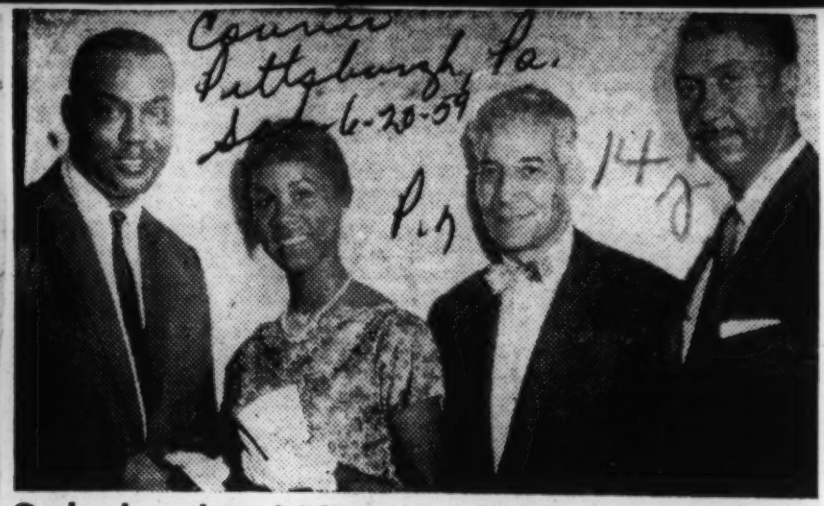
She lives with her aunt and uncle, Attorney and Mrs. Maurice Greene. One of five children, she has twin sisters and twin brothers, one of whom is in the armed services.

According to I. Kaufman, editor of Frontpage, the official organ of the local Guild, everybody is very happy about the selection of Miss Washington. "It highlights the democratic policy of our organization in a beautiful way," he said.

SMART—Katherine Inez Lee, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. R. H. Lee of Thorsby, Ala., placed seventh among the Thom McAn Leadership Award winners for 1959. Approximately 1686 students from 1061 high schools took part in the test. Miss Lee is a straight "A" student who has excelled in previous scholarship contests.

MISS AMERICA CANDIDATE — Nancy Streets, sophomore from South Bend, Ind., who was crowned Miss Indiana University, will compete in the state finals of the Miss America contest. Miss Streets won over 14 white girls in the University beauty contest.

MRS. VANN HONORED — At Virginia State College's 74th commencement exercises held recently at the college, three honorary degrees and a Certificate of Merit were awarded to Dr. Lewis King Downing, dean, School of Engineering and Architecture, Howard University; Dr. Howard Thurman, dean, Marsh Chapel, Boston University; Mrs. Jessie Matthews Vann, president and treasurer, The Pittsburgh Courier, and Miss Sadie Virginia Lawson, teacher, Lucy Addison High School, Roanoke, Va., respectively. President Robert P. Daniel presided over the exercises and conferred the degrees. Mrs. Vann is shown above receiving the honorary degree of Doctor of Humanities. —Burke Photo.



Scholarship Winner—Comely Terri Malone, of New York, named "Miss Africa 1959," receives a check for a four-year college scholarship from former baseball great Monte Irvin, representative of Rheingold Beer. The other gentlemen are Ahmed Zaki el-Boari of Egypt and James R. Lawson, right, president of the United African Nationalist Movement.

Southern Univ. Professor Wins Research Award

BATON ROUGE, La. — (OSNS) — The Ciba Foundation, London, England, has notified a Southern University professor, Dr. Emily Horrington that she is a recipient of a research award for esearch revelant to the problem of aging.

Dr. Horrington, who was one of the top ten selections from ninety-one research problems under consideration, will receive a one hundred pound note from the Bank of England.

The Ciba Foundation is an international centre, established as an educational and scientific charity under the laws of England. It owes its inception and support to its founder, Ciba Limited of Switzerland, but is administered exclusively by its distinguished trustees. Its purpose is to promote international cooperation in medical and chemical research.

Attention was drawn to Dr. Horrington and her work when she made a report to the Gerontological Society, Inc., which was held in November 1958 at Philadelphia. She had been working with a research team from Cornell University ,engaged in a pilot study to find out the effects, if any, from surgically joining an old rat with a younger one.

The award, given by the foundation, is one of prestige and commendation to scientists engaged in research work on problems concerning aging.

RECEIVES $1000 FELLOWSHIP TO U. OF PITTSBURGH

BATON ROUGE, LA. — Roy Kennix, a 1959 Southern University graduate, has received a $1,000 renewable fellowship to the University of Pittsburgh, it has been announced by Donald C. Stone, dean, Graduate School of Public and International Affairs at the university.

Kennix, who was president of the Southern University Student Senate, the highest campus office for students, graduated cum laude.

A native of Donaldsonville, and son of Mr. and Mrs. Mack H. Kennix, Roy will concentrate in the area of General Public Administration, while studying toward the master's degree.

The Southern University graduate received the fellowship based upon his academic record, leadership as an undergraduate student and a total summary of his study habits. "These," according to the university dean, "indicate to the admissions committee that Roy has great potential for service and leadership in the field of public and international affairs."

He will register at the Pittsburgh school, September 2 for a series of seminars for new students.

C., public relations counselor, received the Doctor of Laws degree, with Willis Johnson, second from right, Columbia businessman and civic leader, given the Doctor of Humanities degree.

Harvard Board Picks Bunche By High Vote

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (ANP)—In spite of an attack by a few disgruntled alumni of famous Harvard University, D. Ralph J. Bunche, UN Under-Secretary, has been elected to the Board of Overseers by 15,437 votes, highest in the history of the elections.

● The votes cast for Dr. Bunche, who holds the A.M. and Ph.D. degrees from the university, and an honorary LL.D. (1949), exceeded by nearly 1,200 the votes for U. S. Sen. John F. Kennedy, when the latter was elected to the board in 1955.

As the first Negro ever to be elected to the board, Dr. Bunche will participate, actively, in the ordinary business of the Board of Overseers.

Among those serving with Dr. Bunche on the board will be such famous persons as noted author John P. Marquand, Henry B. Cabot, and David Rockefeller.

TO ATTEND YALE — Herman A. Gilliam, Jr., honor student at Westminster preparatory school of Simsbury, Conn., has been accepted by Yale university for the Fall term. Herman, the son of Mr. and Mrs. H. A. Gilliam, vice president and director of agencies of the Universal Life Insurance company, is very active in the prep school. He is a member of the Westminster Discussion group, assignment editor for the school paper and engages in foodball, basketball and baseball. He will be graduated from the school on June 6. Mr. and Mrs. Gilliam are planning to attend their son's graduation.

Dr. Ralph Bunche Elected To Harvard Board

New York—Election of Ralph J. Bunche, to the Harvard University Board of Overseers, was announced last week.

Dr. Bunche is the first of his race to be so honored, having won by 15,437 votes, a record for such a candidate. Some 21,289 Harvard graduates voted. At Harvard, the Board of Overseers is equivalent to trustees elsewhere.

The famed United Nations Under Secretary General for Special Political Affairs, holds a Ph.D. degree in political science from the historic institution.

2,140 WIN DEGREES IN YALE CEREMONY

1,224 Given for Graduate Study—Justice Stewart Is Among Those Honored

By DAVID ANDERSON

Special to The New York Times.

NEW HAVEN, June 8—Yale University awarded 2,140 degrees aah its 258th commencement exercises today.

This was the largest number since 1950, when the postwar flood reached its peak. The total reflected a growing demand for professional and graduate school training.

The number of undergraduates at Yale College has remained fairly constant, with the total this year 904. However, in the schools of art and architecture, drama, music, divinity, forestry, law, medicine, engineeringand the graduate school 1,224 degrees were awarded.

The graduate school this morning presented 479 candidates, including 177 doctorates in philosophy, seventy-two for Master of Science degrees and 230 Master of Arts, record totals. Today's total included the customary twelve honorary degrees.

The academic procession, recalling a colonial past, filed across New Haven Green, where the ceremony was held in Center Church for 177 years, before entering the elm-shaded Old Campus.

President A. Whitney Griswold, accompanied by senior faculty members and recipients of honorary degrees, occupied a raised dais facing some 7,000 visitors.

The commencement opened with a royal fanfare from the carillon high in Harkness Tower. The Rev. Dr. William Sloane Coffin Jr., chaplain of the university, pronounced the invocation. Then Dr. Griswold presented the degrees. There were no speeches. The Right Rev. Henry Knox Sherrill, Senior Fellow, gave the benediction.

Commissions in the Army, Navy and Marine Corps reserves were given out to 104 Yale seniors who have completed officer training programs.

The candidates for degrees came from nearly every state as well as more than fifty foreign countries.

Honorary degrees were awarded with the following citations:

She's the daughter of Prophet Robert Pryor, who identifies himself as a faith healer and lived formerly in Pittsburgh.

$26,173 In Scholarships Available At Lincoln U.

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo. — Approximately $26,173.88 is presently available at Lincoln university for students or prospective students who wish to borrow money under the National Defense Act, passed by Congress in 1953, to enable students to continue their education with financial assistance from the government.

High school seniors who rank in the upper third of their graduating classes and who need financial aid to enroll at Lincoln university should write immediately to Dr. Oscar J. Chapman, chairman of the National Defense Student Loan committee at Lincoln, and request an application for a NDS loan.

To apply for the loans a student must have either received a permit to enroll or must be presently enrolled.

Lincoln university was approved for funds under the act last January and received $5,288 for this purpose from Federal funds. An additional allocation of $23,475 was granted last week. To this sum the university has added its contribution to the fund, one-ninth of the federal grant.

Because the two grants from the federal government is designated for the current academic year, Dr. Chapman, chairman of the fund is urging immediate application upon the part of those students who need such aid.

Repayment of the loan will not start until one year after the borrower is out of school. The loans accrue three per cent interest on the unpaid balance, and payment is arranged in ten annual payments.

The act carries a provision that should be especially attractive to those students who go into the teaching field. Dr. Chapman indicated that those persons will be able to cancel up to one half of their loan if they teach for at least five years. This half of the loan, he explained, cancels itself out at the rate of one-tenth each year.

WINS SCHOLARSHIP

The Rev. Robert E. DuBose Jr., above, has been awarded a scholarship to attend the Summer School of Alcohol Studies at Yale University. These scholarships represent a major part of the Commission's education program. The Yale Summer School of Alcohol Studies affords an inter-disciplinary study of problems of alcohol and alcoholism in society, with lectures by leading authorities.

TEACHERS: Mrs. Henrietta M. Canty, mother and teacher at Sayre Junior High School, has received a scholarship for a six-week course in home ownership, finance, banking and credit at the National Graduate Workshop at the University of Pennsylvania... Mervin L. Henry, science department chairman at Ambler Joint Schools, has won the 1959 Merck Sharp & Dohme Research Laboratories industrial fellowship for science teachers. He will study company operations and industrial technique.

Call Kansas City, Mo. 7-24-59

NAPLES, Italy. — (ANP) — Dr. Albert Schweitzer, who has spent nearly 50 years helping the natives in Africa, will receive more than $400,000 worth of medical supplies because a 13-year-old American Negro boy asked for "help for the good doctor."

The project to aid Dr. Schweitzer got underway when Bobby Hill, son of Sgt. Henry Hill, Waycross, Ga., currently stationed at NATO headquarters outside Naples, wrote a letter of appeal to Lt. Gen. Richard C. Lindsay, commander of NATO air forces in southern Europe.

Bobby, who had read about the Nobel Prize-winning humanitarian, wanted to send medicine to Dr. Schweitzer, and his father said he would buy as much as he could, if the lad could find a way to get the medicine to the doctor's jungle hospital.

Bobby, in turn, wrote to Gen. Lindsay:

"I think your planes, if they go where Dr. Schweitzer is, could deliver the medicine for me. Maybe other persons also will feel what I feel and will offer medicine too."

An Italian officer on the general's staff told the Italian state TV network about the boy's letter. An appeal was broadcast, and gifts from private citizens poured in.

Gen. Lindsay supplied the planes, one of which carried Bobby and the $400,000 medical supplies to French Equatorial Africa and Dr. Schweitzer.

'Aspirin' for Dr. Schweitzer

Times New York 7-25-59

A 13-year-old Negro boy, son of a United States Army sergeant stationed in Italy, read about Dr. Schweitzer's hospital in Africa. He decided to send the hospital a bottle of aspirin and asked the Allied Air Forces commander in Southern Europe if "one of your planes" could just drop the bottle at the hospital. An Italian radio station heard about the incident and told the story on the air.

Last week the boy, Robert Hill, flew into Dr. Schweitzer's hospital with four and a half tons of medical supplies worth $400,000, carried in planes provided by the French and Italian Governments. There were a great many persons who wished to give "aspirin" for Dr. Schweitzer.

This is an excellent illustration of the fact that the human heart is essentially warm and responsive. If a need can be made known or an appeal dramatized there is almost always a response. It was Robert's own simple human warmth that brought about this happy result. Dr. Schweitzer said: "I never thought a child could do so much for my hospital." Perhaps in this case only a child could have.

WAYCROSS BOY GETS PAT FROM SCHWEITZER

LAMBARENE, French Equatorial Africa, July 18 (AP)—Dr. Albert Schweitzer patted 13-year-old Bobby Hill on the head Saturday and thanked him for a gift of $400,000 worth of medicine.

"I hope I did not cause too much trouble, Bobby," said the 84-year-old Nobel prize-winning philosopher and physician as he welcomed the U.S. Air Force sergeant's son to his hospital on the Oggoue river, 50 miles south of the equator.

"Not at all, sir," replied Bobby.

The Negro lad's desire to help the famed medical missionary led to a unique multi-nation expedition from NATO's Southern Europe headquarters in Naples to Lambarene.

Atlanta, Ga. p. 1

Last month the boy wrote to his father's commanding officer —Lt. Gen. Richard C. Lindsey—that he would like to send a package of medicine to Schweitzer if the general could help him deliver it.

The letter led to a campaign in Italy that amassed about $400,000 worth of medicine. About $350,000 worth was donated by an Italian pharmaceutical manufacturer.

The medicines were unloaded at Libreville to be carried by truck 100 miles inland to Schweitzer's hospital. The doctor had asked that some be distributed to other hospitals.

Patricia Spaulding joins White House staff for summer

DURHAM — Miss Patricia Ann Spaulding, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Asa T. Spaulding of this city, and a junior at Rockford College, has just been employed in the Correspondence Division of the White House for the summer.

Miss Spaulding was an honor graduate of Hillside High School in Durham, and on the Dean's list at Rockford in both her freshman and sophomore years. She is majoring in languages.

All of the Spaulding children are making good records.

Asa T. Spaulding, Jr., a graduate of Morehouse College in Atlanta, has just been released from the Army, and immediately employed by the United States Trust Company in New York as senior systems planner for its electronics data processing operations.

Aaron Lowery Spaulding was recently elected president of the student body at Oakwood School, Poughkeepsie, New York, where he is a senior and one of the less than a dozen colored students in the school. He is now at Camp D-Arrow at Grand Lake, Maine where he serves as a counselor - in - training.

One of Aaron's advisors at Oakwood operates Camp D-Arrow. He wrote his father, (Mr. Spaulding) as follows:

"We very much want Aaron with us as a Counselor — in-Training, for he has proven to me that D-Arrow Camp would benefit by his active participation."

Dorothy Maynor, Tom Mboya, Lloyd Hall, Henry Cadbury cited by D. C. school

WASHINGTON

Some 650 students in Howard University's 10 schools and college were graduated Friday when the University held its 91st annual commencement.

The exercises began at 5:30 a.m. in the upper quadrangle of the campus, in front of Frederick Douglass Memorial Hall.

Tom Mboya, member of the Legislature of Kenya and general secretary of the Kenya Federation of Labor, delivered the principal address. The honorary degree of Doctor of Laws was conferred upon him. him.

OTHERS WHO received honorary degrees were Soprano Dorothy Maynor, Doctor of Music; Chemist Lloyd A. Hall, technical director of Griffith Laboratories, Chicago, Doctor of Science; and Henry J. Cadbury, chairman of the board of directors of American Friends Service Committee, Philadelphia, Doctor of Humane Letters.

GLORIA LOCKERMAN SAYS:

'Just another June graduate'

BALTIMORE

"I'm just another June graduate."

This modest remark comes from one of the 195 graduates of Western Girls High School, who outwardly seems quite calm but who admits she gets "butterflies" inside when she thinks of graduating.

She is Miss Gloria Lockerman, age 16, who resides with her grandparents, the Rev. and Mrs. V. T. Key at their home, 1342 Druid Hill Ave.

Despite the fact that Gloria, in 1955 and 1956, was known around the world as Maryland's champion speller and the darling of the TV $64,000 program, she settled down to studies at Western High and became just another student.

Although TV programs and endorsement of advertisements, may have brought Gloria more money than most teen - agers have, she remains the modest, lovable Gloria she was when, at the age of 12, she was known by millions of persons.

* * *

TUESDAY AT 8 p.m. on the stage of the Stanley Theatre, (used by Western as an auditorium) Gloria received diploma.

Miss Lockerman majored in languages and studied Latin, French and German, she did not make the honor roll but maintained an average "in the 80's."

On Thursday when interviewed by the AFRO Gloria had completed classroom activities and is enjoying being "out of school", so to speak.

Dressed in bobby socks, saddle oxfords, wearing the frock teenagers love, the shirtwaister with a full skirt, and sporting a fluffy, 'trade winds' bob, Gloria was attending daily rehearsals in line with the 194 other seniors of different nationalites.

MISS LOCKERMAN said: "I am thrilled to be graduated from high school. I know I share the same excitement as my classmates.

"I have my dress — it's a floor length, V-neckline white of course, but very plain."

About future plans, for the summer and for college, Gloria again expressed the normal high school graduate's ideas.

She said: "I would like to get a job for the summer, something to occupy my time.

"I'm not sure yet which college I will attend. I have applied at Morgan State College and I intend to fill an application for Penn State.

"I'm sure I will major in languages so that I may become a language teacher.

Asked if her unusual ability to spell in English seemed to aid in high school studies, Gloria said definitely "No."

She said: "Not much at all in any subject. Perhaps there was some transfer of spelling ability in my study of English, but somehow I never connected my experiences in spelling with any subject."

* * *

OTHER WAYS in which Gloria ranks as the typical high school girl include her extra - curricular activities at Western.

She was a member of the French Club and the Glee Club where she sang second soprano and was 'just another member' of the Art Appreciation group.

She likes bowling, modern jazz records, boyfriends her age or a 'little older,' parties and dancing.

AFRO' most popular senior wins Wisconsin scholarship

WASHINGTON

A 22-year-old Howard University graduate, who five years ago won the AFRO's Most Popular High School Senior Scholarship to Howard, has received grants of $1,715 and $650 for post graduate study at the University of Wisconsin.

She is Elvira Amelia Felton, daughter of the Rev. Mr. and Mrs. Edward T. Felton of 4219 Clay St., NE.

Miss Felton, a standout student at Howard, gained a $1,715 research assistantship and a $650 tuition grant toward a master's degree in physical education at the Wisconsin school.

IN 1954, upon graduation from Spingarn High School, she gained the AFRO award for study at Howard.

In addition to earning scholastic eminence at Howard, Miss Felton also found time to participate in many extra-curricular activities, both at school and in the community.

At Howard she was president of the Women's Athletic Association for three years. She was a member of the Modern Dance School, the Physical Education Majors Club and Kappa Delta Pi education honorary.

During the summers, Miss Felton taught tap dance at Fairmont Heights Elementary School and was waterfront director at both Camp Ellen Marvin in Arden, N.Y. and Camp Forest Lake in Winchester, N.H.

ALTHOUGH PLEASED with the chance to study away from home, the ex-Howard coed, a District native wants to return here to teach physical education.

"I would accept a position anywhere, I guess," she commented, "but if I had the choice I'd want to come back home."

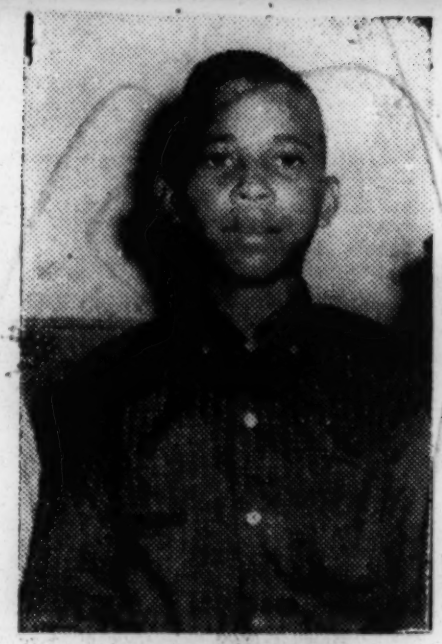
Miss Felton extended special thanks for her new grant to Mrs. Maryrose Allen, head of women's physical education at Howard and to her gym teacher at Spingarn, Mrs. Ceretа Perry, for her help in obtaining the AFRO scholaship.

"Those two," she added, "probably did more than anybody else to encourage me in a career of physical education."

The awardee is one of four children. She has two sisters and a brother.

The Rev. Mr. Felton is an associate pastor at Alexander Memorial Baptist Church. Miss Felton got her bachelor of science degree at Howard this year.

WINS SCHOLARSHIP — Miss Elvira Amelia Felton, daughter of the Rev. and Mrs. Edward T. Felton, who won the AFRO's Most Popular High School Senior Scholarship to Howard in 1954, this week won a post-graduate grant to study at the University of Wisconsin.



CURTIS BODDIE

Curtis Boddie State Spelling Bee Champion

Curtis Boddie, 13-year-old eighth grader of Phenix City Junior High School, is Alabama's state spelling champion.

He represented District 6 at the sixth annual statewide finals of the A. G. Gaston Spelling Bee held Thursday night, May 7 in the Booker T. Washington Business College. Nine district champions participated.

In winning, the contestants exhausted the spelling book used in contests for elementary and junior high school level. Boddie spelled his competitors down in spelling for high school level students in the stiffest possible competition.

An overflow gathering was on hand to witness this word-spelling battle. It drew praise from Dr. Carol W. Hayes, director of Negro Schools, Birmingham Public Schools. He asserted that since the spelling emphasis promotion has been in operation, spelling in city elementary schools has improved.

Twelve year old Lois Jean Scott, an 8th grade student at Cavalry Hill Jr. High School, Huntsville, Alabama, was State Second Place Winner.

Thirteen year old Gracy Ida Lee, an 8th grade student at Finley Avenue Elementary School, Birmingham, Alabama, was State Third Place Winner.

Dr. A. G. Gaston, President of Smith & Gaston Interest and sponsor of the contest, awarded $300 to the State Champion, $150 to the State Second Place Winner, and $100 to the State Third Place Winner. He awarded the A. G. Gaston State Champion Speller Trophy to the State Champion. He also awarded $50 to each of the schools in which these three winners are enrolled.

Seventy-seven city and county school systems, representing over eight hundred schools, took part in this contest. Nine District Champion Spellers competed in the State Finals. It took 2 hours and 45 minutes to end the contest.

Wheaton College Is Her Choice

Miss Patricia King, 1959 graduate of Booker T. Washington high school and top honor student, has decided to accept the scholarship to Wheaton College, one of many awarded her.

When she leaves for Norton, Mass. and Wheaton in September, she will carry with her a $1600 scholarship to the college, a grant of $400 from the National Scholarship Service for Negro Students, a $200 grant from the Norfolk Teachers Association and a $125 scholarship grant from the Alpha Kappa Alpha Sorority.

Miss Tindall scholarships total $9,200

MONTCLAIR, N.J. — Miss Marilyn Tindall, who maintained an "A" average throughout her four-year term, led the graduating class of Montclair High School and received its highest honor, the M. H. S. Award.

The brilliant graduate who was editor of the school paper, "The Mountaineer," also received $9,200 in scholarships, and three other citations.

The trustees of Swarthmore College awarded Miss Tindall a full four-year tuition scholarship valued at $1,800 per year.

She will enroll at Swarthmore next September where she will major in French and political science.

SHE ALSO received $1,000 scholarships from Iota Phi Lambda Sorority and the National Sorority of Phi Delta Kappa.

Montclair High also gave her a pin for ranking in the top five per cent of her class, and the Owl Pin for outstanding service to the school.

The Montclair Times Award was presented to Miss Tindall for journalistic aptitude.

She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James W. Tindall, 88 Lincoln St.

Her father is a prominent businessman and YMCA and Boy Scouts leader and is a native of Columbia, S.C. Her mother, an outstanding civic worker, is a native of Portsmouth, Va.

Maryland woman is appointed principal of all-white school

BETHESDA, Md. — Mrs. Margaret Jones, a teacher and principal for 28 years, has been named head of all-white Banneckburn Elementary School, becoming the first of her race to hold such a position in Montgomery County.

A graduate of Howard and Columbia Universities, she is the wife of an analyst with the U.S. Department of Health, Education and Welfare. Until the appointment, she was principal of Rock Terrace Elementary School.

GLORIA STILL CHARMS — Now 16 and a coed at Morgan State College, Gloria Lockerman still radiates the charm she displayed as a $48,000 winner of TV's $64,000 Question.

Time marches on — Gloria's a frosh now

14j BALTIMORE

It's been nearly five years since Gloria Lockerman spelled her way to national fame and $48,000 on TV's once celebrated "$64,000 Question"—but she' still got gobs of fans.

The former TV spelling whizz has found that out since last Monday when she became one of the nearly 600 freshmen enrolled at Morgan State College.

Now a slim, pert and attractive Miss of 16, Gloria is undoubtedly the "most talked about and most pointed out bunny" on campus.

Afro-American

NORMALLY "bunnies and dogs" — freshman coeds and males respectively — don't count for very much on campus. 14j 10-3-59

Upperclassmen, demanding the respect their seniority as college students gives them, see to that. P. 20

But Gloria is different. Even though she's only a lowly bunny and hasn't proved herself as a college student by successfully passing the first year, to her fellow Morganites the girl who proved so brilliant a speller at the age of 12 is something special. Baltimore

In fact they've made the whole campus buzz with their exclamations, "There's Gloria Lockerman."

Gloria would rather not be singled out as something special. She's come to college, she says, for one main reason, "to settle down to school work."

Still displaying the charm with which she won hearts all over America, Gloria lets you know that she plans to be a serious student and to have a well - rounded college life.

She plans to major in languages, which she studied at Western High, and become an interpreter.

She's looking forward to experiencing the things any normal girl expects to get out of college life — "study, football games, participating in student government and campus activities, and pledging a sorority."

ACTUALLY BEING a coed is not an altogether new experience for Gloria, who likes living on campus in Morgan's Harper House.

Morgan President Dr. Martin D. Jenkins, made her an "honorary coed" of the college back in 1955 when she made her notable spelling conquests on television in recognition of the tremendous skill she displayed.

Moreover, Gloria took courses at the college during the summer.

Right now she's going through the normal freshman orientation period just as the other new students are doing and liking everything so far "very much."

To Gloria the days of her spelling conquests are far behind— even though her fans revive the memories.

The People's Right To Know

Journal P-H-T Montgomery, Ala. Sat. 5-16-59

FOR SEVERAL YEARS there has been a growing wonder among Southern newspaper people as to what actually constitutes the requirements for winning the once highly valued Pulitzer Prize for editorial writing. Now there seems to be some cause for wondering what type of person is eligible for the Pulitzer prizes for reporting.

Clark Mollenhoff, Washington correspondent for the Minneapolis Star and Tribune and the Des Moines Register and Tribune is a reporter who has won the Pulitzer award for his Washington reporting. The other night he told a Chicago audience that newspapers should "minimize" the issue of race relations and racial conflict in their news columns.

This is a stand that many people take, arguing that if the newspapers would just refuse to publicize the antics of the integrationists in the South, ignore the battles, bombings and bloodshed, and report only those things of sweetness and light, all would be well.

But all would not be well. Conflict would remain, whether reported or not. Reporting of public affairs is the job of a newspaper, and failure of the press to do its job adds to, not detracts from, the dangers of conflict.

It goes further than this, however, despite the views of Pulitzer winner Mollenhoff. If newspapers ignored racial news, or more particularly news of racial conflict, this would not halt public knowledge of it. Words would spread, and in the spreading they would grow. Newspapers, by prompt, accurate and thorough reporting of such events, put them in proper focus.

The people are best guided by such prompt and truthful coverage of the whole picture. But one can still wonder if they are best guided by the writings of Pulitzer winners who receive high honors while holding viewpoints opposed to the people's right to know.

Southern Uni. Professor Honored By New York University

Baton Rouge, La., May 25.—Dr. Roberta Hodges Jackson, professor of Home Economics, Southern University, was honored recently by New York University as one of that school's outstanding graduates. The special ceremony occuring each year at Founder's Day, in the form of an honors convocation, features only those degree recipients and top ranking candidates for degrees in the upper ten per cent.

At the 128th anniversary of the New York University, Dr. Jackson was presented an award of achievement which reads: "In commemoration of the granting of the University charter, annual tribute is paid the Founders by signaling the accomplishment of those degree candidates and recipients of the year under review eligible for this award who, under such opportunity, have distingiused themselves among their fellow students through consistent evidence of outstanding scholarship."

This honor, bestowed on the Southern University professor, is the highest bracket of preferment recognized by the New York institution. The certificate carried further a special note from the school's president, Carroll V. Newsom.

Dr. Jackson, wife of Dr. Blyden Jackson, head, Department of English at Southern University, came to her present position last summer to head up Southern's graduate program in Home Economics. She is also possessor of a distinguished record of teaching at Lane College, (Tennessee); Morris Brown College (Georga) and the New York City Skyscraper Experimental School, before coming to Southern.

MIDDLETOWN BOY WINS $1000 UNDERWOOD SCHOLARSHIP

Paul E. Gates (right) — of Middletown — a junior at Ohio University in Athens, receives a check for $1,000 after being named state winner in the Underwood Corporation's 1958 nation-wide Golden-Touch Contest. E. L. Denton, manager of Underwood's Athens branch office, presents the award. Gates is a Spanish major and is active in many campus activities and varsity sports, and holds the university's record for high jump.

The scholarship recipient had to write in 25 words or less, "... how a portable typewriter could help me improve my shoolwork," and complete, in 25 words or less, the statment, "I have tried Underwood Golden-Touch and I like it because ..."

Open to college, high school and junior school students living in the 49 states and Washington, D. C., the contest was designed to encourage greater student interest in advanced education. A national winner and a state winner was named in each of the three categories.

One of 10 children of Mr. and Mrs. Robert L. Gates, Paul is active in campus life. He is vice-president of the university chapter of Alpha Phi Alpha Fraternity and a member of the band and the tennis and track teams. He presently holds the university record for the high jump. The Scholarship Winner has an accumulative average of 2.7.

Gates' first purchase after receiving the award was an Underwood portable with an international keyboard. He had written his winning essay on a borrowed Underwood typewriter. The state winner intends to do postgraduate work at the University of Mexico.

75 High School Students Win National Scholarships

'59 awards double last year's total

NEW YORK—A few weeks ago an 18-year-old Tommy Broadwater, president of the senior class at Harrison High School in Blytheville, Ark. received his diploma.

The son of a tenant farmer whose yearly income for a family of five is somewhat less than $2,000, Tommy now has something beside farming to look forward to.

Next fall he will be a freshman at Blackburn College in Calinville, Ill.

In Cleveland, Ohio, Ronald Robinson, also 18, graduated from East Technical High School, where he was vice president of Student Government, president of the Dramatics Club and won a letter in junior varsity football.

Ronald, who lives with his mother and three brothers and sisters on around $1,700 a year, will be going to Oberlin College where he will specialize in languages.

And in Peekskill, N.Y. when Offie Wortham, 21, came home last week from his job as a journeyman electronic technician, he heard the same sort of good news.

Offie, who has supported an invalid mother and father for four years since high school, where he was a football and track star, will enroll at Ohio's Antioch College in September and major in science.

TOMMY, Ronald and Offie are only three of 75 young men and women this year who might never have gone on to a higher education without the encouragement and financial aid from the National Scholarship Service and Fund for Negro Students.

"This is the most gratifying year in our 11-year history," said Richard L. Plaut, president of NSSFNS, in announcing the 1959-60 awards on July 9.

"Because of increased funds, we have been able to help almost half again as many high school seniors as last year to go on to college."

Scholarships from 65 colleges, amounting to some $64,000, and NSSFNS supplementary scholarships totaling almost $25,000 have been granted this year to students from 23 states, the District of Columbia and the Virgin Islands.

IN ADDITION, 19 "certificates of recognition," were awarded to students whose full financial needs had already been met by colleges largely as a result of NSSFNS counseling and referral services.

Through its system of "discovering," motivating, counseling and acting as constant "middle man" between student, school and college, the agency for the past decade has been aiding students in underprivileged situations.

With the help of NSSFNS, some 6,200 boys and girls have been able to continue their education in more than 350 interracial colleges and universities.

MONEY FOR NSSFNS supplementary scholarships, which are one means of breaking down the barriers established by segregation, is made available by a number of individual funds.

These funds are used not only to aid these new college freshmen, but to continue to assist previous award winners through their junior year. Renewal awards to upper-classmen will be announced early in August.

Among the contributing funds are the Old Dominion Foundation, the New York Foundation, the Inland Steel Co., the American Conscience Fund, Delta Sigma Theta Sorority and the Greater New York Links.

Two funds of special interest in their relation to NSSFNS and its work are the American Conscience Fund and the Old Dominion Fund.

THE AMERICAN Conscience Fund, for "students in stormy transition," was established as a result of desegregation tensions in Little Rock last year.

The Old Dominion Fund is earmarked for candidates in cities where the NSSFNS Community Talent Search Program has been adopted or is being planned.

It is now being extended by Supt. John Theobald to 33 schools in five different areas in the city involving about 60,000 children.

Similar projects also are now operating in several of the nation's largest cities including the nation's capital.

The University of Alabama and Alabama Polytechnic Institute will receive fellowships of up to $7,200 over two years for study at the doctoral level.

The Medical College of the University of Alabama was named for aid through the National Fund for Medical Education.

Other schools receiving grant were Daniel Payne, Miles, Selma University, Athens College, Birmingham-Southern, Howard College, Huntingdon, Judson, Oakwood, St. Bernard, Spring Hill, Stillman, Talladega and Tuskegee Institute.

Amounts of the individual grants were not listed.

Posner Products Company Announces Scholarship Fund

NEW YORK — The well known Posner Beauty Products Company, with offices at 417 West 128 St., New York, N. Y., announces a newly established Scholarship Fund for Negro students in colleges and universities of the nation. This fund is to be put into operation in October or November of this year.

Recognizing the fact that many students with outstanding ability are often forced to leave school because of the lack of funds, the Posner Company is directing its scholarship toward this group. Unlike many other scholarship funds, the students will not be required to do anything that may detract from their studies.

Miss Bell Patterson, the eminent beauty consultant at Posner's stated that the applicants need only qualify on three simple conditions:

1. Must already be pursuing a course of studies in some college or university.

2. Must have above average standing in their studies and an excellent character record.

3. Must fully establish that he is trying to continue school under adverse financial conditions, over which he has no control.

"We hope to make this fund large enough to help several students. "Miss Patterson said, "There may be a student who has a balance on a school account which also may cause him to leave school. This type student is also eligible." "We also believe this will enable the student to pursue his studies unhampered with the pressure of financial worries," she further stated.

"The amount of the scholarships will be decided upon when the applicants list is before us. We will make every effort to do our best towards this Scholarship Fund.", she said.

Fellowships For Foreign Language Students Available

WASHINGTON—Students interested in becoming teachers of Arabic, Chinese, Hindustani, Japanese, Portuguese or Russian, should apply immediately for fellowships at any college or university having a graduate program in one of these six tongues, Commissioner of Education Lawrence G. Derthick announced Monday.

In order to be considered for the school year 1959-60, recommendations by colleges and universities for fellowship awards must be sent to the Office of Education by June 22, Commissioner Derthick said. The first fellowships under the Foreign Language Program authorized by Title VI of the National Defense Education Act will be awarded by the Office of Education before July 1.

On the basis of a study conducted for the Office of Education by the American Council of Learned Societies, Commissioner Derthick determined Arabic, Chinese, Hindustani, Japanese, Portuguese and Russian to be the languages in which the national need for instruction is most urgent at this time. These languages are spoken by more than 1 billion people, or about 35 percent of the world's population, yet few people in the United States have studied any of them.

The fellowships carry stipends ranging from $1,500 to $3,500. The graduate fellows will also receive travel allowances and allowances for dependents.

Negro Girl Named 'Miss Indiana U.'

BLOOMINGTON, Ind. (AP) — "It must have been because God wanted it to happen," a dazed but happy Negro college student said Friday after being named Miss Indiana University."

Nancy Streets, 19-year-old sophomore from South Bend, Ind., is believed the first of her race ever to win a beauty queen contest on the IU campus. She will compete for the "Miss Indiana" title as part of this year's Miss America contest.

"I took my prayer book with me to the contest," she added, "but I didn't think I'd win it. I've been praying all week, and my boy friend and sorority sisters have been praying with me."

A major in speech and theater, Miss Streets edged 14 white coeds to win the first beauty contest she ever entered.

Miss Streets, who has stage ambitions but says she would drop a career for marriage, measures 34-24-35. She won approval from a five-judge panel after appearing in a bathing suit, formal gown and performing a dance interpretation of "Harlem Nocturne."

Asked how fellow IU students took her precedent-shattering victory, the winner replied. "On the whole, everybody has been very nice. A few don't go for the idea, but I don't let things like that bother me. Nobody has said anything unfavorable to me directly."

Other sources on the university campus confirmed that most students are satisfied with Miss Street's selection.

"Most of the students seem quite pleased with the choice," said a staff member of the Indiana Daily Student, campus newspaper.

A member of Phi Delta Theta fraternity, which sponsored the contest, denied rumors of "violent reaction" from alumni and other off-campus sources.

The fraternity has no Negro members. Miss Street, daughter of a dentist, is a member of Alpha Kappa Alpha, a Negro sorority, but lives in a university dormitory.

The judges were Bloomington Mayor Thomas L. Lemon, two university professors and two local businesswomen.

Mrs. Thelma T. Gorham Gets $5000 Fund Grant

To Be Used For Study At Stanford

WHITE PLAINS, N. Y. — Fellowships totaling approximately $100,000 have been awarded by The Fund For Adult Education to 18 individuals associated with mass communications for study and training to broaden and liberalize their knowledge and increase their skills.

C. Scott Fletcher, president of the Fund, made public the names of 14 men and 4 women who received grants. One of the four women is Mrs. Thelma Thurston Gorham, a language arts teacher and free lance writer of Oklahoma City.

Employed in the secondary school system by the Oklahoma City Board of Education, Mrs. Gorham has been granted a year's leave of absence to do advanced study in the School of Communications Research at Stanford university, Palo Alto, Calif.

A former assistant professor of Journalism at Lincoln university, Jefferson City, Mo., Mrs. Gorham will do special study at Stanford in the area of Human Relations in Communications. Taken for graduate credit, the work will apply toward her doctorate. The grant is for $5,000.

Mrs. Gorham and the other 17 Fund Fellows were chosen from hundreds of candidates throughout the United States by a National Selection Committee, whose Chairman was Ralph E. McGill, editor of The Atlanta Constitution. Other members of the selection were:

John Fisher, editor-in-chief, Harpers Magazine; Richard B. Hull, director of radio and TV, Ohio State university; Sig Mickelson, vice president, news and public affairs, Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc., and Perry Miller, professor of American Literature, Harvard university.

The daughter of Mrs. Bertha Lee, Kansas City, Kansas, and Frank Thurston, Minneapolis, Minn., Mrs. Gorham is a product of the Kansas City, Kansas schools, where she was graduated from Northeast Junior High school and Sumner high school. She also attended Hamtramck High School, Hamtramck, Mich., and Northern High school, Detroit.

She has the B. A. and M. A. degrees with majors in Journalism from the University of Minnesota. She has done graduate work in Higher Education and Journalism Research at Stanford University and has done work in Secondary Education in the University of Oklahoma Extension division and at Central State college, Edmond, Okla.

AKA MEMBER

The Fellowship winner from Oklahoma is a member of Theta Sigma Phi, national honorary society for women in Journalism. Elected to membership in Nu chapter at the University of Minnesota, she was the first Negro student to be initiated into the organization

A member of Alpha Kappa Alpha sorority, Mrs. Gorham served as editor-in-chief of The Ivy Leaf, the sorority's national publication from 1946 to 1949.

Professionally, Mrs. Gorham has had a wide experience. Prior to accepting a position with the Oklahoma City Public Schools, she was executive editor of the militant Black Dispatch, Oklahoma City Negro weekly. Before coming to Oklahoma City she was managing editor of The Oklahoma Eagle, a Tulsa weekly. While working on the Tulsa paper in 1954, she won a media citation from the National Conference of Christians and Jews for an editorial series entitled, "How Ready Are We For Integration?"

A former resident of St. Louis, Mo., Mrs. Gorham served as assistant to the chairman of the St. Louis Committee on Great Books, Charles H. Compton, librarian emeritus of the St. Louis Public Library. She was also young adult program director with the St. Louis County Branch YWCA in Clayton, and worked with groups in Kinloch, Kirkwood, Meacham Park and Webster Groves. As a free lance writer, she editor Building a Better State, monthly organ of the Missouri Association of Social Welfare.

MRS. GORHAM

EX-LINCOLN PROFESSOR

Prior to going to Jefferson City, where she taught in the Lincoln university School of Journalism for four years, 1947-1952, she was a free lance writer and publicist in the Northern California Bay Area, residing in Berkeley. With her husband, Richard G. Gorham, jr., she operated Gorham Enterprises, a photography, public relations and publicity agency in Oakland. She also represented a number of Negro weeklies on the West Coast and was an accredited correspondent during the United Nations Conference on International Organization held in San Francisco in 1945.

Mrs. Gorham did a brief stint as managing editor of The Crisis, official organ of the NAACP, at the national headquarters in the Wendell Willkie building, New York City, and served as part-time publicity director of the NAACP West Coast Regional Office in San Francisco.

During World War II, Mrs. Gorham had the distinction of being the only woman editor of an official military publication. At Fort Huachuca, Ariz., she served 22 months as editor of The Special Services Bulletin and The Apache Sentinel official publications of the Armed Forces Special Services Division Service Command Unit 1922. She also served as publicity assistant to the Post Public Relations Officer at Fort Huachuca.

HAMPTON INSTITUTE

Prior to World War II, Mrs. Gorham was assistant director of public relations and part-time instructor of Journalism at Hampton Institute, Hampton, Va. She went to Hampton from Kansas City, where she was a bureau news editor reporter and feature writer on The Call.

During her fellowship year at Stanford, Mrs. Gorham will be accompanied by her 10-year-old son, Darryl Theodore, who will be enrolled as a pupil in the Stanford University Laboratory school.

The Gorhams reside at 2049 NE 17th Street in Oklahoma City. A member of the Baha'i World Faith, Mrs. Gorham is Secretary of the local Spiritual Assembly of the Baha'is of Oklahoma City. She is a teacher at F. D. Moon Junior high school and chairman of the F. D. Moon unit of the Oklahoma City classroom Teachers' association. She is also president of the Oklahoma City Urban League Guild and serves as journalist of the local chapter of Jack and Jill of America, Inc.

The 1959-60 Fellows who come from 13 states will engage in study at nearly a dozen universities throughout the United States or in internships at network broadcasting centers. All of the Fellows are expected to follow individual study and practice programs designed by themselves for their own improvement and professional upgrading. The Director of the Fund's mass media fellowships award program is Robert J. Blakely. Ronald Shilen is the Executive Secretary. Inquiries and requests for applications for the 1960-61 awards should be addressed to the latter at the Fund For Adult Education, 200 Bloomingdale Road, White Plains, N. Y.

New York's Mrs. Ordiway Wins in Pillsbury Bake-Off

BEVERLEY HILLS, Calif.— Mrs. Shirley Ordiway of Jamesville, New York, received a check for $3,000 from Art Linkletter for taking top honors in the senior division of Pillsbury's 11th Grand National Bake-Off at the Beverly Hilton Hotel.

Her contest entry was a lemon cloud pie which she baked in the hotel's International Ballroom, along with 100 other finalists. More than $100,000 in prize money and General Electric appliances were presented to winners at the award luncheon.

Each of the 80 senior and 20 junior contestants who competed for the top award received an expense-paid trip to Beverly Hills as well as the General Electric range and mixer used during the competition. Mrs. Ordiway started with a basic lemon pie because it's her husband's favorite, worked out her own variations to win.

She's the wife of Jerry Ordiway, an electrician, and the mother of three youngsters, Valerie 6; Paul 5, and Gloria 2. She has a moderately large recipe collection, including a complete set of Pillsbury Grand National and European recipes. She sews beautifully and also enjoys sketching and designing, would like some day to combine the two and create clothes.

Mrs. Ordiway is a member of P-TA and Ladies Circle of the Southwood Baptist Church. She will use part of her money to remodel her six-room suburban home, will save the rest for her children's education.

U. Of I. Given 2 Lincoln Letters

Defender, Chicago, Ill.

CHAMPAIGN, Ill.—(UPI)—Two original unpublished letters by Abraham Lincoln have been bequeathed to the University of Illinois, it was announced Tuesday.

The letters were written in Springfield and were addressed to D. A. Cheever at Tremont. Cheever was the grandfather of the late Sarah E. Bryan, Los Angeles, who willed the letters to the university.

Nov. 18-29-59

In one letter, dated Aug. 9, 1858, Lincoln expressed regret that "due to a previous appointment" he could not accept an invitation to appear in Tremont.

The other letter was dated Aug. 19, 1859. In it, Lincoln replied to an apparent request to suggest a newspaper editor for Tremont. He directed Cheever to contact a Chicago or Bloomington newspaper.

Also he asked Cheever's support for a "new German Republican paper" in Springfield.

Miss Bryan was a 1908 graduate of the University of Illinois. Her mother, Alice Cheever Bryan, was the first woman graduate of the University.

Medical Scholarships

The administration of the Johns Hopkins Medical School has approved a private effort to supplement existing scholarships by raising additional funds to aid Negro medical students.

The plan for raising the needed money has two unusual provisions. The first of these is that part of the fund can be used to help defray the cost of additional pre-medical education for applicants who show exceptional talent.

The second provision is that when the special needs of Negro students have been substantially met, the fund may be used for the benefit of all students, regardless of race. Gifts for this project, earmarked for Johns Hopkins Medical School scholarships for Negro students, should be sent to the National Scholarship Service and Fund for Negro Students, 6 East Eighty-second Street, New York 28.

Actors Scholarships Awards Seek Entries

NEW YORK — Applications for the sixth annual Rose McClendon-Ira Aldridge Memorial Scholarships for Negro actor-students can now be submitted to the Paul Mann Actors Workshop. Four $2,000 scholarships will be awarded.

Sidney Poitier, star of "A Raisin in the Sun," and Lloyd Richards, director of the Criticss Prize-winning play and now a faculty member at the school, will assist Mann in making the awards.

Both Poitier and Richards are former recipients of the scholarships and were trained to the Paul Mann Actors Workshop. Other faculty members reviewing applications are Morris Carnovsky, Alice Hermes and Frances Rainer.

The scholarships were inaugurated six years ago at the school, according to Mr. Mann, in the hope that they would make a contribution to an integrated professional theatre.

Applicants should submit resumes and three professional references to Paul Mann Actors Workshop, 1129 Avenue of the Americas, New York City.

Elks To Graduate And Give Scholarship To Ann Rhodes

MEMPHIS, Tenn. — The dream of the courageous leader of the Front Royal, Virginia 21, 17 year-old Ann Rhodes will come true. First Negro and only 1959 graduate of Warren County High School in her hometown. Miss Rhodes was denied the thrill of a graduation exercise because of the threat of violence.

Sunday, August 23, in Atlantic City, New Jersey, little Miss Rhodes in cap and gown will be the honored guest at one of the largest Baccaulaureate Services ever held for a Negro youth. Her sponsor will be the thousands of members of the Elks in the United States and the Islands of the sea. Elks Lodges and Temples throughout the nation will give gifts to the brave youth. Former Brooklyn Dodger baseball star Jackie Robinson will deliver the main address. Afterwards, Junior Elks will honor the young lady and her fellow students at a huge reception. Besides, the young lady — who refused to bow to Virginia's Massive Resistance program — will be awarded a $1,000 Elk Scholarship by Lt. George W. Lee, Grand Commissioner of Education of the Elks. She will join such honorees as Autherine Lucy and the Little Rock Nine.

The emotion-packed services will be one of the highlights at the Annual Elks Grand Lodge, which convenes in the resort city of Atlantic City from August 23, to August 30. Other highlights include: the annual message of Robert H. Johnson, Grand Exalted Ruler, the National Oratorical Contest with seven young white and colored orators from all over the nation and featuring Mrs. Vivian Carter Mason from Norfolk, Virginia, the Civil Liberties Dinner, the Leadership Training Program, the Grand Parade, which is the second largest in the United States, the Pageant of the Grand Temple, and many other colorful features.

U.S. Announces Scholarships For Language Study

WASHINGTON. — (ANP) — Students interested in becoming teachers of Arabic, Chinese, Hindustani, Japanese, Portuguese or Russian should apply immediately for fellowships at any college or university having a graduate program in one of these six tongues, Commissioner of Education Lawrence G. Derthick announced last week.

In order to be considered for the school year 1959-'60, recommendations by colleges and universities for fellowship awards must be sent to the Office of Education by June 22. The first fellowships under the Foreign Language program authorized by Title VI of the National Defense Education act will be awarded by the Office of Education before July 1.

On the basis of a study conducted for the Office of Education by the American Council of Learned societies, it was determined Arabic, Chinese, Hindustani, Japanese, Portuguese and Russian were the language in which the national need for instruction is most urgent. These languages are spoken by more than one billion people, or about 35 per cent of the world's population yet few people in the United States have studied any of them.

The fellowships carry stipends ranging from $1,500 to $3,500. Graduate fellows also will receive travel allowances and allowances for dependents.

Each fellowship will run for a summer or an academic year and may be renewed if funds are available, and if the student's academic record warrants.

The National Defense Education act requires that, in applying for he fellowship, students must give "reasonable assurance" that immediately upon completing studies, they will be available to teach the language of their choice; must also agree to devote their entire time to study or research without taking outside employment.

Student applications will be forwarded by the institutions to the Office of Education with letters of recommendation.

In the initial stage of Title VI program, awards will be restricted to graduate students of the six critical languages. Additional priorities among other languages of importance, to government, business, industry and education, will be determined by further study.

WILLIAM A. BROWN
Receives scholarship

Kentucky State Senior Awarded Wilson Grant

The Courier-Journal Frankfort Bureau

Frankfort, Ky., March 15.—William A. Brown, a senior at Kentucky State College, has been awarded a Woodrow Wilson Fellowship for graduate study in history at the University of Wisconsin.

Brown, of Brooklyn, has maintained an "A" average at K.S.C. He is one of 1,200 to receive a scholarship, and the first time a K.S.C. student has received one while attending the college, officials said.

Brown has been editor of the school paper for two years, president of Alpha Kappa Mu, a scholastic honorary, and he placed second in the National Collegiate Oratorical contest in 1956.

ACCENT ON EXCELLENCE, the subject of Dr. Horace Mann Bond's speech to Tennessee State University's Alpha Kappa Mu's Annual Honors Day Assembly audience, stimulated the statement, "Superiority is not a matter of race; the only superiority is hard work, motivation and human energy," as he also presented the coveted Alpha Kappa Mu trophy to Delta Sigma Theta Sorority president Doris Haynes, Tennessee State business education senior. The Deltas received the trophy for having the highest cumlative average for the designated two quarters of the 1958-59 school year of any Greek-letter organization on Tennessee. State's campus. Two Win Merrill Travel Grants At Atlanta University

The selection of Miss Gloriastene Thompson and Miss Vivian Sanders as Merrill Foreign Fellows has been announced by President Rufus E. Clement of Atlanta University. Each will receive a grant of $3000 for study abroad in 1959-60. The scholarships are given to the university by Charles E. Merrill, a member of the Atlanta University Board of Trustees.

Miss Thompson, a sociology major, will study cultural anthropology and do research in race relations at the London School of Economics. A graduate of Southern University from Benton, La., she has held a University Scholarship and the Walter White Scholarship, the latter the gift of the Atlanta University Alumni Association, this year.

Miss Sanders is a Clark College graduate working toward the master's degree in French. From Sumter, S.C., she is holder of one of the Atlanta University ten regional fellowships. She will study French literature at the Sorbonne in Paris.

Autherine Lucy Foster Gets Elk Scholarship

MEMPHIS, Tenn.—In an appeal to George W. Lee, Grand Commissioner of Education, Autherine Lucy Foster said, "My immediate plans have been to enroll in school for the summer and return to work for the fall semester."

"At present," Mrs. Foster said, "it is not known how long it will take to get a masters degree, which is what I desire. The University of Texas points out that 36 semester hours are needed to receive a certificate, but it will take several summers to get a degree. My hopes are that it would be possible for you to arrange to give me scholarship aid."

Grand Commissioner Lee, in granting the request for a scholarship to Mrs. Foster, said "that the struggle for freedom in education is everybody's struggle and every lover of freedom will long remember your courageous fight at the University of Alabama to unlock closed doors to Negro youth. At the University of Alabama, you stood up under trying circumstances and fought the battle of the entire race in an effort to secure equality in education for all, and a social and political prosperity and happiness, whose course shall be onward and upward, and which while the earth endures shall not pass away."

VIRGINIA CHILDREN

It is our plan to give MASSIVE ASSISTANCE to the young freedom fighters on the American scene, Lee said.

Now that the massive resistance campaign in Virginia has been broken up, Lee said, "I have collaborated with the Grand Exalted Ruler, Robert H. Johnson, to give recognition to the 40 odd Virginia children, who crushed it with their bare hands.

"We hope to find some way to invite them and their brave leader, Mrs. Vivian Carter Mason, to the Grand Lodge in Atlantic City in August. It is our plan to have these boys and girls who were in this struggle as our guests, at the National Oratorical contest and baccalaureate sermon at the Grand Lodge."

The plan outlined to Mrs. Buena V. Kelley, Grand Daughter secretary, a native Virginian, said "the citizens of her state have received the suggestion very enthusiastically."

LITTLE ROCK NINE

Last year in Washington, the Department of Education had for its guests the nine children of Little Rock, with their brave leader, Mrs. Daisy Bates, and presented them $9,000 in scholarships. It is the plan of the Deepartment of Education to do something similar for a number of the young freedom fighters of Virginia.

The department has on its roll for this year, 48 students in the universities of America, Canada, and Mexico. Three of these students were among the five children who were plantiffs in the Supreme Court case, which made segregation illegal in the United States. Some others are: Bobby Cain, first Negro to graduate from the integrated Clinton High school, Ernest McEwen, who led a student revolt in Mississippi and also Gail Epps from Clinton High school.

Full Tuition at Nevade U.

Chinese Club Owner Offers Two Negroes Scholarships

RENO Nev.—In a letter addressed to the president of the University of Nevada, Bew Hong (Bill) Fong, president and general manager of the New China Club, says the club will sponsor two Negro students from Nevada high schools to the full four years of tuition at the University of Nevada.

Mr. Fong

The Board of Regents of the university, formally has accepted the proposed scholarships with thanks.

An unusual feature of these scholarships, which are for $1,000 a year over four years for one Negro girl student and $1,000 for one Negro boy, is Mr. Fong's statement that not only will he see the two students through the university, but he will guarantee to find jobs "commensurate with their inclination and scholastic record" after graduation.

THE NEW CHINA Club scholarships are the only ones for Negroes containing this promise.

• "I feel," said Mr. Fong in announcing the scholarships, "that we can use all the first-class citizens we can produce, regardless of color, and if I can encourage some of them to work hard and take degrees which will make them leaders later on, then I'll feel I've done something worth doing."

Mr. Fong is the dynamic young Chinese-American who startled the gambling industry a few weeks ago by proposing an association of all gaming licensees "to formulate a code of ethics and police our own industry."

The proposal received national recognition.

Negroes attend approximately nine of the 34 high schools in Nevada, and a number will be graduating this year from Reno, Las Vegas and Hawthorne, among others. Several have intimated they would attend the university if they were enabled to do so.

Negro Girl Wins Knoxville, Tenn. Spelling Match

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. (ANP) — The best speller in the grade schools in the city of Knoxville is a 12-year old Negro girl, Lillie G. Linder, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Willie F. Linder won the spelling champion title after eliminating 32 other contestants.

In a radical departure from former custom and practice, Negroes were admitted to compete in the annual spelling contest at the auditorium of radio station WNOX, which sponsors the contest.

A seventh grade student at Beardsley Junior High school, Lillie won the title after eliminating the defending champion, a white student, Ada Greenblatt who missed the word Innocuous during the 14th round. Under the rules of the contest, Lillie was asked to spell the same word. She spelled it correctly and then spelled Irreconcilable to be declared winner of the contest.

Most Pure Heart Of Mary School Senior Choses Harvard Scholarship

MOBILE — Charles Bernard Frazier, a senior at Most Pure Heart of Mary High School, has accepted a four-year scholarship to Harvard College after considering offers from eight institutions.

Four-year scholarships were also offered him by Stanford University and Howard University and partial renewable scholarships were offered by Spring Hill College, Xavier University, College of St. Thomas, Lincoln University and Fisk University.

THE DOMINICAN SISTERS of Sinsinawa who conduct Most Pure Heart of Mary High School, pointed out that the windfall of scholarships for the 1959 graduate was not surprising since he was a finalist in the National Merit Scholarship program and made straight "A" average through four years of high school. He was also on the football team all four years and was captain of the school team in the 1958-59 season.

Charles is also a finalist in the Alabama Science Talent Search of the Gorgas Scholarship Foundation which gives him another award. Before enterng Harvard in the fall he will attend the science and mathematics camp of the University of Kansas under a scholarship.

Young Frazier is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Elvert McQueen, 764 S. Cedar St.

Special to The New York Times

UNITED NATIONS, N. Y., March 3—George Mason Miller, a North Carolina high school junior who aspires to be United States Ambassador to Ghana, left today on a two-week visit to that country as the guest of its Prime Minister, Dr. Kwame Nkrumah.

Young Miller, who has just turned 14, first achieved a measure of fame in 1958, when he appeared on the first of two television quiz shows in which he won a total of $20,000 and other prizes.

Last year, when Dr. Khrumah was in Washington, George had a twenty-minute audience with him and was invited to visit Ghana.

This morning the boy and his mother, Mrs. Mason C. Miller, who will accompany him on the trip, stopped at Ghana's mission to the United Nations to see Ambassador Daniel A. Chapman.

George, who attends school in Statesville, N. C., wants to go to college and then take a year of graduate work in England or France before entering the diplomatic service.

SPELMAN STUDENTS GET TRAVEL-STUDY GRANTS

In morning chapel President A. E. Manley congratulated Miss Delores Betts and Miss Herschelle Sullivan who have been chosen by Spelman College to receive foreign travel grants beginning in June, 1959. The gift for establishing these awards has been made by Mr. Charles E. Merrill, Jr., who feels that the United States is in need of young people with as broad an education as possible to serve the community both in this country and abroad. The objective of the fellowship, then, is to enable the recipient to broaden herself culturally through the experience of living abroad.

Miss Delores Evelyn Betts, a graduate of the John M. Langston High School, Danville, Va., is at present a junior at Spelman College. Her major is English and her minor, history. During her high school career, Miss Betts was an honor student and participated in both dramatic and literary groups. At Spelman, Miss Betts has been active in student government and in the English Club, and has continued to be an honor student.

PENNSYLVANIA NATIVE

Miss Sullivan, a native of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, is a graduate of South Hills High School where she won various awards for scholarship and was active in extra-curricular activities in both school and church. Her major at Spelman is social science and she has been very active in this area, participating in various panels and forums as well as in the Intercollegiate Council. She has sung in the Glee Club for three years, has worked on the college newspaper, and has been active both in dramatics and in various clubs. Miss Sullivan also has held various class offices. Her scholarship record is high.

Miss Betts and Miss Sullivan were chosen from nominations made by a faculty and staff committee on the basis of scholastic ability, intellectual curiosity, personality, emotional stability and service to the school. Their travel and study will be done under the guidance of Mrs. Irene Dobbs Jackson, acting head of the department of French at Spelman College.

Methodist Travel Seminar

Gammon Student To Visit Europe

Maurice King, first year student at Gammon Theological Seminary, has received notice that he will be a member of the 1959 Methodist European Travel Seminar and Work Camp.

Mr. King, son of a Methodist minister, Rev. J. L. King of Aberdeen, Miss., is the first Negro to be chosen as a member of this group of 30 youths. His participation is made possible by the College of Bishops of the Central Jurisdiction of the Methodist Church.

This Seminar is a product of the Methodist Student Movement with other of the Church agencies cooperating. The group is scheduled to fly, June 17, on a tour of France, Switzerland, Austria, Poland, Germany, Belgium, Holland and England. They will spend three weeks in Ried, Austria. Previous groups have dug down the side of a very steep hill and started construction of a church. The '59 work camp group will continue this construction.

Participants in this Seminar have been carefully chosen. Qualifications are, "good academic average, mature Christian faith, Christian motivation for service, ability to establish rapport with people and willingness to do hard, physical work. Those who go should have a sincere desire to promote Christian brotherhood and the mission of the church."

Mr. King's father is also a graduate of Gammon. He has two brothers who are Methodist ministers. The young theological student is doing his field work at the Bowen Memorial Methodist Church in Atlanta, where he is in charge of the youth program. He has been in great demand for both singing and speaking engagements in many city groups. He is a member of the Atlanta Choral Singers under the famous director, Willis James. At Gammon, Mr. King is treasurer of his class and one of the editors of The Year Book. Mr. King is a graduate of Mary Holmes Junior College at Westpoint, Miss., and Rust College, Holly Springs, Miss. He was a member and business manager of the Traveling Choir at Rust and toured South Dakota, Minnesota, North Dakota and Iowa. He was a delegate to several interracial student meetings; the National Methodist Student Movement at the University of Kansas, a Regional Workshop of the Methodist Youth Fellowship in Wausecs, Minn., and the Student Volunteer Meeting at Athens, Ohio.

Negro Girl Wins Knoxville, Tenn. Spelling Match

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. (ANP) The best speller in the grade schools in the city of Knoxville is a 12 - year - old Negro girl. Lillie G. Linder, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Willie F. Linder won the spelling champion title after eliminating 32 other contestants.

In a radical departure from former custom and practice, Negroes were admitted to compete in the annual spelling contest at the auditorium of radio station WNOX, which sponsors the contest.

A seventh grade student at Beardsley junior high school, Lillie won the title after eliminating the defending champion, a white student, Ada Greenblatt who missed the word Innocuous during the 14th round. Under the rules of the contest, Lillie was asked to spell the same word. She spelled it correctly and then spelled Irreconcilable to be declared winner of the contest.

..WINS TRIP

As champion, Lillie will be the guest of the News - Sentinel for a week of fun and sight - seeing in Washington, D. C. She will later compete in the National Spelling Bee which awards up to $3500 in cash prizes.

In addition to the trip, Lillie received a 24 - volume set of the Encyclopedia Britannica, and due to her winning effort, her school will now have free access to the Britannica film library.

School Teacher's Influence Felt Throughout Community

Albertha Johnston Murray has loved teaching since she cut paper dolls out of fashion magazines and "taught them." Her career has influenced the lives of whole families in her school's community.

After finishing a teachers' course at Claflin College in Orangeburg, she started teaching shortly before her 19th birthday anniversary. She has been behind a school desk for 48 years.

Later she received a B.S. degree from South Carolina State College in Orangeburg. For the last 32 years she has taught in the Murray-LaSaine community. The school, of which she is principal, was named jointly for Mrs. Murray and Dr. M. Alice LaSaine, former supervisor of Negro schools in the county.

"Ninety-five per cent of my student body of 268 are children of my former pupils," Mrs. Murray said.

"This community cooperates with the school 100 per cent. Parents sponsor the diet kitchen and take up the remaining bills at the end of the school year with money raised at an annual tea. They bought our wonderful playground equipment.

Children are children, no matter what generation. They are no harder to discipline these days. If anything, these children in my class now are easier to teach because they are children of parents I trained. And they have the training to start which their parents didn't have. That is one reason for the cooperation in our community. Parents know what went on in school when they attended and they know what is allowed now.

"I have to be stern to keep the children under control, but they know when they leave home what is expected of them at school. If you want to see a wide-eyed pupil, just see me tell him, 'I'm going to tell your parents.' What goes on in the home, goes on in school."

Indicative of discipline and parental cooperation was the fact that Mrs. Murray could leave her class room unattended while being interviewed. Bedlam didn't break loose. Class reading continued as if under supervision.

"Children these days," she said, "although not harder to discipline, are more daring — what with television and the s[illegible] Even a baby will ta[illegible] point it at you. As time goes on educational television will overbalance the violent programs. Everybody can't get the moral of those stories."

On her staff of seven teachers, two are her former pupils. So are the janitor and the dietitian. In her career, she has seen 50 per cent of her students through the years enter college. Although not all finished, several have become doctors and lawyers.

A former pupil, whom she taught at Dart private school is Thomas LaSaine Jr., son of the former supervisor. He is now head of the department of preventive medicine at Meharry Medical College, Nashville, Tenn.

Her only a child, a daughter, is a mathematics teacher at Wallace High School. Mrs. Murray has helped several nieces and nephews enter the teaching profession. A nephew is instructor of student personnel at Delaware State College. He is a doctor of education. A niece is dean of guidance in a Jacksonville, Fla., school.

"I have alway tried to encourage pupils along any line they might try," Mrs. Murray said. "I couldn't sing when I was a child and I had a teacher who used to say, 'Why don't you hush? You can't carry a tune!' That has caused me not to sing today."

For almost 20 years Mrs. Murray taught night school and for eight summers she taught teachers rural education at Bettis Academy, Trenton.

"The school's influence in the community," she said, "is seen in the homes as well as in the children. Our school formerly went to the eighth grade, before consolidation. And then we taught sewing. Every girl had to make her own graduation dress. As a result, many of these people sew and some mothers make all the clothes for their children.

"I can see improvement in the home life in this community. The people have taken more interest in beautifying their homes and the children are conscious of beautifying their yards.

"I [illegible]y believe the school re[illegible] the community and the improv[illegible]nts I've seen."

Last [illegible]r, Mrs. Murray was named [illegible]an of the Year by the Charles[illegible] Chapter of Links, Inc., a civic [illegible] education organization. Sh[illegible]s cited in 1954 by Omega [illegible]ation fraternity, for outstandin[illegible]work in education.

She is [illegible] member of Central Baptist Chu[illegible]h, president of the Missionary [illegible]iety and a member of the [illegible]rch finance committee. She [illegible]ngs to the Order of the East[illegible] Sta[illegible], Charleston Federated C[illegible] state, national and local tea[illegible]ers association and the Leagu[illegible] of Women Voters. She is [illegible]ember of the board of directors of the Charleston County Tuberculosis Assn.

Mrs. Murray, in recent years, has visited the West Coast and toured from San Francisco to Mexico. She also has vacationed in Nassau, Jamaica and Cuba, and last summer visited Canada.

Oklahoma City School Teacher Wins $5,000 Fellowship Grant

A fellowship grant for $5,000 has been awarded to Mrs. Thelma D. Gorham of Oklahoma City by the Fund for Adult Education. A language arts teacher at F. D. Moon Junior high school, Mrs. Gorham was one of 18 persons, only four of them women, to whom fellowships totaling approximately $100,000 were awarded for study and training to broaden and liberalize their knowledge and increase their skills in the mass media of communications.

Mrs. Gorham has been granted a year's eave of absence by the Oklahoma City Board of Education to do advanced study in the School of Communications Research at Stanford university, Palo Alto, Calif. She will do special study in the area of Human Relations in Communications. Taken for graduate credit, the work will apply toward her doctorate.

Mrs. Gorham and the other 17 Fund Fellows were chosen from hundreds of candidates throughout the United States by a National Selection committee whose chairman was Ralph E. McGill, editor of The Atlanta Constitution. Other members of the selection committee were: John Fisher, editor-in-chief, Harper's Magazine; Richard B. Hull, director of radio and TV, Ohio State university; Sig. Mickelson, vice president, news and public affairs, Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc., and Perry Miller, professor of American Literature, Harvard university.

The Oklahoma City fellowship winner, who attended high school in Detroit, Mich., is a product of the Kansas City, Kansas schools, where she was graduated from oNrtheast Junior and Sumner high schools. She has the B. A. and M. A. in Journalism and Sociology from the University of Minnesota. She has done graduate work in Higher Education and Journalism Research at Stanford university, and in Secondary Education in the University of Oklahoma Extension division and at Central State college, Edmond.

A member of Alpha Kappa Alpha sorority, Mrs. Gorham served as editor-in-chief of The Ivy Leaf, the sorority's national publication, from 1946 to 1949. She is also a member of Theta Sigma Pi, national honorary fraternity for women in Journalism. Elected to member ship in Nu chapter at the University of Minnesota, she was the first Negro student to be initiated into the organization.

Mrs. Gorham's professional experience in the area f mass communications includes both practical work on publications and in the field of public relations and teaching at the college level. She was an assistant professor of Journalism at Lincoln university, Jefferson City, Mo., and served as an instructor of Journalism and assistant director of Public Relations at Hampton Institute, Hampton, Va. While managing editof of The Oklahoma Eagle, Tulsa weekly, in 195 4she won a media citation from the National Conference of Christians and Jews for an editorial series entitled, "How Ready Are We For Integration?" Prior to accepting a teaching position in the Oklahoma City public schools, Mrs. Gorham was executive editor of The Black Dispatch.

Edited Army Publications

During World War II, Mrs. Gorham had the distinction of being the only woman editor of an official military publication. At Fort Huachuca, Arizona, she served as editor of the Special Services Bulletin, a monthly publication, and The Apache Sentinel, weekly newspaper, of the Armed Forces Special Services division, Service Command Unit 1922. She also served as a civilian publicity assistant to the Post Public Relations Officer at Fort Huachuca.

Mrs. Gorham, who resides at 2049 N. E. 17th, is a member of the Baha'i Faith, serving as secretary of the Local Spiritual Assembly of the Baha'is of Oklahoma City, and as a member of the Southwest Baha'i Summer School committee. She is also president of the Oklahoma City Urban League guild and a member of the local chapter of Jack and Jill of America, Inc.

During her fellowship year at Stanford, Mrs. Gorham will be accompanied by her ten-year-old son, Darryl Theodore, currently a fifth grade student at the Creston Hills elementary school. Darryl will be enrolled as a pupil in the Stanford University Laboratory school.

Follow Individual Study

According to the announcement of the 1959-60 fellowships from the Fund for Adult Education, made by C. Scott Fletcher, president of the Fund, the 1959-60 fellows who come from 13 states, will engage in study at nearly a dozen universities throughout the United States or in internships at network broadcasting centers. All of the fellows are expected to follow individual study and practice programs designed by themselves for their own improvement and professional up-grading.

The director of the Fund's mass media fellowships award program is Robert J. Blakely. Ronald Shilen is the executive secretary. Inquiries and requests for applications for the 1960-61 awards should be addressed to the latter at the Fund for Adult Education, 200 Bloomingdale Road, White Plains, New York.

JOHN H. CHADWELL

ALBANY STATE PROF AWARDED FELLOWSHIP — The Southern Fellowships Fund, an agency of Southern Universities, has recently announced the eligibility of John H. Chadwell, Chairman of the Department of Music at Albany State College in Albany, Ga., to receive one of its "Faculty Fellowships for Advanced Study and Research, 1959-60."

Mr. Chadwell, a native of Toledo, Ohio, a graduate of Alabama State College and Columbia University will matriculate at Iowa State University, Iowa City, Iowa, beginning in September, 1959 pursuing a program in Music Education leading to the Ph. D. degree.

The Southern Fellowships Fund was established as an agency to administer to a system of grants made possible through an appropriation to the Council by the General Education Board in New York in 1934 to develop a program of faculty improvement in Southern colleges and universities through a system of scholarships and fellowships broadly interpreted.

Morehouse Has Scholarships Available Now

Morehouse College is making available special tuition scholarships for deserving students, under a unique arrangement between the college and the National Urban League, it was announced today by Dean B. R. Brazeal. The scholarships have been set aside for high school students who are taking part in the Urban League's youth-incentives program, "Tomorrow's Scientists and Technicians." Popularly known as TST, the program is designed to increase the number of students entering the scientific and technical fields.

The scholarships will be awarded to high school seniors entering the freshman year, and to third-year high school students who are eligible for the freshman class under the Early Admissions Program. To be eligible for either scholarship the applicant must rank well in the upper third of his class. He must be a participant in the Urban League TST program, in any of the 63 communities in 32 states where there are local Urban Leagues. He must also meet the college entrance requirements.

Candidates for the scholarships are nominated by local Urban Leagues.

Tomorrow's Scientists and Technicians was initiated last year. A national committee of educators and technicians is serving as advisor. A National sponsoring committee of individuals and organizations is supporting the program.

The National Urban League is an interracial, educational service agency established in 1910 to further equal opportunity for Negroes in employment, education, housing and social welfare.

Four from Tennessee State in Who's Who among women

NASHVILLE — Four Tennessee State University professors have been named in the first edition of Who's Who of American Women.

Dr. Lua S. Bartley, head of the Department of Health and Physical Education, and three "Rh. D's." in the department of modern foreign languages, Dr. Alma T. Watkins, Dr. Virginia S. Nyabongo and Dr. Sarah M. Pereira are listed in the biographical reference dictionary of approximately 50,000 "women outstanding as women."

DR. LUA S. BARTLEY, Jacksonville, Fla. hometowner, has been a member of Tennessee State's faculty for 13 years.

Undergraduate of Howard University where she received her A.B. degree Cum Laude, Dr. Bartley was awarded her M.A. and Ph.D. degrees from the University of Michigan.

Physical education specialist Lua S. Bartley has won recognition in basketball, track events and swimming, and has also received a national rating in tennis as a singles runner-up.

Locally she has thrice captured the singles title in the Hadley Park open and has also copped championships in the doubles and mixed doubles.

A SIXTEEN - YEAR member of Tennessee State's faculty, Dr. Alma T. Watkins has a rich academic background which includes a bachelor's degree from Ohio State, Master's degree from Columbia, a Ph.D. from Cornell and nearly 1½ years of foreign study in the University of Toulouse, France; the Biblioteca Menendez Y Pelaya of Santander, Spain and the University of Mexico.

Author of "Eroticism in the Novels of Felipe Trigo," in 1954, Dr. Watkins is a frequent contributor of articles and book reviews to several scholastic journals in the language field.

WORLD TRAVELER, Dr. Viginia S. Nyabongo, native of Baltimore, Md., has visited some 26 countries and 46 of the 49 states of the United States. During her travels she has visited some 55 colleges and universities in the U.S. and abroad.

Although the major portion of Dr. Nyabongo's academic training has been in the French language, she has also worked extensively in the fields of student personnel and guidance. She has been a member of Tennessee State's faculty since 1944.

CLEVELAND hometowner Dr. Sarah M. Pereira, 1958 addition to Tennessee State's 225-strong faculty, has also taught at Shaw University, Raleigh, N.C., Miner Teachers College, Washington, D.C., Fenn College, Cleveland, Ohio, Cleveland College of Western Reserve University and West Virginia State.

Phi Beta Kappa of Ohio State University, Dr. Pereira received her A.B. Degree with honors and distinction in French. She was awarded her M.A. in French from Western Reserve and her Ph.D. in Spanish from Ohio State.

One of 18 in the Western Hemisphere to serve on the auxiliary board of the Baha'i World Faith, Dr. Pereira has lectured in numerous cities in the U.S., in several provinces of Canada and in Mexico and Central America.

AWARDED SCHOLARSHIPS

March of Dimes-raised funds provided scholarship awards for Bessanderson Williams, Atlantic City, N.J., for physical therapy courses at Boston University; Charles Releford, Nashville, Tenn., for medical research at Meharry Medical College, and Eva B. Ewing, Denver, Colo., for medical social work at the University of Denver. The new multi-million-dollar scholarship program of The National Foundation will provide scholarships for 505 young people interested in career preparation for nursing, physical therapy, occupational therapy, medicine and medical social work.

Bringing new hope to whole new groups of physically handicapped persons, the "Greater Victories" March of Dimes campaign against polio, arthritis and birth defects gets under way in every county in the nation. The appeal will continue throughout the month, climaxed in most communities by the traditional Mothers' March.

Launching the 1959 March of Dimes campaign, Basil O'Connor, president of The National Foundation, described the challenge of polio, arthritis and birth defects as "The Three Faces of Crippling."

"To meet the challenge of the 'Three Faces of Crippling,' we offer the 'Three Faces of Hope,' patient aid, research and education for the health profession, the same weapons we offered against polio alone," Mr. O'Connor said.

Estimates indicate some 150,000 survivors of paralytic polio might benefit from modern techniques of rehabilitation pioneered by The National Foundation. Some 50,000 are already on its chapter patient aid rolls.

"Arthritis and birth defects are major unmet health problems in our country," Mr. O'Connor said. "At least 11,000,000 are affected by arthritis and rheumatism, the nation's number one crippler, while 250,000 infants are born each year with some form of defect. We believe we can find ways to help many of them if funds are supplied by the American people.

"To meet the new challenge, more than two million volunteers in the 3,100 National Foundation chapters will need to raise $65,000,000 in the 1959 March of Dimes."

MARCH OF DIMES TO SPONSOR 500 NEW HEALTH SCHOLARSHIPS

To cost over $12,000,000 in March of Dimes funds over the next ten years, a new health scholarship program aimed at encouraging capable students in each state and territory to undertake careers that count in the field of health will be launched in 1959 by The National Foundation.

The organization, originally known as The National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis, will provide scholarships for the training of urgently needed physicians, physical therapists, occupational therapists, nurses and medical social workers.

Basic provisions of the new scholarship program are as follows:

A minimum of 505 scholarships will be offered annually.

Awards of $500 a year for four years (total $2,000) will be based on financial need, motivation and scholastic achievement.

Nursing, physical therapy and occupational therapy scholarships will be available to graduating high school students; medical social work scholarships to college sophomores; scholarships in medicine to currently enrolled college juniors and seniors.

Awards will be made available to students who have been accepted for admission to an accredited college or university.

Detailed information and application blanks will be furnished high schools and colleges by The National Foundation's 3,100 chapters

Mrs. Julia M. Williams Listed In 'Who's Who'

The Southwest Missouri Conference branch, Women's Missionary Society, African Methodist Episcopal church, has given a standing ovation to the president, Mrs. Julia M. Williams, for her outstanding achievements as a religious worker.

This action, taken at the recent inspirational meeting, was particularly prompted by the inclusion of a biographical sketch, concerning Mrs. Williams' contributions, in Marquis' "Who's Who of American Women" for 1958. Plans for further honoring the president were approved by the conference branch.

In the field of ecumenical leadership, Mrs. Williams is corresponding secretary of the United Churchwomen of Missouri, second vice-president, board of directors and Christian World and Missions committee member of the United Churchwomen of Greater Kansas City.

From 1956 to 1958, she was second vice-president of the Missouri Council of Churches. In constant demand as a public speaker, this versatile churchwoman is active in several civic and religious groups.

Mrs. Williams is the wife of Dr. John S. Williams, director of the music department at Lincoln high school and pastor of St. John AME church, 1747 Belleview.

It is a singular instance that Dr. Williams was listed in "Who's Who in American Music" in 1951, and further, that one of the Williams' four sons, the Rev. John R. Williams, now pastoring at Grant Chapel AME church, Wichita, Kas., was included in "Who's Who in American Colleges" during his senior year at William Penn college, Oskaloosa, Iowa.

Dr. and Mrs. John S. Williams live at 2638 Brooklyn avenue.

Isabel T. Flipper is conference branch reporter.

Five Top Deltas in Who's Who

WASHINGTON—Four members of the executive board and the executive director of Delta Sigma Theta Sorority are included among the 19,000 persons listed in "Who's Who of American Women."

The officers are: Dr. Jeanne L. Noble, national president; Dr. Sadie T. M. Alexander, Delta's first national president, now honorary president; M. Elizabeth Carnegie, publications and public relations committee chairman; Mrs. Nellie G. Roulhac, personnel committee chairman; and Mrs. Patricia Roberts Harris, executive director.

Dr. Noble is a professor at the City College of New York; and she is author of the book "The Negro Woman's College Education."

A graduate of Howard University and of Teachers College of Columbia University, Dr. Noble is former assistant professor of education of Albany State College, Albany, Ga., and former dean of women of Langston University, Langston, Okla.

Dr. Alexander, in the book, comes from a family of "firsts." In addition to serving as Delta's first national president, she was the first Negro woman awarded a doctor of philosophy degree in the United States and the first Negro woman admitted to law practice in Pennsylvania.

Mrs. M. Elizabeth Carnegie is associate editor of Nursing Outlook. She previously held a similar position with the American Journal of Nursing. Mrs. Carnegie is former assistant director of the Nursing School of Hampton Institute and former dean of Florida Agricultural & Mechanical University's nursing school.

Mrs. Roulhac is former president of Jack and Jill of America, Inc., a club of mothers. She is a former school principal and college instructor.

Mrs Patricia Roberts Harris is a summa cum laude graduate of Howard University. Before her appointment as Delta's executive director she was consecutively program director of the Chicago YWCA and assistant director of the American Council of Human Rights.

Ranking Student Receives Scholarship

Washington—Miss Dolores Betts Danville, Va., junior at Spelman College, Atlanta, Ga., has been awarded the 1958-'59 Washington D. C., Spelman Club scholarship.

According to Mrs. B. R. Brazeal, Spelman College alumni secretary, Miss Betts ranked first in her class of 79. She is an English major. The young co-ed works as college postmistress and, in addition is president of the junior class and her dormitory council.

Miss Betts was recently elected by Spelman students to "Who's Who Among Students in American Universities and Colleges for 1958-'59." She has received tuition scholarships annually.

Dr. Albert E. Manley, president of Spelman, made the scholarship presentation in behalf of the Washington Spelman Alumni group.

3 IN 'WHO'S WHO'

JACKSON, Miss.—Three members of the Jackson State College faculty and staff have been named in "Who's Who of American Women." They are Dr. Jane E. McAllister, professor of education; Miss F. O. Alexander, assistant director of public relations; and Mrs. Margaret W. Alexander, associate professor of language arts.

Four Morehouse Merrill European

The Administrative Committee at Morehouse College has selected four teachers at the college, one faculty couple and two individual teachers, to receive grants for travel in Europe during the summer of 1959. The announcement of this year's selections was made at a recent meeting of the Morehouse faculty. The following were selected: Mr. and Mrs. Wendell P. Whalum, Mrs. Eloise McKinney Johnson and Dr. Julia Y. Lee. Mr. Whalum is instructor in music, Mrs. Johnson is instructor in English, and Dr. Lee is associate professor of French.

The Whalums will be given $2,500, and each of the others will be given $1,250. These travel grants have been awarded to two Morehouse faculty couples per summer for the last six summers, and they were made possible by Charles E. Merrill, Jr., of Boston, Mass., now chairman of the Morehouse Board of Trustees. The grants are given to the end that through travel Morehouse teachers, preferably married couples, will broaden their cultural and intellectual horizons and thus enhance their effectiveness as teachers of colleeg students.

SIX STUDENTS GET AWARDS

Mr. Merrill also makes it possible for Morehouse students to spend a year in travel and study in Europe. Beginning some six years ago with one student, Mr. Merrill has increased the number to six students to receive awards of $3,000 each for his year in Europe. A faculty committee is in process of selecting now six students for the academic year 1959-60. Six were selected last year for the current school year, and five of them are studying in Europe at present, while the sixth is poised to go as soon as some difficulties are cleared up.

These student travel-study grants are made in the hope of providing young Negro students with the experiences necessary to future usefulness in foreign service.

Teachers Get Travel Grants

Awarded Ford Foundation Grant

Dr. Eddie V. Easley, assistant professor of business administration at Drake university, has been awarded a grant by the Ford Foundation to attend a month-long faculty seminar in business administration next August.

DR. EASLEY

Dr. Easley joined the Drake faculty in September 1957 and teaches classes in marketing and statistics. The seminar is offered by the University of Chicago School of Business and at Williamstown College, in Williamstown, Mass.

MISS MARY EARLY

Miss Mary Early Named John Hope Teacher Of The Year By Faculty

Miss Mary Frances Early was named Teacher of the Year by the faculty of John Hope Elementary School.

Miss Early has the responsibility of being a fifth grade teacher, and has taken the time to organize one of the best bands in the elementary schools in the South; she has developed a band of nearly fifty pieces in two years that has won the hearts of music lovers of Atlanta. Working with the band has not cut down on the efficiency of her classroom responsibility. Several of her pupils made the school's honor roll.

Miss Early was the valedictorian of her elementary school class, E. P. Johnson, the valedictorian of Turner High School and one of the few students who have made straight A's at Clark College, making her the valedictorian of her class of '57.

Miss Early is a member of Mt. Vernon Baptist Church. She is in charge of the youth work in her church and has done outstanding work in her community, a very young person and belongs to the AKA Sorority.

The faculty of John Hope School 'Salutes You."

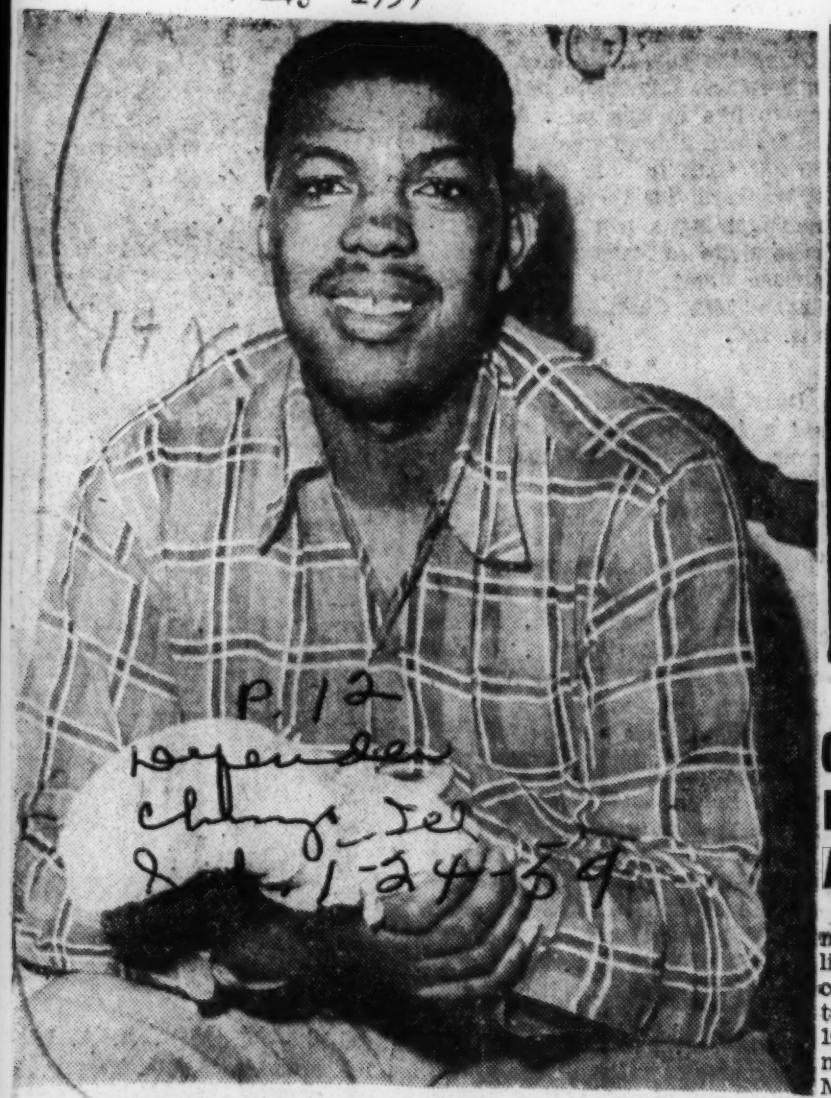
RECEIVES GRANT — Attorney Charles S. Conley, associate professor of law, college of law, Florida A&M University, was the recipient of a grant from New York University to participate in the NYU School of Law Workshop on Evidence this summer. Mr. Conley received his bachelor of law degree from NYU. Atty. Conley is a member of the New York Bar Association.—(A&M Staff Cpl. Leander Calhoun).

'Little Rock five' chosen for honor

NEW YORK — The remaining five of the original "'little Rock nine" have been selected to receive the 1959 Florina Lasker Award at the annual luncheon of the New York Civil Liberties Union on Lincoln's birthday.

Miss Elizabeth Eckford and Jefferson Thomas will accept the $1,000 award on behalf of all five. The three others Central High School pupils are Misses Thelma Mothershed, Melba Pattillo and Carlotta Walls.

The award, named for the late chairman of the New York Civil Liberties Committee, is given annually to the individual or group displaying "consistent and outstanding courage and integrity in the defense of civil liberties."



SAVED FIVE — Nelson Kendall, who saved five young children from burning to death when their home at 1572 Wilson st., was destroyed by fire last week, was burned and barely escaped with his life after a vain atempt to rescue six-year-old Donell Hancock. A senior at Hamilton High school, the 19-year-old student had just completed his homework and was watching a late TV show when the fire started. Nothing was saved by the family in personal property.

DR. STELLA B. BROOKES

Clark's Dr. Brooks In Who' Who For American Women

Dr. Stella Brewer Brooks, Chairman of the Department of English, Clark College, author, and contributor to Encyclopedia Britannica, is included among the 19,000 prominent American women listed in the first edition of Marquis "Who's Who of American Women" recently released.

She is graduate of Wiley College, holds a Master of Arts of the University of Michigan, and a Doctor of Philosophy of Cornell University where she was elected to membership in Phi Delta Gamma and Pi Lambda Theta.

A native of Austin, Texas, she is the daughter of Mr. J. H. Brewer and the late Minnie Tate Brewer. Her late husband, E. Luther Brooks, was for twenty-one years, Director of the Science Department and Professor of chemistry at Clark College.

Dr. Brooks has previously been listed in Who's Who in American Education, Who's Who in the South and Southwest, Who's Who in Methodism, Who's Who in Colored America and the Directory of Scholars.

Jackie Hero In New York Hotel Blaze

NEW YORK — The Jackie Robinsons are being credited with having saved the lives of a white couple from Texas during a fire at the Belmont-Plaza Hotel.

The Mr. and Mrs. Robinsons had barely settled down in their room for the night when Jackie smelled smoke and called the desk to give the alarm.

Commenting on the fire, Jackie said, "It must have been only a couple of minutes, but it seemed like an eternity before the firemen came. We could hear the people next door trying to get out. The smoke was so thick they couldn't find the door. They started banging on the door between our rooms.

"My wife and I shouted to them-trying to get them to unlock the door leading to the corridor, but I guess they were too excited."

FIREMEN EVENTUALLY reached the floor and led Kenneth Brown, 50, and his wife Juanita, 40, to safety. They were treated at Beth David Hospital for smoke poisoning and minor burns.

The Robinsons were spending the night in town after a late engagement. They live in Stamford, Conn.

JSC Instructors Named In Who's Who Among American Women

Three Jackson State College instructors have been named to "Who's Who Of American Women," a recent publication by A. N. Marquis, publisher of "Who's Who In America." Named to the volume which was released early in January were Dr. Jane E. McAllister, Professor of Education; Miss F. O. Alexander, Assistant Director of Extension and Public Relations; and Mrs. Margaret W. Alexander, Associate Professor of Language Arts. Mrs. Alexander, a native of Birmingham, Ala., received her early eductaion in the Birmingham Public Schools and schools sponsored by the Methodist Church in Meridian, Miss., and New Orleans, La. She is a graduate of Northwestern University and of the State University of Iowa. Her volume of poetry, "For My People," published by the Yale University Press, won the Yale Award for Younger Poets. She has studied under Rosenwald and Ford Foundation Fellowships. Her poetry has appeared in a number of magazines and anthologies. The Ford Foundation grant was for the 1953-54 academic year and was granted for the purpose of completing a Civil War novel, and study at Yale. Mrs. Alexander was an instructor at Livingstone College and West Virginia State College before joining the Jackson State College faculty in 1948.

Miss Florence Alexander graduated from high school at Jackson College. She received the B.S. degree at Hampton Institute, the A.B. degree from Hunter College, and the M.A. degree from Columbia University. She has also studied at the University of Cincinnati. A former employee of the college, she was retired recently by the State Department of Education after serving as State Jeanes Supervisor for a period of 25 years. Miss Alexander is a former president of the Mississippi Federated Clubs, the Mississippi Teachers Association, a former trustee of Jackson State College, presently a trustee of Okolona College, and is chairman of the Scholarship Committee of the National Baptist Convention.

Dr. Jane McAllister, a native of Vicksburg, was appointed to the College faculty in 1951. A graduate of Talladega College, she continued her education at Columbia University where she became the first Negro woman in history to earn a Ph.D. degree in Education from a standard university. During the early days of the State's administration, Dr. McAllister aided in the reorganization of the curriculum. Spelman Teacher Awarded Science Foundation Grant

Mrs. Georgia Caldwell Smith, associate professor of mathematics at Spelman College, has recently been notified of her designation as a National Science Foundation fellowship has granted to enable Mrs. Smith to carry out a 12-month Faculty Fellow for 1959-1960. The program of study, June 1959 to June, 1960, toward the Ph. D. degree in mathematics at the University of Pittsburgh. It carries a stipend which approximately salary for that period of time.

Mrs. Smith completed her undergraduate work at the University of Kansas where she received the A. B. degree in mathematics with election to Phi Beta Kappa and Pi Mu Epsilon. She also received her M. A. degree in mathematics from the University of Kansas before coming to Spelman College, her first teaching position. Subsequently, she studied toward the doctor's degree at the University of Chicago on a fellowship grant from the General Education Board, and more recently participated in the Institute for Teachers of College Mathematics sponsored by the National Science Foundation at the University of Kansas during the summer of 1957.

After studying at the University of Chicago, Mrs. Smith taught at Lincoln University, Mo., and the Alabama State College, Montgomery, before returning to the Spelman College faculty in 1945.

Mrs. Smith's memberships in professional organizations include: The American Mathematical Society, The Mathematical Association of America, and The National Council of Teachers of Mathematics.

Mrs. Smith is the wife of Dr. Barnett F. Smith, professor of biology at Spelman College, and the mother of Barnett F. Smith, Jr. Morehouse College student.

The Rhodes Scholars

Thirty-two students have been formally named as recipients of Rhodes scholarships.

The scholarships are named after the British statesman, Cecil John Rhodes and provide for two years of study at Oxford University in England.

The announcement of the new appointees was made by the Rhodes Committee.

The committee, which meets at Swarthmore College in Pennsylvania, chose seven Southerners, five from West Point and Harvard University, three from Princeton and two each from Amherst, Occidental and the University of the South.

None of the selectees was colored.

In the past 51 years only one colored student—Dr. Alain Locke, who was a Rhodes scholar from 1907-10, has been given the honor.

The Rhodes Committee reveals that its nominees are chosen on the basis of character, leadership and physical vigor.

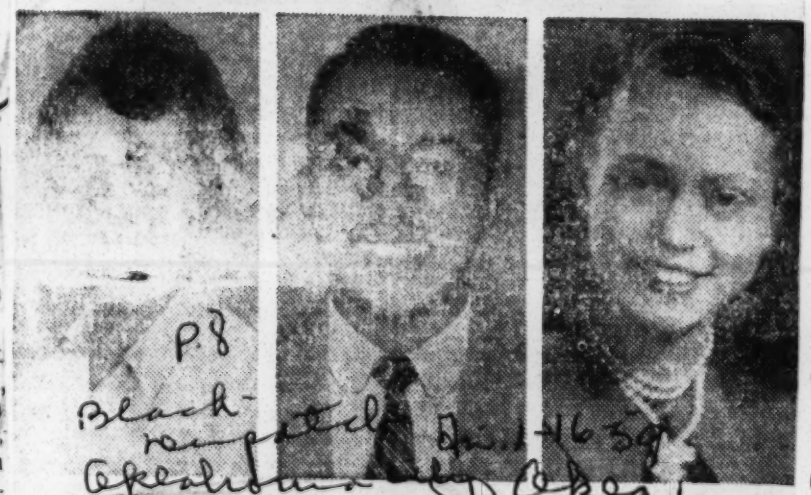
We don't like to suggest that the committee's selections since the first decade of this century have been motivated by racial considerations.

But it does seem more than incredible to us that in 50 years there has not been one out of the thousands of colored students who have passed through college, who could meet the requirements of physical vigor, leadership and character.

WINNERS OF SCHOLARSHIPS

Your March of Dimes support provided scholarships won by Joseph Bailey, Nashville, Tenn., for medical research at Meharry Medical College; Faye H. Crawford, Gonzales, Tex., for scientific study at University of California; and Lavanier Henderson, Houston, Tex., for scientific study at University of Minnesota. Funds raised in the March of Dimes have provided more than 7,000 disease fighters.

TRAINING FOR SERVICE



Aided by scholarships awarded from March of Dimes funds, Johnetta Jones, Roxbury, Mass., who is studying physical therapy at Boston University; Edgar E. Smith, Gary, Ind., enrolled in scientific courses at Purdue University; and Mrs. Elizabeth Goolsby, Atlanta, Ga., a science student at Radcliffe College, are training for service. The recently launched health scholarship program of The National Foundation will cost $12,000,000 in ten years and will train 5,500 more students for service. Join the March of Dimes, Jan. 2-31.

Negro Leads Mixed Class

HARTSHORNE, Okla.—Sallye Phillips, a Negro student of Hartshorne High School which was integrated three years ago, will be class valedictorian.

Miss Phillips had a straight A record. She attended the previously all-Negro Phyllis Wheatly High School through her sophomore year.

Five From Little Rock Get Awards

NEW YORK — (UPI) — Five Negro high school students who remained in Little Rock, ready to re-enter Central High school in case it were re-opened, were honored by the New York Civil Liberties Union.

The students were named recipients of the 1959 Florina Lasker Civil Liberties award of $1,000.

The students are Elizabeth Eckford, Thelma Mothershed, Melba Pattillo, Carlotta Walls and Jefferson Thomas.

The five students were part of the original group of nine Negroes who were admitted to Central High in 1957 as a result of the Supreme Court's decision banning segregation in public schools. After one year of integration, however, the school was closed, along with three others in the city, by Gov. Orval Faubus, to prevent continued integration.

The NYCLU pointed out that of the original nine Negro students, one had graduated in June, 1958, and three others had accepted scholarships to enter schools in other states.

But, the NYCLU said that if the other five had not remained in Little Rock, ready to enter Central if it were re-opened, there would have been no Negro students qualified to enroll immediately.

The NYCLU said the five students showed "courage and dignity in the face of prejudice and humiliation."

Juilliard Award To Earl Grant

HOLLYWOOD — Earl Grant was awarded one of the highest honors ever given to an alumnus of New York's Juilliard School of Music. The presentation was made at the Holman Methodist Church, Los Angeles, by Dr. White, who commented that whereas other graduates have received awards for education, and in some cases for entertainment. no noe has ever received a triple award for religion, education and entertainment.

Negro Girl Is Valedictorian

HARTSHORNE, Okla. (AP) — Sallye Phillips, a [illegible] of Hartshorne High School which was integrated three years ago, will be the class valedictorian.

Miss Phillips had a straight A record. She attended the previously all Negro Phyllis Wheatley High School through her sophomore year.

Carey Gets Wilson Award

Princeton, N. J. — Climaxing an intensive nation-wide talent hunt for future college teachers, the Woodrow Wilson National Fellowship Foundation today named Norman C. Carey, a senior from Miami, Florida A&M University, as one of the 1,200 superior American and Canadian students to receive a Woodrow Wilson Fellowship.

Carey plans to pursue graduate work in political science at Ohio State University. Ronald Bailey and Ethel Edmonds Payne, 1958 graduates of Florida A&M are doing graduate work at the University of Illinois and Michigan State University respectively on the Wilson Fellowships.

Going directly to the heart of education's most urgent problem — the critical shortage of qualified teachers — the Woodrow Wilson Fellowship program recruits and supports promising scholars for their first year of graduate study. The project is backed by a $25 million grant from the Ford Foundation.

74 African Students Get $42,000 Grant

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Grants totaling more than $42,000 have been awarded by the African-American Institute to 74 African students for study in American universities for the academic year 1959-60, the institute announced.

Selection was made by the scholarship committee of the institute's board of trustees. Aid to students is one of the several programs through which the African-American Institute, a private, non-profit, non-political organization, seeks to develop better understanding between the peoples of Africa and the United States.

The students, all presently enrolled in American universities, were selected on the basis of their academic records, the program of study and the recommendation of their teachers.

African Students Awarded $42,000 In 1959 Grants

WASHINGTON, D. C. — Grants totaling more than $42,000 have been awarded by the African-American Institute to 74 African students for study in American universities for the academic year 1959-60, the Institute announced.

Selection was made by the scholar ship committee of the Institute's Board of Trustees. Aid to students is one of several programs through which the African-American Institute, a private, non-profit, non-political organization, seeks to develop better understanding between the peoples of Africa and the United States.

The students, all presently enrolled in American universities, were selected on the basis of their academic records, the proposed program of study and the recommendation of their teachers.

While the total grants this year double the amount given by the Institute for scholarship aid last year, it is far short of the needs among the estimated 1500 African students now studying in American universities.

Of the 74 grantees, 33 are graduates students and 41 undergraduate. Their programs of study include vintually every academic field but the largest group - totaling 31 - is studying science.

The grants, according to country, are as follows: Ghana, 13; Ethiopia, 1; Kenya, 20; Liberia, 1; Mozambique, 1; Nigeria, 23; Sierra Lone, 4; Tanganyika, 1; Uganda, 5; Togoland, 2; Nyasaland, 1; Northern Rhodesia, 1; and the Union of South Africa.1.

Awarded Scholarships To Attend Hampton By Danforth Foundation

GREENSBORO, N. C.—A grant of $25,000 from Danforth Foundation of St. Louis, Mo., to Bennett College, to be used for strengthening certain strategic areas of its program was announced by President Willa B. Player this week.

Funds will be used to strengthen the library, to strengthen faculty preparation by implementing the work in personal growth services, to provide consultant services in the core program in general education and to provide a limited number of grants-in-aid for summer study and travel.

In announding the grant, President Player said:

"This grant will be of significant help to the college in enriching and implementing the educational experiences in the liberal arts for the young women whom we serve. In a time of spiralling costs it is encouraging to have this type of foundation assistance with the educational programs in our colleges. In the future we hope for increased interest and support from such sources."

A closer working with high school principals and teachers by means of visitations and workshops looking forward toward unifying te educational growth of students by bridging some of the gaps between high school and college has already been embarked upon. In addition, core programs for freshman students in the areas of communicaton, social science and general education and for sophomores in human development, religion and philosphy and the humanities are being offerd.

Bennet College is one of six liberal arts colleges to receive such grants, according to Dr Kenneth I. Brown, executive director.

FELLOW OF THE AMERICAN ACADEMY OF ARTS AND SCIENCES

Elect Howard Thurman To American Academy

Defender Chicago, Ill. Sat. 6-13-59

Dean Howard Thurman of Boston University's March Chapel, elected by LIFE magazine several years ago as one of the 12 leading clergymen in America, has been elected a fellow of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences. He was one of three elected to Class IV (Humanities), Section I (Philosophy and Theology) at a spring meeting of the Academy in Brookline, Mass.

Dr. Thurman has been recognized internationally as a pioneer, mystic, scholar, poet and author. He came to Boston university in 1953 to create an interracial, interdenominational religious center for community and campus. He is also a professor of spiritual resources and disciplines at the University's School of Theology.

Before coming to the university he was also minister of the Church for the Fellowship of All Peoples in San Francisco.

Dr. Thurman received his A. B. from Morehouse College, Atlanta, 1923; B.D. from Colgate-Rochester Divinity School, 1926; attended the graduate school of Oberlin School of Theology, Oberlin, Ohio, 1926-28; and was a special student in philosophy at Haverford College.

Divided into "classes" and "sections" solely to ensure among its Fellows a numerical balance of representatives of the many subdivisions of the broad field of intellectual endeavor, the American Academy functions as a single, inclusive body.

It has a continuing responsibility "to advance the interest, honor, dignity, and happiness of a free, independent, and virtuous people."

Lasker Tradition Lives; 2 Get Grants

In the tradition conceived and established by the late social worker, Florina Lasker, two outstanding senior students, one from Hampton Institute, Va., and the other from Tuskegee Institute, Ala., have been named winners of the 1959 Florina Lasker Fellowships.

Recipients are Jacqueline Quinn, Tuskegee, and Shirley Ann Johnson, Hampton. Each will receive between $1,000 and $2,000 to finance a year of graduate study.

Miss Johnson has chosen Columbia university, New York city, for advanced studies in social work and Miss Quinn has selected Smith college, Northampton, Mass., for advanced work in physical education.

AID NEGRO WOMEN

The fellowship were established in 1949 by the trustees of the late Florina Lasker's estate to "aid the education of Negro women." Candidates are chosen from among senior women students of the 32 member colleges of the United Negro College Fund. Each student is free to choose her own field of study and select any suitable university for her graduate work.

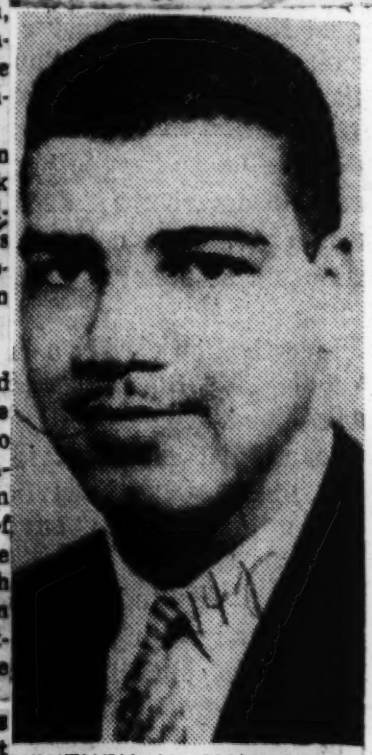
At Hampton, Miss Johnson has not only been an honor student but has participated in many college activities. She is president of Alpha Kappa Mu Honor Society, and secretary of the Pan Hellenic and Student Councils. And was born in Fredericksburg, Va.

Born in Sturgis, Miss., Miss Quinn spent most of her childhood in Alabama and Mississippi and was graduated at the head of her high school class. At Tuskegee she has been an Institute Scholar for three years.

During 1958-59, she was granted a full-tuition scholarship by Delta Sigma Theta Sorority. She is a member of Alpha Kappa Mu Honor Society, and was recently named in "Who's Who in American Colleges and Universities."

She is the daughter of Thomas L. Quinn, a teacher in the Sturgis, Miss., school system.

Miss Lasker was a social worker who was active in many philanthropic organizations. She served as a sponsor of the UNCF Women's Division before her death in 1949. The $25,000 trust fund from which the Fellowships are awarded is administered by the United Negro College Fund.



WHITNEY M. YOUNG JR., dean of the Atlanta University School of Social Work, Atlanta, Ga., has been named recipient of the 1959 Florina Lasker Award for outstanding contributions to social welfare. The Scroll and $1,000 were presented to him at a dinner meeting held recently at the Whitcomb Hotel in San Francisco during the National Conference on Social Welfare.

Atlantan gets Lasker award

NEW YORK — Dean Whitney M. Young Jr. of the Atlanta University School of Social Work received the 1959 Florina Lasker Award Thursday night for outstanding welfare accomplishments.

The award of $1,000 and a scroll was made at a dinner meeting at Whitcomb Hotel, sponsored by the Council on Social Work Education.

Born in Kentucky in 1921, Mr. Young, studied at Kentucky State College, Massachusetts Institute of Technology and the University of Minnesota, receiving a master's degree at the latter in 1947.

Before his appointment as dean of the Atlanta graduate school in 1954, he served as executive secretary of the Urban League in Omaha, Neb. Mr. Young, 38, is the youngest person to receive the award.

FORD FOUNDATION

Award 181 Ford Study Fellowships

NEW YORK — The Ford Foundation yesterday announced 181 fellowship awards for scholarly training related to Asia, the Near East, Soviet Union, Eastern Europe, and Africa.

The fellowships are part of the Foundation's program to improve American understanding and competence in foreign and international affairs, particularly in areas where knowledge and trained personnel are scarce.

These awards are for the 1959-60 academic year and are the eighth annual series granted by the Foundation since 1952. Stipends, which cover maintenance, tuition, and travel costs, range from $3,000 to $10,000 on a yearly basis, depending upon individual need, number of dependents, and whether the fellow's work is to be conducted in the U. S. or abroad.

Applications for the 1960-61 academic year will be accepted until Nov. 1, 1959.

The fellowships are awarded to graduate students, scholars who already have received doctorates, college seniors planning to enter business or other non-academic careers, and persons of demonstrated ability in such fields as journalism and government.

Fellows in the series announced Tuesday come from 27 states, the District of Columbia, Hawaii, and Canada, and from 33 colleges and universities.

Application forms and information about the 1960-61 fellowships may be obtained from: The Secretary, Ford Foundation, Foreign Area Training Fellowships, 477 Madison ave., New York 22, N. Y.

Fulbright Scholar Brisbane, Family Return To Atlanta

By WILLIAM A. FOWLKES

Indian students are generally more interested in civic things and politics than their American counterparts, an Atlanta professor who taught in Asia under the Fulbright exchange program declared Friday.

He was Dr. Robert Brisbane, who returns to his post of professor of political science at Morehouse College, following a year's leave.

Dr. Brisbane, his wife, Kathryn, and daughter, Phillippa, 12, returned home August 8, following a delightful trip by freighter from Culcutta, India. He said his return trip was much more interesting than the flying jaunt by way of London to Patna, Bihar, in North Central India, a year ago. The latter journey allowed them to see the inside of many ports where the freighter docked, and to participate in all ship activity including navigation.

Despite some strides, India is still struggling under the caste system, Dr. Brisbane noted, particularly in the more rural areas. Women collegians also have a segregated role in class rooms, it was stated, there being only a few, percentagewise, receiving higher training.

Dr. Brisbane taught American Government and Modern European Government in Patna University. The locale of the school was some 100 miles south of the loft and colorful Himlayan Mountains. Following the regular term of instruction the U. S. State Department, under which the Fulbright Scholarship Exchange program is administered, Dr. Brisbane conducted a seminar in American Civilization.

WATCH AMERICA

"Indians are tremendously interested in the American Negro problem," the Morehouse professor noted. "They regard themselves as colored people and regard as a weak point in American civilization the failure to solve the race program. Little Rock, Charles Mack Parker (Louisiana lynching victim) and Gov. Almond, of Virginia, are well known to them. The newspapers play up the American race incidents."

One of the greatest current problems facing Indian rulers is that of Kerala, the communist state in the southeastern part of the subcontinent. This state, Dr. Brisbane revealed, has the highest literacy rate of India's 14 states, which have a similar number of languages and the ever existent religious problems. The Congress Party, headed by Prime Minister Nehru, is aware of Communist moves to make this a model state, with a view of increasing their legislative and social minority in other areas, the professor declared.

Dr. Brisbane had the opportunity to talk at length with Premier Nehru and was fortunate to meet and confer with Sen. Fulbright, of Arkansas, author of the exchange program undr which he worked, during a visit by the latter to India.

Mrs. Brisbane, who was a social worker in Atlanta before accompanying her husband to India, did volunteer social work while overseas. Phillippa was enrolled in school and is ready for the sixth grade this fall.

TEACHERS TO GO BACK TO SCHOOL

Refresher Course Is Set for This Summer

By MEL OPOTOWSKY

NEW YORK (UPI) — A small group of high school teachers will go back to college this summer to recharge their intellectual batteries as part of the start of a plan to step up the quality of the nation's public schools.

The teachers and a few high school administrators will attend a four-week summer session at Williams college, Williamstown, Mass., under the sponsorship of the John Hay Fellows program.

They will live on the campus, with paid expenses, and study under experts in history, art, music and literature. Their study will specialize in their teaching field, but they will get tastes of the other subjects as well.

The Hay program, headed by Dr. Charles Keller, was started with a grant from the Ford Foundation. It will begin with only 40 public high school teachers and administrators, but Keller hopes it will catch fire.

REAL NEED

"We hope other foundations, communities and colleges start similar programs," Keller said. "There's a real need for this kind of thing. It refreshes the teachers, rewards them and makes teaching a real profession.

"That way, we'll get better teachers, and the better teachers will be able to put their talent to better use."

Keller pointed out that the government - sponsored National Science Foundation has been holding summer science courses for high school teachers for several years. But, he said, this is the first program that covers the humanities, a major portion of the public high school curriculum.

The Hay program has been awarding fellowships to public high school teachers on a year's leave of absence for several years, but not many schools were willing to let their top teachers skip school for that long.

CITES EXAMPLES

Keller said the teachers and administrators who will attend the Williams conference will be picked from school systems that have shown quality and progress. He cited such widely separated examples as Rochester, N. Y., Omaha, Neb., Seattle, Wash., and Atlanta, Ga., as top performers in the nation.

"We've been working on improving the schools in this country long before Sputnik came along," Keller said. "We've had the advance placement program for the students, and now we have this step for the teachers."

"You know, in my lifetime, the population of the country has gone up two and a half times, but the secondary school population has jumped 12 times," Keller said.

"Without voting, Americans have decided that just about everybody should get a high school education. Now we have the problem of making it a quality as well as a quantity job."

JOHN HAY WHITNEY FOUNDATION
OPPORTUNITY FELLOWSHIPS

Win Grants For Advanced Work

Defender Sat 6-27-59

In the ten years of its Opportunity Fellowship program, the John Hay Whitney Foundation has awarded 500 Fellowships. This year, 52 have gone to young Americans of outstanding ability in 23 states, the District of Columbia, American Samoa, the Virgin Islands and Puerto Rico.

Included among this year's winners are Negroes, Spanish-Americans, American Indians, Puerto Ricans, residents of the Appalachian Mountain area and of the Territories. They will commence or continue their training in the arts and sciences in 24 American colleges and universities. Five will study privately, and eight will travel to Europe, Africa or the Caribbean area.

The Opportunity Fellowship program was conceived to further the careers of promising young Americans who because of racial, cultural and other artificial barriers might be prevented from realizing their full development and making their fullest contribution to society.

OUTSTANDING FORMER FELLOWS

Former fellows who have returned to their communities to apply the fruits of their learning are Peter Tali Coleman, governor of American Samoa; Thomas M. C. Chang, director of the Program for Gifted Children of the Department of Public Instruction, Hawaii; I. L. G. Iriarte, chief of Epidemiology, Vital Statistics and Medical Record Section, Guam.

Other former fellows are Mattiwilda Dobbs of the Metropolitan Opera company; Tetsuo Ochikubo, recent exhibitor for the second time at the Krasner Galleries in New York and winner of a Guggenheim Fellowship; and Frank London Brown, author of "Trumbull Park."

Applications for next year's awards should be submitted to the John Hay Whitney Foundation, 630 Fifth ave., New York 20, N. Y., no later than November 30.

1959 FELLOWS

Among this year's fellows are: Mrs. Margaret Danner, of 8847 Wabash ave., Chicago, to spend a year of travel, research and creative writing; and Miss Edna C. Williams, 7406 South Rhodes ave., Chicago, Illinois, graduate of Roosevelt university, Chicago, to spend a year abroad in vocal training.

Miss Debria M. Brown, New Orleans, La., graduate of Xavier university, New Orleans, to spend a year in vocal and operatic study.

Howard P. Rawlings, Baltimore, Md., graduate of Morgan State college, to continue for the Ph. D. degree in mathematics at the University of Wisconsin.

Miss Nancy C. Curtis, Detroit, graduate of Fisk university to continue her graduate training in education under the Harvard-Radcliffe program.

Joe J. Cramer Jr., Houston, Tex., graduate of Southern university, to begin graduate study in business administration at the University of Indiana; George Neely, Jr., Houston, Tex., graduate of Texas Southern university to begin the Ph. D. program in physics at the University of Texas.

Dr. Charles A. Clark, of Belhaven, N. C. graduate of Hampton Institute, Ohio State university, and the Howard university school of dentistry, to complete the master's degree in oral surgery at the University of Pittsburgh.

Melvin B. Tolson, Jr., of Langston, Okla., graduate of Wiley college and Oklahoma State university, to continue studies toward the Ph. D. in romance languages at the University of Oklahoma.

Mrs. Jean Page Gilbert, of 835 Madison ave., N. W., Roanoke, Va., graduate of Bluefield State college, Bluefield, W. Va., and the University of Buffalo, to complete the doctor of education degree at the latter institution; 2nd Miss Alice R. Manicur, of Banner, Va., graduate of Berea college, to complete the Ph. D. degree in education at the University of Indiana.

Miss Marilyn A. Francis, of St. Thomas, Virgin Islands, graduate of Spelman college, Atlanta, Ga., to begin graduate study in the field of history at Columbia university.

Mrs. Jacquelyne J. Clarke, of Tuskegee Institute, graduate of the University of Wisconsin, to complete the Ph. D. degree in sociology at the Ohio State university; and Tobe Johnson, Birmingham, Ala., graduate of Morehouse college, Atlanta to complete the Ph. D. degree in political science at Columbia university.

Jean P. Gilbert Receives Opportunity Fellowship

Journal & Guide Norfolk, Va.

HAMPTON, Va. — A member of the Hampton Institute staff — Jean Page Gilbert — has been named as recipient of an Opportunity Fellowship from the John Hay Whitney Foundation in New York City.

Miss Gilbert, who has acted as director of testing at the college since 1956, was granted the fellowship in order to complete her study for the Dcotor of Education degree at the University of Buffalo. A one-year leave which has been granted by the college, will enable Miss Gilbert's work at Buffalo to begin with the present summer session there. It will continue through the whole of the 1959-60 academic year.

In a report made by the foundation and identifying the 32 Negroes to obtain a fellowship for 1959, Miss Gilbert is cited as having "her major interest directed toward the improvement of guidance and personnel services for high school and college youth," and toward "the identification of superior academic talent."

Earlier in the year, Miss Gilbert served as resource consultant in Hampton Institute's contributory roles to the Virginia Teachers Association's "Drive-In Workshop" and spot check student testing programs. She spoke at and counseled teachers who motored to "Drive-In" points throughout the state from areas up to 50 miles away, to take part in afternoon or evening workshops in connection with the association's first program.

Negroes Win Opportunity Fellowships

Black Dispatch Oklahoma City, Okla. 6-26-59

Thirty-two Negroes have been awarded Opportunity Fellowships for 1959, the John Hay Whitney Foundation announced today. This year the Foundation has awarded fellowships to fifty-two persons in 23 states, District of Columbia, American Samoa, the Virgin Islands and Puerto Rico. These awards are granted to young men and women who show exceptional promise and who have been prevented by race, cultural background, or region of residence from fully developing their potentialities.

In the ten years the program has been in operation, awards have been made to 224 Negroes. Among the '59 winners are:

Mr. Donald E. Barrett, of 2237 Emporia street, Muskogee, Okla., graduate of Oberlin college and College of the Pacific, to continue work toward the degree of Doctor of Musical Arts at the Eastman School of Music, Rochester, New York. Presently instructor of music at Virginia State college and chairman of piano, Mr. Barrett will concentrate on performance and pedagogy during his advanced program. He is a member of the National Association of Music Teachers, Pi Kappa Lambda, national music honorary society, and an accomplished pianist.

Mr. Melvin B. Tolson jr., of Langston, Okla., graduate of Wiley college and Oklahoma State university, to continue studies toward the Ph. D. in Romance languages at the University of Oklahoma. Following the Master's degree in French at Oklahoma State in 1950, Mr. Tolson joined the Department of Foreign Languages of Prairie View A&M college, Texas. In 1956, he received a Fullbright fellowship to the Sorbonne in Paris. With the completion of the doctorate, he will return to the teaching profession.

Upon completion of their studies, many of the award winners will return to their communities and with their new knowledge and experience work toward the betterment of local economic, educational and social standards.

Graduate Study

Rodney Albert, chemistry instructor at Voorhees Junior College, Denmark, S. C., will attend the summer institute for teachers of college chemistry at Michigan State University in East Lansing.

The institute is being sponsored by the National Science Foundation to encourage college teachers to work toward the doctorate degree.

Mr. Albert is a native of Hartsville, S. C. He did undergraduate work at New York University and at S. C. State College, where he received his B. S. degree. He has also done graduate study at New York University. Mr. Albert is married and the father of two children.

GETS AWARD

Dona Lea Robey Is Winner Of Science Award

HOUSTON— A Spring graduate of Jack Yates Senior High School, 16-year-old Dona Leah Robey, is the recipient of a National Foundation Science Award.

Miss Robey won the scholarship for making a high score on the National Science and Mathematics examination. She will attend Bennett College in Greensboro, North Carolina.

ne 22 through July 31. Miss Robey was a student of Mrs L. E. Wilson for four years, and she asserted that she owes much of her recent success to Mrs Wilson, whom she thinks is a highly dedicated teacher.

The recipient is the daughter of the prominent Mr and Mrs Don D. Robey. Mrs Robey is a teacher and Mr Robey is a well-known businessman. Dona Leah's many achievements also include drama and speech awards, perfect attendance awards. She was co-winner of the district and state competitions at Prairie View, and was named the "Most Beautiful Girl" of 1959 on the Yates campus. The personable Dona Leah, is the neice of Mrs Ella R. Holliday, a teacher at Blackshear Elementary School.

MRS. DORIS M. COOK

AWARDED SCIENCE GRANT: Mrs. Doris Montgomery Cook, a 1957 Miles College graduate, has received a $3000 National Science Foundation Grant to study Biology at the graduate level of Atlanta (Ga.) University. The aid-to-education grant will cover tuition fees transportation and a stipend for living expenses.

Mrs. Cook is a teacher of science at A. H. Parker High School. She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. E. P Montgomery of 1813 27th Ave. So. Homewood. She is the wife of Ralph Cook, and they live at 124 Sixth Ave.. S. W.

Local Teacher Attends Yale University

H. M. Thompson, an alumnus of Tougaloo Southern Christian College, Tougaloo, Miss., has been awarded a National Science Foundation Fellowship to do further study in mathematics and science at Yale University this summer, beginning June 22.

In 1957 he earned the Master of Science degree from Atlanta University under a Shell Merit Fellowship. Active in many religious, social, civic and educational activities, Mr. Thompson is president of the Jackson-Tougaloo Alumni Club.

His wife, Mrs. Cleopatra Davenport Thompson, is a member of the faculty of Tougaloo Southern Christian College. They have two children, a son, Henry McFarland, who is attending Lanier High School and a daughter, Mary Elizabeth, who is studying for the master's degree in English at the University of Denver.

JONATHAN McPHERSON

Jonathan McPherson, former Birmingham World reporter and presently Associate Professor of Chemistry at Miles College has been awarded a National Science Foundation Grant to attend the Conference for College Teachers Recent Development in Chemical Bonding, from July 6 to July 18, 1959 at Tufts University in Medford, Massachusetts.

He has also been awarded an NSF grant to attend the Sixth Chemistry Institute, Rocky Mountain Session to be held at Montana State College in Bozeman, Montana from July 20 to August 21. The latter will include tours of the National Reactor Testing Site, atomic energy near Idaho Falls, Idaho and a tour of the copper mining and smelting operations of the Anaconda Company in Butte and Anaconda, Montana. He is a 1952 graddate of the Fairfield Industrial High School.

Local Teachers Attend Project In Research

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Mrs. Amelia Jarrett, 633 S. Ripley St. and Mrs. Bernice Thompson, 550 South St., both of Montgomery, Ala., are among the 22 high school instructors from seven states and the District of Columbia who are participating in scientific research projects in biology chemistry and physics at Howard University this week through Aug. 14.

They are enrolled in an eight-week, all expense paid Research Participation Program, established by a grant from the National Science Foundation. Dr. Lloyd N. Ferguson, profesor and head of the Department of Chemistry, is director of the program.

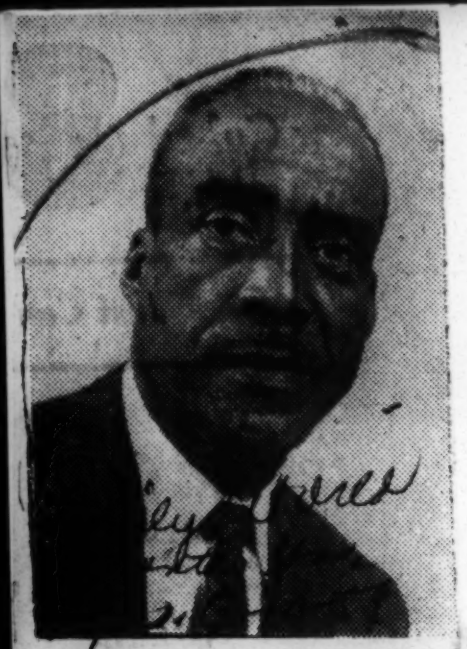
Their enrollment has increased to atotal of 67 the number of high school teachers who are engaged in special studies at Howard this summer under programs endowed by the NSF and the US Atomic Energy Commission.

Gets Award

A SENIOR AT JACK YATES High School is sixteen-year-old Carol E Reed, recipient of a National Science Foundation Scholarship.

Miss Reed won the scholarship upon recommendation of her high school science teacher, Mrs L E Wilson, and for her scholastic achievement.

One of thirty students in the Southwest receiving such awards, she is now attending a special summer chemistry program at the University of Texas at Austin.



DR. ARTIS P. GRAVES IN POST-DOCTORAL STUDY — Dr. Artis P. Graves, chairman of the Biology Department at A. and T. College, has been granted a Science ~~Faculty Fellowship by~~ the National Science Foundation for post-doctoral research work in experimental embryology.

He will study at the University of Iowa under faculty status granted by the institution from which he holds the M.S. and Ph.D. degrees. He has been granted a nine months leave by A. and T.

Prior to coming to A. and T. in 1950, Dr. Graves had been head football coach at Morristown College for four years and at Morris Brown College for 13 years.

By Toki Schalk Johns

MRS. GEORGIA CALDWELL SMITH, a charming young woman, whose honors are legion, has been made a National Science Foundation Faculty Fellow for 1959-'60. She will carry out a 12-month program of study toward the Ph.D. degree in mathematics at the University of Pittsburgh. A graduate from the University of Kansas with both an A.B. and M.A., she started work on her doctorate at the University of Chicago . . with a stint at Spelman College injected between her scholastic chores. She has also taught at Lincoln University (Missouri) and Alabama State College and returned to the Spelman faculty in 1945. She is a Phi Beta Kappa and Pi Mu Epsilon member. Mrs. Smith is the wife of Dr. Barnett F. Smith, professor of biology at Spelman and is the mother of Barnett F. Jr., Morehouse College student.

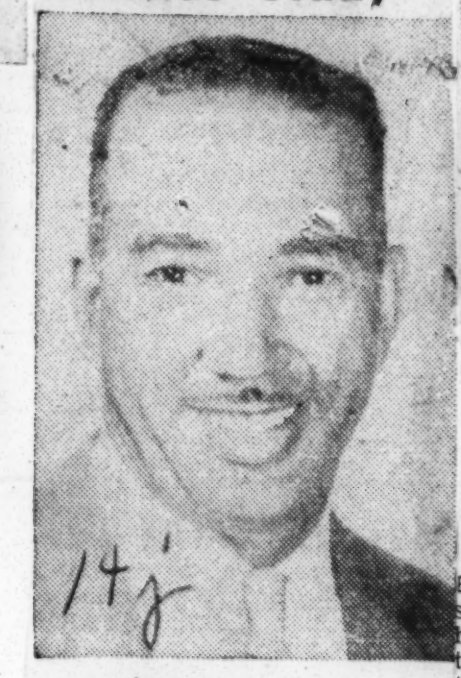
Grant Awarded S. S. Emery For Science Study



S. S. EMERY

Sampson E. Emery, instructor in the science department at F. D. Moon Junior high school, has been named recipient of a summer institute fellowship grant for teachers of science at the University of Oklahoma, Norman, for the summer of 1959.

The fellowship grant was made through the National Science Foundation, and will enable Mr. Emery to do special study in the field of metabolism and nutrition during a six-week period, according to an announcement by H. H. Bliss, director of the Science Teachers Institute at OU.

Work Toward Ph. D.

Mr. Emery will take the work for graduate credit and it will apply toward his doctorate. He is a graduate of Langston university, where he earned his B. S. degree, and of Kansas State Teachers college, Pittsburg, where he did graduate work to receive the M. S. degree.

The fellowship recipient resides with his wife, Mrs. Betty J. Emery, and their three daughters at 2517 N. E. 17th.

EMMETT L. JONES

RECEIVES STUDY GRANT:—Emmett L. Jones, associate professor of Biology at Miles College, has received a grant in aid by the National Science Foundation to participate in the Summer Institute for College Biology Teachers at the University of Wisconsin June 22-July 22.

He is among 25 college teachers of Chemistry and Biology selected to study at the Institute of Paper Chemistry, located in Appleton, Wisconsin. The study conference will be devoted to exploring certain aspects of plant biochemistry with special emphasis on wood chemistry, plant physiology, photosynthesis, and biochemical genetics. The conference will last from August 16-28, 1959.

Mr. Jones has been a member of the faculty at Miles College for 6 years. He did his undergraduate work at Fort Valley State College and earned the B. S. degree with a major in Zoology. His graduate work which led to the M. S. degree in Biology was done at the University of Detroit. He is a native of Macon, Ga., and holds membership in Alpha Phi Alpha Fraternity.

Wins Scholarship

Ben A. Watford, son of Mr. and Mrs. Richard Watford of Winton, N. C. is the recipient of a one-year scholarship from the National Science Foundation. Watford is a graduate of C. S. Brown high school in Winton, and completed his undergraduate work at Howard University in Washington, D. C.

He will use the scholarship at Tuskegee Institute, Ala.

The scholarships are granted to teachers in secondary schools who have high scholastic records in undergraduate work.

Instructor gets science award

WASHINGTON

Miss Barbara S. Dyke, a teacher of mathematis at Broome Junior High School in Rockville, Md., has been granted a fellowship by the National Science Foundation to the University of Pittsburgh for three summers of study.

The award was one of 16 made to D.C., Maryland and Virginia area teachers. Miss Dyke plans to concentrate in the mathematical field during her summer studies.

The only non-white faculty member at Broome Junior High School which has 63 instructors, Miss Dyke is a graduate of Bennett College in Greensboro, N.C. and has done graduate work at District Teachers College and the University of Maryland.

Fisk Prof, Tapped For Mich. Project

NASHVILLE, Tenn.—Dr. S. O. Roberts, chairman of the Department of Psychology, Fisk University, has been chosen as one of 10 psychologists who will be members of the only research participation project in the field of psychology which is being sponsored by the National Science Foundation.

This project has been established in cooperation with the University of Michigan's Department of Psychology for an eight-week period this summer.

Science Award To N. C. College Grad

DURHAM, N. C. (ANP)—Miss Gladys E. Morgan, a 1958 graduate of North Carolina college, has received a National Science foundation grant to study one year at Boston College. The grant totals $3,300. After finishing NCC, Miss Morgan taught for four years at Durden High School, Wilson, N. C.

She previously won grants for three years to study in North Carolina College's Science and Mathematics Institute. In her work at Boston College, Miss Morgan is expected to complete requirements for the Master's degree in mathematics.

Minorities Education Proiect: Startling

Report Shows Progress For 'Two-Class' Cities

Sat 10 - 17 - 59 Pg 32

One answer to an increasingly alarming social and educational problem in our major cities is provided in the Annual Report of the National Scholarship Service and Fund for Negro Students.

In the report, NSSFNS, an 11-year-old agency dedicated to lifting educational sights and barriers for deprived young people all across the country, mentions the "trend in our great cities towards a population largely composed of two classes, the very rich and the very poor, with the middle class fleeing to the suburbs.

MINORITY GROUPS

"Large segments of our child population," the report continues, "are thus being educated in run-down areas inhabited by a heavy concentration of minority groups . . . By-products of this pattern are a far less than proportionate contribution from these deprived groups to our supply of trained manpower, inequalities of educational opportunity and inhibition of social mobility. . ."

A plan born of this recognition was started by NSSFNS 3 years ago. Called Community Talent Search, the purpose of this plan is to identify and encourage children with a college potential during their most formative years through special guidance, remedial services, cultural exposure, and parent involvement.

According to the president of NSSFS, Richard L. Plaut, CTS was inspired by the agency's long experience in counseling, motivating, and providing supplementary scholarship aid to some 6,000 deserving high school students who might never have reached college without their help.

ACHIEVEMENTS

The following achievements highlighted in the report are making possible the extension of NSSFNS work and the further national development of CTS programs:

Helping in the enrollment of 520 entnering freshmen into 263 colleges with $303,347 in scholarship aid.

Obtaining new two and three year foundation grants for additional NSSFNS supplementary scholarship aid, for increased professional staff and services, and for the continuation of the Community Talent Search program.

Launching a development program to broaden the base of NSSFNS financial support outside of regular budget sources.

As a result of having more funds for scholarship aid, a greater number of awards were made to students entering college this September than to any other entering class since the Southern Project, an earlier step in the agency's continuing program to help Negro students enter interracial colleges.

With this solid foundation of NSSFNS experience, nation-wide Community Talent Search programs promise to continue and expand by reaching potential talent earlier.

An outstanding example is the six-year CTS project begun in 1954 at Manhattan's Junior High school No. 43 and George Washington High School, schools which are representative of high educational standards in deprived areas, and where the progress of students feeding from one to other could be effectively studied.

EXCEED EXPECTATIONS

At the half-way mark, the results of the Demonstration Project, sponsored jointly by the New York City Board of Education, the College Entrance Examination Board and NSSFNS, far exceed the most hopeful expectations.

According to the report, project students in JHS No. 43 are reading above grade level for the first time in the history of the school. In 2.6 years, the median 7th year project student has gone from a score of 5.4 to a score of 9.7.

In a study of boys as a sub-group the score of the median boy who in 1956 was 1.6 years retarded, had increased from 5.2 to 10.4 or almost a year above grade level, giving the project boy a score two years higher than he would have had without the enrichment of the Demonstration Project.

COLLEGE POTENTIAL

In George Washington High school the first project class completed the 11th grade in June 1959. In this class there are about 40 students with a college potential as against a total of 5 in the last pre-project class.

In addition, there has been a virtual disappearance of disciplinary problems among project students whereas JHS No. 43 students, going on to George Washington, had always shown a high incidence of problems.

Dr. John J. Theobald, New York City Superintendent of Schools, has now expanded the Demonstration Project to include 44 elemenntary and junior high schools in the New York area. The over all effort will be known as "Higher Horizonsn."

Other projects, through the help and advice of NSSFNS and CTS are beginning, says Plaut, "to spring up all across the country." In Washington, D. C. and in Philadelphia, programs stimulated by CTS are already underway, and in Indianapolis, Cincinnati, Syracuse, Pittsburgh, Boston and 18 other cities, such projects are being planned or discussed.

According to Plaut, nearly one-half million children may soon be benefiting directly from the CTS idea, 60,000 in New York City alone.

Brooklyn Pastor Gets Methodist School Post

Rev. Dr. Grant S. Shockley

Garrett Biblical Institute of Evanston, Ill., largest of the ten graduate schools of theology in the Methodist Church, announced yesterday the appointment of the Rev. Dr. Grant S. Shockley as Professor of Religious Education.

Dr. Shockley has been pastor of James Methodist Church, 174 Reid Avenue, Brooklyn, since 1953.

The 40-year-old clergyman was graduated from Drew Theological Seminary in Madison, N. J., and took graduate work at Union Theological Seminary and Columbia University. He has held pastorates in Spring Lake, N. J., New Rochelle, N. Y., and Dover, Del.

Garrett Gets First Negro Prof

President Dwight E. Loder of Garrett Biblical institute, Evanston, announced this week the appointment of the Rev. Dr. Grant S. Shockley as professor of religious education.

Dr. Shockley, now pastor of James Methodist church, Brooklyn N. Y., becomes the first Methodist Negro to be appointed to a full professorship in a Methodist theological seminary, other than Gammon seminary, Atlanta, which is an institution for the training of Negro ministers.

Dr. Shockley will begin his duties at Garrett with the 1959 Summer School in June.

He will succeed Dr. William F. Case, professor of religious education and director of the summer school, who will become dean of the new National Methodist Theological Seminary in Kansas City, at the Conclusion of the Spring term.

A native of Philadelphia, where he was born on September 3, 1919, Dr. Shockley was graduated from Northeast high school in that city in 1937, and from Lincoln university, Oxford, Pa., in 1942.

At Lincoln he majored in classics and Greek and minored in sociology and music. He graduated from Drew Theological seminary, Madison, N. J., in 1945, with a major in systematic theology and the philosphy of religion.

He received the master of arts degree from Columbia university in 1946 and the doctor of education degree in 1952, as a Methodist Crusade scholar with Christian education as his major field.

He was admitted to the Delaware annual conference in 1943, serving pastorates at Spring Lake, N. J., and New Rochelle. N. Y.

NEGROES ON WHITE FACULTIES

Conn. College Staffer Teaching In Morocco

Chicago Defender

Chicago Ill.

NEW HAVEN, Conn. — Miss Sarah M. Brown, assistant professor of education at New Haven State Teachers College and staff member of Scranton School, is currently teaching at the American School of Tangier in Morrocco under the International Exchange Program.

This is Miss Brown's second overseas teaching experience. In 1956, she was an American representative to an International Workshop in Human Relations in Jamaica, BWI under a Lisle Fellowship.

The American School of Tangier, a private educational organization, draws its students and faculty from America, Europe and Morocco. The academic years last through mid-June.

CHIEF INTEREST

Miss Brown, who lives here, has been on the New Haven Teachers College faculty since 1949 and has taught kindergarten, first and second grades in the Scranton School. One of her chief interests is human relations, and she has spent successive summers in this area at Buffalo State college, Fisk university, Nashville, and in Jamaica.

In New Haven, she is an active member of the NAACP, the Dixwell Community Council, and St. Luke's Church where she is a member of the vestry. In addition, she is a board member of the New Haven Human Relations Council of Social Agencies.

She is a member of the Public Relations Committee of Teachers College and belongs to the Association for Student Teachers and the Conn. Education Association. For five years Miss Brown served on the editorial board of New Haven Teachers League and is a member of Teachers College Alumni Association.

In Tangiers Miss Brown is serving as a supervising teacher and is teaching the first grade. She also assists in the night English classes which are in session for two hours an evening.

Elect Franklin to council of history group

WASHINGTON — Dr. John Hope Franklin, chairman of the history department of Brooklyn College, was named to the Council of the American Historical Association at its annual sessions held here last week.

Dr. Franklin is the first colored member to be named to the council. He is a specialist in the history of the race and was professor of History at Howard University until 1956.

Also elected as a member of the Council was Dr. Frederic C. Lane of Johns Hopkins University.

* * *

DR. ALLAN NEVINS, Columbia University professor of American History and twice winner of the Pulitzer prize, was elected president of the association for the coming year.

Elected vice president was Bernadotte E. Schmitt of Alexandria, Va., who has written extensively on the origins of World War I.

Dr. Boyd C. Shafer, executive secretary of the association, warned that government aid to historical research "in the large amounts now going to scientists" could threaten the scholars' freedom to think and criticise.

The indiscriminate award of money, he said, could interfere with the dispassionate search for truth.

Among First at Northeastern University

2 Negro Profs Selected

BOSTON, Mass.—Dr. Charles M. Goolsby and Dr. Ivory L. Lyons, who have been appointed to the faculty of Northeastern University in Boston, are among the first to be named to the university's teaching staff.

Both received appointments starting with the academic year 1958-'59.

Dr. Lyons holds M.A. and Ph.D. degrees, both in economics from Harvard University, although only 27 years old. He is an instructor in economics at Northeastern.

Dr. Goolsby, also holds a Ph.D. from Harvard in biology. He is now an assistant professor of biology at the university.

NORTHEASTERN has a total enrollment of more than 18,000 students in its day colleges and evening division.

Dr. Goolsby Dr. Lyons

The day colleges operate under the cooperative plan of education, with students alternating 10-week periods in the university with periods of equal length on regular paying jobs in business and industry.

The two professors became good friends during their post-graduate days at Harvard, and they are now collaborating on a literary project concerning "the national implications of integration."

Dr. Lyons, who is doing the initial organizing work, said of the book: "It's purpose is to bring to the public the major issues in the whole area of integration from a national point of view."

Dr. Lyons a member of the NAACP, is interested in social and racial problems.

He is hoping his teaching in the North will "widen my social background, enabling me to make comparisons between Northern and Southern cultures which will be useful for our present project and future projects."

To Okla State

HOUSTON — S B Williams of the Phillis Wheatley Senior High School Science Dept. is leaving the school after serving on the faculty for 22 years. Mr. Williams has accepted a position with Science Department of Oklahoma State University.

Dr. Charles Parrish Becomes U. Of L Departmental Head

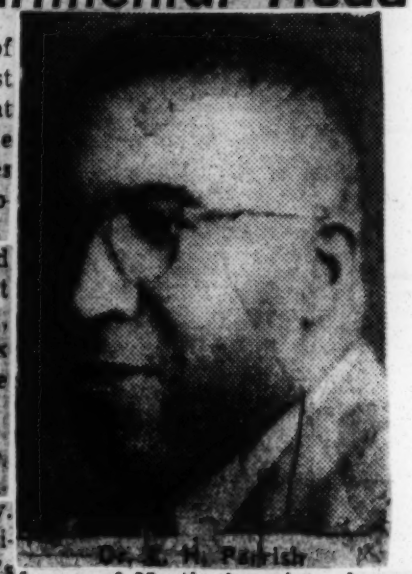
Dr. Charles H. Parrish, 50, of 926 S. Sixth, became the first Negro to head a department at the University of Louisville when the University trustees approved him as head of the sociology department last week.

A full professor at the old Louisville Municipal College at the time of its closing in 1951, Dr. Parrish retained this rank when he was transferred to the University of Louisville.

The educator succeeds Dr. Robert I. Kutak, former department head who died in January. A graduate of Howard University, Dr. Parrish holds a master's degree in sociology from Columbia University and a doctorate from the university of Chicago.

Coming to Municipal College in 1931, Dr. Parrish remained there until the school was abolished and he became the only member of the faculty of the all-Negro school to join the U of L faculty.

Dr. Parrish is a prolific traveler and well-prepared educator who has earned the regard and esteem of his fellow faculty members and the students of the University.



Dr. C. H. Parrish

Hampton Professor To Berlin Post

HAMPTON, Va.—Dr. Charles H. Nichols, professor of English at Hampton Institute, for the last ten years, has been appointed to a chair in American studies at the Free University, Berlin, Germany, according to an announcement by Dr. William H. Martin, acting president. Dr. Nichols will serve as professor of North American language and literature starting Oct. 1, 1959.

A graduate of Brooklyn College, Dr. Nichols received the Ph.D. degree from Brown University where he attended as a Rosenwald Fellow. The recipient of a Fulbright award, he served as visiting professor in American literature at Aarhus University in Denmark in 1954-55.

GOP Sets Precedent in Michigan

Negro Nominated for Wayne U. Board

DETROIT—Albert B. Chennault Sr., apparently taking his surprise nomination for the six-man board of governors of Wayne State University, the first Negro in the history of Michigan to be nominated on the state ticket of a major political party, in stride, left this week to attend a luncheon with Paul E. Bagwell, titular Michigan GOP head, in Lansing before returning to get his campaign into high gear.

The veteran Detroit real estate broker, 61, of 9000 LaSalle Blvd., with offices at 1978 W. Grand Blvd., said he would name a campaign manager some time this week.

• Chennault was nominated for the post at the state convention of the Republican party, held here at the Henry Ford Auditorium.

• Born in Wilks County, Ga., Chennault admits he had "a hard time getting an education. But I was determined that if I ever got through school, I'd try to help others do the same."

His parents were born in slavery and his grandfather, he said, built slave cabins. Chennault, himself, is a builder. Presently, he is in the process of constructing 200 homes in the Chennault subdivision of New Haven, Mich.

EDUCATION REMAINS his greatest interest in life. He and his wife, Nellie, who is a graduate of Wilberforce (Ohio) University, have three children.

The oldest son, Albert Jr., has a master's degree in business administration from the university and is a junior appraiser with the Detroit Board of Assessors.

Their daughter, Shirleyan, the wife of a Chicago attorney, teaches school in that city. She taught for two years in the Detroit public school system before going to Chicago.

CHENNAULT WORKED his way through Paine High School and College, after arriving there with only $10 in his pocket. He worked his way through Atlanta University, also, and acquired an A.B. degree in 1926.

He then enrolled at the University of Michigan and studied business administration for a year before coming to Detroit where he began work for Victory Mutual Life Insurance Co.

• In 1935, he organized his own company, the Chennault Real Estate and Insurance Co., of which he is presently the head.

Chennault's community and fraternal activities grew right along with his business enterprise.

He is a member of the Tabernacle Baptist Church, Alpha Phi Alpha Fraternity, Businessmen's Youth Club No. 10 for Juvenile Delinquency, Prince Hall Masons, Mount Taben Lodge No. 2; Detroit Brokers Association, YMCA, Atlanta University Club, and the University Club of Michigan.

HE WAS A member of the Citizens Advisory Committee on School Needs in Detroit and a member of the General Finance Committee for School Needs for the Board of Education. He is also (whew!) chairman of the Northwestern Area Citizens School.

White and Negro alike last week lauded the GOP nomination of Chennault for the state-wide position. He was described, warmly, as "a man well qualified" for the powerful position.

The "liberals" of the Republican organization won a smashing victory when they re-elected Chairman Lawrence B. Lindemer by an overwhelming vote. Lindemer's opponent, conservative State Senator John Smeekens of Coldwater, Mich., got only 163 votes out of nearly 1,600 votes.

Chennault, incidentally, was U. S. Postmaster General Arthur Summerfield's candidate for the post. Joseph Clark, Summerfield's Negro aid, came here to assist in Chennault's nomination.

H. Lee-Smith, Artist, Will Teach in Mich.

GREAT NECK, N. Y.—Hughie Lee-Smith, perhaps one of the two best-known Negro artists in America, is returning to teach ofr his second summer at the fashionable Grosse Pointe, Mich., Art Center.

During the last 15 years, he has been either a painter or an art instructor, and has received many important awards, prizes and honors. His paintings have been shown in many well-known galleries, and he is represented in several renowned, permanent collections, such as the Detroit Institute of Art, Detroit, Mich.

Among the 12 national prizes Mr. Lee-Smith has won in the last nine years is the coveted Thomas B. Clarke prize at the National Academy of Design, 34th annual exhibition in New York in February 1959.

Two of his paintings were shown, recently, at the Waldorf-Astoria at the American Society of African Culture's Conference, June 26-29, which featured outstanding cultural contributions of Negroes.

The Art USA, 1959, exhibition held recently at New York's Coliseum, featured his regional prize painting, "Festival End."

Dr. Anna F. Harvin Resigns Fisk Post

Dr. Anna F. Harvin, dean of students at Fisk university, has resigned her post, effective September 1, 1959. This announcement was made today by Dr. Stephen J. Wright, Fisk president.

The Phi Beta Kappa scholar joined the Fisk staff as chief of the student personnel office in '57. Holder of the Ph.D. degree in sociology and counseling psychology from Washington State University, she is a former associate professor of sociology at Grambling college.

The announcement of Dr. Harvin's resignation from Fisk came shortly after it was revealed that she will soon be married to Thomas Roy Grant, a Monroe, La., teacher.

While in Nashville, Dr. Harvin participated actively in professional and civic activities. Her affiliations included membership in the Tennessee Deans association, the Southern college Personnel association, the National Association of Women Deans and Counselors, the American Personnel and Guidance association, the Nashville branch of the American Association of University Women, the Board of Directors of Bethlehem center, the Women's Auxiliary of Holy Trinity Episcopal church, and the Nashville Alumnae Chapter of Delta Sigma Theta.

Lost First And Research Data

This Professor Got Ph. D. By Writing Second Thesis

GREENSBORO, N. C. — Almost all holders of the doctor of philosophy degree agree that the production of a single doctoral thesis is difficult enough.

A professor at A. and T. college was compelled to do two of them.

Dr. H. P. Kuang, professor of mathematics, who returned to the college this fall after a study leave for one year, is the man who had to face this double task. He was granted the Ph. D. degree in mathematics this summer by the University of Minnesota.

THE WRITING of the second thesis was not a choice of the young mathematician, but the result of an unfortunate accident which nearly cost him his life.

Enroute to Greensboro for his initial appointment here in September, 1955, Dr. Kuang was seriously injured in an auto accident. He lay in a hospital bed for several weeks.

His car was completely destroyed, as were a collection of expensive books, typewriters and other valuable personal property; but more important, the sole copy of his doctoral thesis.

THE THESIS had been approved and needed only to be retyped for final submission. The original research data had been destroyed a week before. Dr. Kuang was compelled to repeat the entire process, from the selection of a topic to the preparation of the copy.

A native of a small village near Shanghai, China, he earned the A. B. degree at National Central university at Nanking and the M. S. degree at the University of Minnesota.

Phony "Doctorate" Degrees Checked

By LOUIS CASSELS
(United Press International

It takes from three to five years of hard work to earn a Ph. D. degree at a reputable American University.

But if you aren't too choosy about your alma mater, you can acquire a "doctorate" with far less trouble. All you have to do is mail a check to one of the numerous phony "colleges" and "institutes" that specialize in exchanging spurious academic prestige for real cash.

There are at least 200 of these diploma mills now functioning in the United States. They take in—the expression is used advisedly—about 750,000 "students" a year. Their gross income is estimated at 75 million dollars annually, and it's nearly all clear profit since they aren't burdened with the expense of maintaining a faculty or a campus.

This racket has been flourishing for many years, and only a few sporadic efforts have been made to stamp it out. Many educators who were ware of its existence have tended to shrug it off on the grounds that anyone foolish enough to buy a worthless degree should be allowed to go ahead and waste his money.

ABRUPT CHANGE BREWING

An Abrupt change in this laisse - faire attitude is now brewing. The highly respected American Council on Education, an organization that is fairly awash with legitimate Ph. D's, is girding to do battle against the purveyors of bogus degrees.

The reason for the council's concern is made clear in a special report which it will make public in Washington this week.

The report discloses that American's mail - order degree factories are now going in big for international trade. Through glittering advertisements in foreign newspapers and magazines, they are misleading thousands of students in other countries into believing that they can get a bona - fide correspondence course education by scraping up enough dollars to "enroll" in the phony American schools.

Students in undeveloped countries, who attach high value to an American degree, are easy targets for this kind of fraud. So many of them have been billed the council says, that foreigners are beginning to "question the integrity and quality of all American education."

Many U. S. officials abroad have reported the racket to the State Department, warning that it is heavily damaging American prestige in countries where the United States is eager to win friends.

Harvard Alumni Voting On Bunche As Overseer

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. — Dr. Ralph J. Bunche, who became famous on an international scale by haking war between Israel and Arab countries after the partition of Palestine, may take on a new responsibility and honor soon.

Members of Harvard university's alumni, among whom Dr. Bunche is numbered, are voting to select five new members of the Harvard board of overseers. The name of the United Nations undersecretary for political affairs is on the list of 10 nominees.

IF HE IS chosen he will play a role in the university's No. 2 administrative organization.

The former Howard University professor took his master's degree and his Ph. D at Harvard.

In the past he has received a Nobel peace prize and has been proposed as a nominee for the U. S. Senate from New York state and for assistant secretary of state of the U. S.

Dr. Tate First Negro Public School Teacher With A Ph. D.

By JOHN BRITTON

The chairman of the English department at Booker T. Washington High School walked away from New York University Wednesday with a Ph.D. degree in English and became the first Negro teacher in Atlanta's city school system to be awarded the highest degree.

Dr. Ernest C. Tate, thorough, mild mannered English head at the local school recently fulfilled the final requirements for the doctorate in English and Wednesday journeyed to the metropolitan university to receive his degree.

A check with the Atlanta Board of Education revealed that Tate is the only Negro teacher employed in the city school system of Atlanta to hold the doctorate degree.

Dr. G. Y. Smith, personnel director of the Board of Education, disclosed, in a telephone conversation, that the addition of Tate to the roll of Ph. D. holders brings to approximately two the number of teachers in the entire city system known to hold doctorate degrees.

Smith pointed out that he vaguely recalls one white teacher in the Atlanta system who also has a doctorate, however, he noted there are no other teacher-doctors in the system besides Tate and the white teacher.

The personnel director said there are several holders of doctorate degrees on the supervisory level of the city school system, both Negro and white, however, he added it is "quite rare and unusual" to find a teacher in the system with a Ph. D. in any field.

The son of Mr. and Mrs. James E. Tate, pioneer Atlantans, Dr. Tate received his elementary education in the public schools of Atlanta, his high school and college training at Atlanta University where he earned the A. B. degree. He received an A. M. degree from New York University.

Dr. Tate's dissertation for the doctorate at the same university was titled "The Social Implications of the Writings and the Career of James Weldon Johnson."

Dr. Tate has been teaching in the city school system continuously since his college graduation except for two interruptions when he was called to serve as a First Lieutenant in the U. S. Army.

A member of the Phi Beta Sigma Fraternity, Dr. Tate is married to the former Faustina Hall, well-known local concert singer. They are the parents of two children, Renee and Ernest.

Tate, who said age is not important, lives at 40 West Lake Dr., N. W. He gave no indication of any plans as a result of the doctorate other than continuing his teaching pursuits at Washington High School.

Alabama A & M's W. H. Hollins Completes Work For Ph. D

The announcement was made here this week by sources at the college.

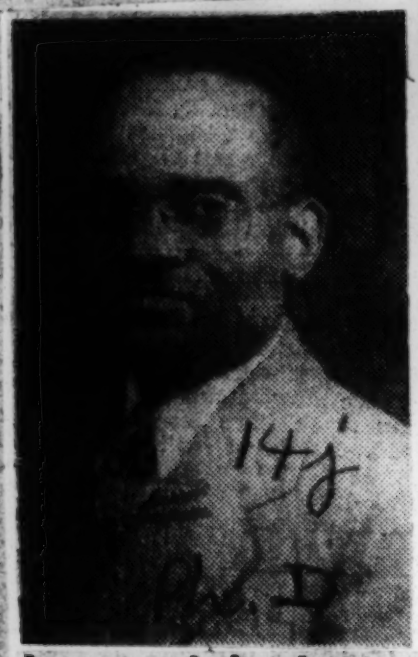
Having an interest in content analysis, his dissertation was based on a comparative analysis of a sample of McGuffey school readers and the most popular modern series. Sought out in the analysis were the kinds of ideas promoted by the content of each series as well as the classes of subject matter. Among the traits dealt with were honesty, courteousness, preservance, and the classes of subject matter included adventure, economics and religious. The period covered was 1879 to present, and the approach in the study was both quantitative and qualitative, with emphasis being placed on similarity and change in content.

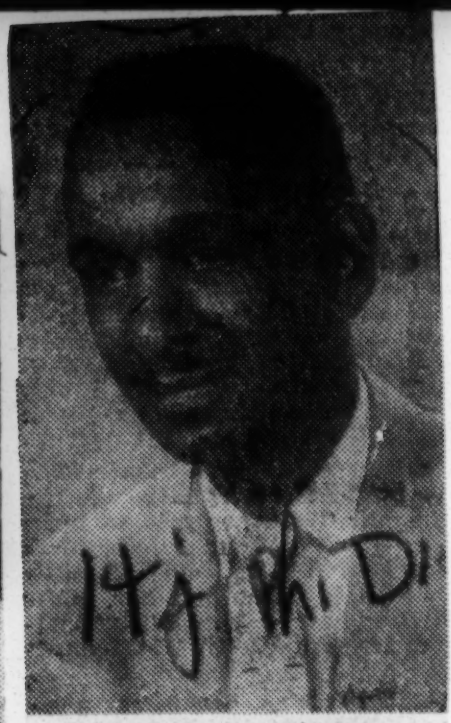
Before joining the staff of the Alabama A. and M. College, Mr. Hollins had taught prining and journalism at the Florida A. and A. University, Tallahassee; and Journalism at Lincoln University, Jefferson City, Mo.

A native of Madison, Ala., Mr. Hollins is a junior college graduate of the Alabama A. and M College, holds the bachelor of science degree in printing from Florida A. and M. University, and the master of arts degree in journalism from the University of Minnesota. He has studied printing also at Carnegie Institute of Technology, Pittsburgh, Pa.

He is a life member of Sigma Delta Chi, national professional journalistic fraternity; a member of the Association of Education in Journalism, American Vocational Association, state and national teachers associations, American Association of University Professors, and both Acabemy of Political Science, and the American Academy of Political and Social Science. He is listed in Who's Who in American Education (1951-52), Who's Who in Colored America (1950), and the Directory of American Scholars (1951).

NORMAL, Ala. (SNS) — W. H. Hollins, chairman of the division of printing and director of public relations at Alabama A. and M. College here, has completed work for the doctor of philosophy degree in Mass Communication at the University of Illinois.





LEONARD C. ARCHER

Leonard Archer Receives Ph.D. From Ohio State

GETS DOCTORATE — Columbus Ohio — Leonard C. Archer, professor of English, Tennessee A. & I. University, Nashville, received the doctor of philosophy degree in speech and drama from Ohio State University March 19 at the winter convocation.

The youngest son of the late Dr. S. H. Archer, president of Morehouse College from 1930 to 1938, Dr. Archer holds the A.B. degree from Morehouse College and the M.A. degree from the University of Toronto, Canada.

Dr. Archer wrote a dissertation on the NAACP and the American Theatre covering and documenting the NAACP protest campaigns and their relationships and influence upon the mass media.

He is a member of the College English Association, the American Educational Theatre Association, Delta Psi Omega, and the Omega Psi Phi Fraternity.

RHODES SCHOLARSHIPS

Five New Rhodes Scholarships Are Created In London

LONDON (NNPA) — The creation of five new Rhodes Scholarships was announced today by the Rhodes Trustees. They are mainly for colored students from British Commonwealth countries.

The scholarships are for the five countries or regions which have recently become or are about to become self-governing. These are: Ceylon, Ghana, the Malayan region, including Malaya, Singapore, Brunei, North Borneo and Sarawak; Nigeria, and the Caribbean region, which includes, in addition to the Caribbean Federation, British Guiana, British Honduras and the Bahamas.

It will exclude Jamaica which already has a Rhodes Scholarship. Up to now nearly all Rhodes scholars have been white. The only exceptions have been an occasional colored scholar from Jamaica and those from India and Pakistan. There has been one, the late Alain Leroy Locke, a Howard University professor from the United States. At present, 32 Rhodes scholars each year come from the United States.

All Rhodes scholars remain at Oxford for two years which enables them to take a degree. Those whose academic work or future career make it desirable retain the scholarship a third year.

The scholarships are worth $2,100 a year.

ROBERT E. LEE SCHOLARSHIP AID FUND

Ten Medical Scholarships Will Be Awarded Negro Students

American
Hamilton, Ohio
Sat. 7-19-59.

CHICAGO—The Alfred P. Sloan Foundation announced it would award 10-four-year medical scholarships to Negro college students "to lessen the nation's massive shortage of Negro physicians."

Dr. Arnold J. Zurcher, executive director of the Foundation, said a total of $60,000 would be granted to students during the 1960-61 academic year.

Dr. Franklin C. McLean, emeritus professor of physiology at the University of Chicago, and secretary-treasurer of National Medical Fellowships, Inc., Chicago, accepted the contribution for the National Medical-Sloan Foundation scholarships.

Of 220,831 physicians in the nation, 4000 are Negroes, McLean said.

Scholarships will be awarded to "talented Negro students who have demonstrated outstanding academic ability in college, scored high in the medical admission test, which will be held next October 31.

SCHOLARSHIP FUND HEAD: Robert E. Lee, of Jackson, executive director of the Robert E. Lee Scholarship Aid Fund which has just been chartered and incorporated by the State of Miss.

SOUTH-EAST ASIA TREATY ORGANIZATION (SEATO)

Prof Receives SEATO Award

WASHINGTON, D. C. — A Howard university professor is among five non-Asian scholars named this week to receive South-East Asia Treaty organization (SEATO) research fellowships.

He is Dr. Bernard Fall, associate professor of government and member of the College of Liberal Arts faculty since 1957. He lives at 10 Drury Lane, Hollin Hills, Alexandria, Va.

The recipients will do advanced research in social and economic problems of the South-East area.

In all, awards were made to 11 citizens of the seven SEATO nations. One scholar each was selected from the United States, Britain and France; and two scholars each from Pakistan, Thailand, Philippines and Australia.

Science Grant Totaling $32,000 To Professors

HOUSTON — Dr L. L. Woods, Chairman, Division of Natural Sciences and head of the department of Chemistry, and Dr Ray Floyd Wilson, Associate Professor, Chemistry department, have received science grants totaling $32,000.00 from the Robert A. Welch Foundation. The grants are for a period of two years, 1959-61 with a stipulation of $8,000 per year for each recipient.

This marks the third year Professors Woods and Wilson have received research grants from the Welch Foundation. Dr Woods will continue his on the "4- Pyrones," while Dr will begin research on "Certain Complex Ions and Coordination Compounds of the Transitional and Rare Earth Elements." Dr Wilson, who last year worked chiefly with the interaction of Rhodium and Osmium with 1-2-3 Benzotriazole has submitted numerous papers of his findings to the Robert A. Welch Foundation and to leading Science Journals of the Nation for publication. His paper "The Gravimetric Determination of Osmium," was published by Talanta, an international journal of Analytical Chemistry, "In Press," (1958).

Professors Receive Grant

DR L L WOODS, Head, Department of Chemistry, and Dr Ray Floyd Wilson, Asst Prof of Chemistry, Texas Southern University are the recipients of a $16,000.00 science research grant each from the Robert A Welch Foundation of Houston, Texas.

S. Norfolk Student Among Wilson Fellowship Winners

RICHMOND — Hans Rosenhaupt, national director of the Woodrow Wilson National Fellowship Foundation, Princeton, N. J. announced recently that after an intensive nation-wide talent hunt for future college teachers, the Foundation named 1,200 superior American and Canadian students as Woodrow Wilson fellows.

Among the Wilson fellows selected for the academic year 1959-1960 was Bennie Lee Cherry a senior at Virginia Union university and a native of South Norfolk, Va. Cherry is a French major and has chosen Brown university for his graduate study in French. He is a member of Alpha Kappa Mu honor society, co-editor of the Panther (1959 Yearbook for his college class) member of the First Baptist church in Norfolk and is a volunteer teacher of French at Baker and Randolph elementary schools in Richmond.

HIS FIRST two years of college were completed at the Norfolk Division of Virginia State college where he entered from Carver High of South Norfolk as valedictorian of his class.

Going directly to the heart of education's most urgent problem — the critical shortage of qualified teachers —the Woodrow Wilson Fellowship program recruits and supports promising scholars for their first year of graduate study. The project is backed by a $25 million grant from the Ford Foundation.

According to Rosenhaupt, the need for college teachers in the 1960s can only be met if for every single Wilson Fellow 30 other members of the class of 1959 begin to prepare themselves for teaching careers.

IT HAS been predicted that between 30 and 40 thousand new full-time college teachers each year will be needed to train the wave of students seeking college educations in the Sixties. The current annual output of Ph. D's averages 9,000 of which only half go into college teaching.

This year's Wilson fellows were chosen from 7,000 candidates, all nominated and all rigorously screened by committees of faculty members. These candidates came from over 700 undergraduate colleges.

Elected Wilson Fellows will begin graduate work next fall at 80 different universities. Each Fellow receives a living allowance of $1,500 plus the full cost of tuition and fees. Married students receive additional stipends.

In this year's group of winners, there are 875 men and courses in the humanities; 34 percent in the social sciences and 28 per cent in the natural sciences and mathematics.

MRS. EDWINA W. HILL

WOODROW WILSON FELLOWSHIP—Mrs. Edwina Woodard Hill has been awarded a Woodrow Wilson Fellowship in biology for the year 1959-60. This fellowship provides expenses to the school of her choice and also provides a stipend.

Mrs. Hill, a native of Cartersville, Ga., was graduated from Morris Brown College as valedictorian of her class in 1953. She is a member of Alpha Kappa Mu Honor Society, Beta Kappa Chi Scientific Honor Society, and Alpha Kappa Alpha Sorority. She was listed in the 1953 edition of American College Student Leaders.

At present, Mrs. Hill is employed by the Atlanta Board of Education as a science teacher at David T. Howard High School.

Kentucky State College Senior Woodrow Wilson Fellowship Recipient

William A. Brown, a senior in field of History will begin graduate study in September at the University of Wisconsin under a Woodrow Wilson Fellowship. The scholarship is valued at $1,500 plus cost of tuition and fees. The scholarships are awarded to superior American and Canadian students to encourage promising students to become college teachers. This year's 1200 were chosen from 7,000 candidates, all nominated and all rigorously screened by committees of faculty members. The candidates came from over 700 undergraduate colleges.

Brown has maintained a 3 point average since his enrollment at Kentucky State as a freshman in the fall of 1955. Kentucky State uses the 3 point system in grading.

Brown is editor of the school newspaper; president, local chapter of Alpha Kappa Mu National Honor Society; president of Senior class, is 24 years of age, and hails from Brooklyn, New York.

During his freshmen year at the college, he won the district, the regional, and was second in the National Collegian Oratorical Contest held at Northwestern University, Evanston, Illinois.

Shaw Senior Gets Grant

Mrs. Helen Marie Snead, 22, a senior at Shaw University from Garner, and a science major, has been notified of her appointment by the Woodrow Wilson National Fellowship Foundation in Princeton, New Jersey, as a Woodrow Wilson Fellow for the academic year 1959-1960.

Mrs. Snead, the mother of a three-year-old daughter, plans to study at the Catholic University of America at Washington, D. C. in the field of chemistry.

She is a member of Alpha Kappa Mu and Beta Kappa Chi, both honor societies.

5 listed as winners of Woodrow Wilson grants

WASHINGTON — Two undergraduate seniors and a 1958 graduate of Howard University and two seniors at Southern University, Baton Rouge, La., are among the 1,200 superior American and Canadian students awarded 1959 - 1960 scholarships for graduate study by the Woodrow Wilson National Fellowship Foundation of Princeton, N.J.

The Howard University recipients are Miss Sandra E. Nugent, daughter of Mrs. Zenobia C. Lewis of 525 Shepherd St., NW, Washington; Conrad D. Snowden, son of Mrs. Daisy L. Snowden, 1 Kelsey St., Brooklyn, N.Y., and James W. Brown, son of Mrs. Gladys Brown, 24 Pine St., Central Islip, L.I., N.Y.

The Southern University winners are Alvin Aubert, Lutcher, La., who will study English at the University of Michigan, and Miss Betty R. Wilson, Minden, La., who will study English at Iowa State University.

NCC'S WOODROW WILSON AWARD WINNERS Annie Mae Spaulding, Columbua County (N.C.) mathematics major, and Theodore Gilliam, Durham English major, have received Woodrow Wilson fellowships valued at some $2,700 to study next year at the University of Michigan and Yale University respectively. The two NCC students are outstanding in campus activities and have four year honor records. Gilliam is editor of the Campus Echo. Miss Spaulding studied meteorology during the summer of 1958 at the University of Chicago on a special National Science Foundation grant.

Jefferson County Students Back From Washington Trip

By MRS. ELIZA L. PENNY

[illegible] students [illegible] visiting [illegible] to [illegible] their friends and sponsors about [illegible] recent Citizenship Tour which took them on visits to historic [illegible] in Washington, D. C., New York, Philadelphia, and Gettysburg. After presenting Chapel programs at [illegible] School, Lincoln Junior High, Dunbar High, Hooper City High, and Carver Junior High, these students will present a Sunday afternoon program at the First Baptist Church, North and Vernon Avenue, Dunbar, and a radio broadcast over radio station WENN. [illegible] of the programs [illegible]

Lodging [illegible] of the trip some things stand out clearly in the minds of the young tourists. Travelling in a Deluxe Railways chartered bus was a new experience to most of them. The first days agenda included a tour of the campus and a reception at Clark College. Travel through South Carolina to Charlotte, North Carolina, [illegible] they spent their first night at the Hotel Alexander.

Enroute to Washington, D. C., the travelers stopped at Monticello, the home of Thomas Jefferson. Damon Atkins was fascinated by the modern ideas and principles that Jefferson incorporated into building his home. He was amazed at the arrangement of beds, the narrow stairways, the sky-lights, the house and the servants' quarters. Late Sunday evening Amanda Peterson marvelled at the beautiful lights sparkling over the nation's capitol as they crossed the Potomac River.

Monday in Washington was exciting. It began with a visit to the office of Congressman George Huddleston, Jr., who greeted the tourists, gave them packets of pamphlets and pencils. One of his constituents, Lynn Strickland, a former Birmingham News Citizenship tour student escorted the group to the office of Congressman Williams who gave each tourist an autographed picture and a souvenir ball point pen.

The group then visited Justice Hugo Black and went to a session of the Supreme Court where they saw several lawyers admitted to practice before the Court. It was indeed an awe-inspiring experience to sit in the presence of such an august body.

After leaving the Court the group began a tour with Louie Gordon pointing out the interesting places located in Washington. Glenda Moss, Irene Robinson and George Hawkins were especially impressed as they viewed the changing of the Guard at the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier because they were "proud of how America reveres its heroes."

The Washington Monument was beautiful to behold with the forty-nine American flags rippling in the breeze. At the Lincoln Memorial, the young tourists bowed their heads in a moment of silent prayers for the person who had meant so much to their race. Later they stopped at the Jefferson Memorial Monument.

On Tuesday the group visited the White House, where Julius Ellis was impressed by the grandeur of its furnishings.

Tuesday will always be remembered by Willadene Mallory and Ponzella Penny because they got the autograph of President Lemus of San Salvador a man who was the ruler of a country, but took time to autograph pieces of paper for a group of Alabama school children.

The visit to the Bureau of Engraving and seeing the vast number of people involved in making our currency and looking at the large stacks of money provided conversation material for Catherine Kelly, Amanda Peterson, Marcia Holloway, Charles Purce, and Kelly Dunning. On Wednesday the group had their first opportunity to see Radio Music Hall and see Yul Brynner in "The Journey" and the Famous Rockettes. Walking down Broadway to the Hotel Paramount, someone remarked, "It is beginning to snow. By morning New York City was covered with snow. But the dauntless teenagers and their more timid chaperones hired a Grayline Tourist bus and visited a Chinese temple. Evelyn Faddis was surprised to know that the Chinese wrote out their prayers at home, then took them to the temple to burn so they will ascend into heaven.

The group then went to the Statue of Liberty and despite the snow, they rode out on deck of the boat. It was this experience that led Irene Robinson to feel that she could ride on a ship without becoming seasick.

Then to the United Nations Building where Ponzella Penny admired the beautiful walls and ceiling and George Hawkins admired it because it is the place where nations of the world work in attempt to bring about peace.

At the Empire State Building Namon Prince felt thwarted because he could not see New York City because of the heavy fog.

After New York City, the group went to Philadelphia, the birthplace of the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution. There again the paths of a celebrity crossed ours, because we saw the Lord Mayor of Dublin, Ireland who had come to see the Liberty Bell.

Lovie Lawson and Matilda Brown were surprised to read on the hotel bulletin board that the Educational Citizenship Council was eating lunch in the Philadelphia Room of the Benjamin Franklin Hotel.

On the homeward journey the group toured the battlefield at Gettysburg, saw "The Creation" reenacted at Natural Bridge Virginia, visited Rock City and on home. The weary travellers were eager to get home to tell of their adventures.

Adults accompanying the students were Mrs. Berniece Bedell Hatcher, business manager; Mrs. C. L. Addison, Chairman Mr. Ramon Thompson, boys' chaperone; and Mrs. Eliza Penny, Girls' chaperone.

IN CLARKE COUNTY

Entire Negro Senior Class Ousted For Insubordination

JACKSON (Special) — The entire senior class of Harper High School has been suspended for the remainder of the term for insubordination fomented by a group called "the Big Bopper," Clarke County Superintendent of Education F. L. Mathews said Friday night.

The 46 seniors at the Negro school have been out of school more than a week.

A 24-hour guard is maintained at the school to prevent possible damage to the plant, Mathews said.

Oath of admittance to "The Big Bopper" society shocked school officials, the superintendent said. Copies of the oath were taken from several members of the senior class after they had begun a "passive resistance" movement, refusing to participate in class work, Mathews said.

The oath reads:

"I hereby solemnly swear by all my ability and power to erupt the entire student body of the school. I intend to overthrow the function of the school—as my power is unlimited. And I defy anyone who interferes with my plans.— (The) Big Bopper—BB."

SUSPENSION ORDER

The seniors began their efforts to disrupt the school activity in February, Principal James Nichols reported. About 10 days later, on March 5, Mathews ordered the entire class suspended for the remainder of the school term.

Mathews said the Negro school officers told him the senior students would report to class, but would refuse to take any part in class activities; they boycotted the school cafeteria and tried to influence other students to follow their example.

The students insulted teachers, Mathews said. When given an assignment or instruction, students would answer, "I'm not going to do that. You have no right to even tell me to do that," according to the school officials.

REFUSED TO TALK

When Nichols called some of the seniors into his office and questioned them about their actions, the students refused to even speak to him, he said.

"Their actions had demoralizing effect on the entire student body," Mathews said. No explanation for the seniors' behavior has been found, the superintendent said.

Since the suspension of the class, there has been an attempt to break into the boiler room of the modern school building, Mathews said, but no violence has occurred.

Mathews said he had never encountered similar behavior by students.

SCHOOL VERY MODERN

There are 650 students enrolled in the Negro institution, among four Negro high schools in Clarke County. The school was opened only last fall, is the newest "and probably the finest" in the county, Mathews said.

Constructed at a cost of $150,000, the building is modern in every respect, is fireproof, includes a gymnasium and "many features which can't be found in our other schools," Mathews said.

In his letter suspending the students, Mathews wrote, "The Clarke County Board of Education is not interested in working with any group of students, white or colored, who display the willful insubordination toward their teachers that you have been guilty of." He said, "you are herewith ordered by me not to return to the campus of Harper High School for the remainder of this year, and I am requesting the assistance of the Jackson Police Department to enforce this order."

Mathews said Friday night that negotiations are under way between the school board and parents of some of the seniors. He said students might be re-admitted upon a guarantee of model behavior, but they would be required to "make up every minute" of lost time in after-school-hours work.

State Refuses to Run City's Night Schools

By James J. Morisseau

State Education Commissioner James E. Allen jr. yesterday rejected a proposal by the High School Teachers Association that the state operate night high schools for the 33,000 students whose training has been interrupted.

The association had offered to staff the schools free of charge, presumably with the same teachers who resigned en masse earlier this month in a salary dispute with the Board of Education and forced the closing of the city's sixteen evening high schools.

Called "Local Issue"

Dr. Allen, in a telegram to Emil H. Tron, H. S .T. A. president, said the salary dispute was a "local issue" and that the Board of Education had "full jurisdiction and responsibility in the matter," primarily because the evening schools, while "desirable," are not required by state law.

A spokesman explained that the State Education Department had neither the authority nor the facilities to operate the night schools. He added that an offer by Dr. John J. Theobald, superintendent of schools, to make the facilities available to the state did not change the department's legal position.

Dr. Theobald made the offer in reply to the H. S. T. A. announcement Wednesday night. He added at the time that if the association meant what it said, "the teachers can turn their checks over to charity."

Sought Meeting

The H. S. T. A., in a telegram to Dr. Allen, reacted to his decision with a request for a meeting Monday in Albany to discuss their proposal. An association spokesman conceded that responsibility for the night schools was the Board of Education's, but said "this present vacuum should not be left unfilled." He added:

"Surely, protocol should not stand in the way of providing for those unable to pay (for night school classes.)"

Meanwhile, the association was demanding an immediate increase to $16 a night and another increase, to $21, in September. The board offered increases to $18 in September and to $20 the following fiscal year, but insisted no funds were available for an immediate increase.

Then, on Monday, the board abandoned its attempts to operate four emergency centers for 2,500 seniors scheduled for graduation in June. The decision followed an announcement by the city's municipal colleges that they would accept the seniors as provisional freshmen in September even if they were unable to earn their diplomas.

The teachers' demands, and their resignation, drew bitter comment yesterday from Dr. Jacob Greenberg, deputy superintendent of schools. The teachers, he said, knew that the board did not have the funds for an immediate increase when they voted to resign. He added: "But they grabbed us by the throat when we were helpless."

400 Job Applications

School administrators, meanwhile, announced they had received more than 400 applications for teaching positions in the summer day high schools and 150 for the summer evening high schools, despite an H. S. T. A. request that teachers boycott them until the evening salary dispute is settled. A staff of 600 is required for the summer day day schools and 160 for the evening schools.

But one administrator admitted that applications for evening jobs were coming in slower than last year. And the H. S. T. A. pointed out that many of the teachers who had applied for the summer jobs had signed pledges that they would not actually report to work unless there is an evening high school settlement.

The city's sixteen evening high schools were shut down Feb. 2, when more than 700 of the 800 night teachers resigned. The teachers, who earn $12.25 for a three-hour session, had asked a "substantial" increase, with $26.95 a session as an eventual goal.

Board Gives Up

When negotiations broke down last week, the teachers

Birmingham Denies Two More Negroes

Pair Had Applied To Enter All-White Schools

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., March 2.—(UPI) — Two more Negro children were turned down Monday for transfer to all-white high schools in Birmingham under the state's pupil placement law.

Dr. L. Frazer Banks, city education superintendent, notified Frank E. Johnson Jr., 17, and Carolyn M. English, 14, by letter that their application had been denied. A week ago, Dr. Banks rejected seven other Negro applications for transfer.

Dr. Banks said that he failed to see where there were any "special benefits" to be obtained or "extraordinary circumstances" to warrant the move. His letter was almost a duplicate of the one sent last week.

Young Johnson, son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank E. Johnson Sr., and the English girl, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Van English, are both students at Ullman High, a Negro school, and sought to enroll at Phillips and Woodlawn High Schools respectively.

Their applications were filed under the placement law which has been upheld by the United States Supreme Court as constitutional "on its face," and they took tests in accordance with the law to determine their suitability for transfer.

Among the seven children denied admission to white schools last week were three of Rev. F. L. Shuttleworth, Negro integrationist here, who has repeatedly sought to break down the school and public transportation barrier.

Under the placement law, the next recourse of the Negroes would be to the Birmingham Board of Education, then to the courts, if necessary.

Two cases pending—

Negro try to enter white schools fails

Birmingham

The applications of seven Negro children to transfer to white schools here in the first test of Alabama's "constitutional on its face" school placement law have been denied.

City School Supt. L. Fraser Banks said yesterday the applications of two other Negro children who wish to transfer to white schools have not been acted upon.

Six of the applicants denied transfer, Banks said were rejected because he felt a transfer would not be in the best interest of the children involved.

The seventh was too young to transfer, he said.

THE TWO PENDING applications were submitted later than the others, he said, and have not been fully studied and investigated.

The rejection of the transfers brought a statement that "the struggle is on" from the Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth, Negro integration leader here.

Three of the children rejected, Fred Lee Jr., 12; Patricia, 15, and Ruby Frederick, 14, are Shuttlesworth's children. All sought to transfer to Phillips High School.

The four other children involved were Dwight Edward Armstrong, 7; James Armstrong Jr., 9; Denise Armstrong, 10, and Floyd D. Armstrong, 6. All sought to attend Graymont Grammar School.

All are the children of Mr. and Mrs. James Armstrong of 227 Ninth-ct, w.

STILL PENDING are the applications of Caroline M. English, 14, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Dan English of 804 46th-st, n, and Frank Johnson Jr., 17, son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank F. Johnson Sr. of 2515 Third-av. s. The English girl applied to attend Woodlawn High School, while the Johnson boy wanted to attend Phillips.

Shuttlesworth said his group had "no intention of accepting this as a fair nor a final answer. The struggle is on and there can be no let-up nor retreat until equality of privilege and opportunity is ours as for others."

He did not indicate what the next step would be toward obtaining school integration.

Banks, however, indicated that in the normal course of events an appeal to the City Board of Education would follow his order.

Negro School In Jackson Reinstates 36

JACKSON (AP) — A 13-day suspension for 36 of the 46 seniors at a Negro high school here ended with their reinstatement Wednesday.

The other 10 were directed to appear with their parents at the next meeting of the Clarke County Board of Education March 26 in Grove Hill. The county school superintendent, Forrest Lee Mathews, said reinstatement followed a meeting with the students and their parents.

Mathews had said that ringleaders of the group will be permanently expelled. He said Wednesday that any such action will be taken at the meeting next week.

MEETING STAGED

He and Jacob Thorn, education board member from the Jackson district, met with 40 pupils and their parents at the school Wednesday.

"There was unanimous agreement on their part that they had conducted themselves in a most disgraceful manner," Mathews said. He added that they pledge there would be no further such action.

"The 10 students not reinstated Wednesday and their parents will be given hearings before the board of education, at which time it will be determined whether or not they will be readmitted," he said.

The reinstated students agreed to make up all work missed after regular school hours.

ENTIRE CLASS

The March 5 suspension of the entire senior class at the new Harper High School was blamed on the activities of a group named the "Big Dipper." The school principal, James Nichols, said members of the group disrupted classroom operations by sitting with arms folded and refusing to answer questions of teachers. He also said they refused to eat in the school cafeteria.

Negro Pupils Seek To End School Strike

GROVE HILL, Ala. (AP)—Virtually all members of a suspended Negro senior high school and their parents Monday petitioned the Clarke County superintendent of education to re-admit them to school.

The entire class of 46 seniors at the new Harper High School in nearby Jackson was suspended March 5 for refusing to join in classroom work.

County School Supt. Forest Lee Mathews said the movement was the work of a "Big Bopper" society which threatened to "overthrow the functions of the school."

Leaders of the group will be permanently expelled, the official said.

Mathews said he will meet with the parents and pupils Wednesday to discuss lifting of the suspension. He said virtually all members of the senior class and their parents already have met with Harper Principal James Nichols and Henry Williams, county Negro school supervisor.

"The parents and their children signed pledges that they will abide by the rules and regulations of the Clarke County Board of Education and Harper High School," Mathews continued.

"They promised to make up after school hours all the work missed or lost due to the suspension, if we will re-admit them to school."

He added that the entire class was suspended because the other members "permitted these six or seven to intimidate and coerce them into participating in this movement. They laid themselves liable for the suspension."

Nichols said members of the "Big Bopper" club sat in the classrooms with arms folded and refused to answer questions or to eat in the school cafeteria.

46 in Class Of Negroes Suspended

GROVE HILL, Ala. (AP)—All 46 members of the senior class at the Negro Harper High School at Jackson, Ala., have been suspended for the remainder of the year for insubordination.

Principal James Nicols said Friday he reported the activities last week to Forest Lee Mathews, superintendent of education in Clarke County.

Mathews said the suspension was effective March 5 and that he has ordered the entire group not to return to school for the rest of the scholastic year.

Nicols said the schools academic program was being severely hampered by a society called "The Big Bopper" which has been formed in the class.

He said members of the club sat in classrooms with arms folded and refused to answer questions. They also refused to eat in the school cafeteria, he added.

He quoted letters taken from club members as saying:

"I hereby solemnly swear by all my ability and power to erupt (so) the entire student body of the school. I intend to overthrow the function of the school—as my power is unlimited. And I defy anyone who interfers with my plans."

The letters were signed "Big Bopper."

The entire group, said Nicols, has adopted a uniform of blue jeans, red shirts, one suspender over the shoulder and one under the arm and a red patch on one leg of the jeans.

Mathews said he has posted a 24-hour guard on the school building as protection against vandalism.

Harper school is the newest school in the county. It opened last year and has an enrollment of 650.

36 Negroes reinstated in Jackson

JACKSON, Ala., March 18—(AP)—The majority of the members of a suspended Negro senior high school class were reinstated today.

Clarke County Supt. Forest Lee Mathews said he reinstated 36 of the class of 46 after a meeting of the county board of education March 26.

The entire senior class of the Harper High School for Negroes was suspended March 5 because of the activities of a group named the "Big Bopper." School officials said members of the group disrupted classroom operations by refusing to answer questions of teachers and by engaging in other activities.

MATHEWS HAD said earlier that ringleaders of the group will be permanently expelled. He said today that any such action will be taken at the meeting of the board next week.

The school superintendent and Jacob Thorn, education board member from the Jackson district, met with 40 pupils and their parents at the school today.

"There was unanimous agreement on their part that they had conducted themselves in a most disgraceful manner," Mathews said. He added that the students and their parents pledged that there would be no further such action.

"The 10 students not reinstated today and their parents will be given hearings before the Board of Education, at which time it will be determined whether or not they will be readmitted."

ENTIRE CLASS RETURNING

Final 10 Negro Students Reinstated At Harper High

GROVE HILL (AP)—The remaining 10 members of a Negro high school senior class, which was suspended in full because of the activities of a "Big Bopper" club, were reinstated Thursday on a probationary basis.

The Clarke County School Board agreed for the 10 to return to classes in Harper High School in Jackson Friday after they promised there would be no further trouble from the club.

The 46 members of the class had been suspended March 5. County School Supt. Forrest Lee Mathews said the "Big Boppers" tried to disrupt classroom activities.

Thirty-six of the seniors were reinstated March 18 after they and their parents pledged fullest cooperation with school officials.

Mathews said the entire class was suspended because they permitted "ringleaders to intimidate and coerce them into participating in this movement." He said members of the class sat with arms folded and ignored questions by the teachers.

Thursday's hearing before the school board was held to determine whether the 10 would be reinstated or permanently expelled.

The Negro principal of the school, James Nichols, quoted letters taken from membes of the "Big Bopper" club as saying:

"I hereby solemnly swear by all my ability and power to drupt (sic) the entire student body of the school. I intend to overthrow the functions of the school—as my power is unlimited. And I defy anyone who interferes with my plans."

Two Incidents

IN CLARKE County Alabama the entire senior class of the Negro county high school has been expelled for insubordination and a silence strike.

At Yale University the entire student body has been placed on probation and numerous students arrested for what the President of the institution called "boorish conduct," including a clash with the city's police force.

The inference from these for separated incidents seems to be that the spirit of lawlessness is likely to breakout anywhere—in Yale University in New England or in a Negro high school in Alabama's Black Belt.

Each case called for strict punishment and severe discipline. These remedies are being applied in both cases. Perhaps this punishment will help serve as a deterrent to others. Certainly it is hoped so. Meanwhile the Yale incident ought to temper New England criticism of sporadic outbreaks of lawless conduct in the South.

Survey report—

Negro schools lead in courses in science

BY JIM CREAMER
News staff writer

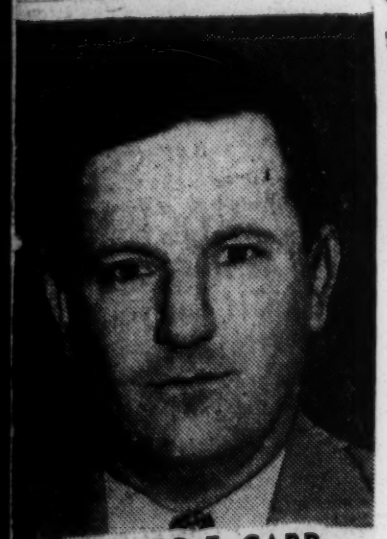
Negro high schools in general are offering more scientific courses than white high schools, according to a survey of 357 white schools and 192 Negro schools in Alabama.

This was brought out in a talk before the Alabama Academy of Science group dining at Howard College last night.

Dr. Howard E. Carr, president of the academy and director of the Auburn physics department, said questionnaries were sent to the schools with 344 white institutions answering and 162 Negro schools according to the survey.

CHEMISTRY courses currently offered in high schools, show 52 per cent of the Negro schools have chemistry courses and only 34 per cent of the white schools offer chemisty. Alabama chemistry falls behind the national average with only one half the U. S. average among white schools.

Negroes exceed all whites in science courses, according to the survey. Aside from having the lead in chemistry, Negro schools exceed white schools in physics courses.



HOWARD E. CARR
. . . Science speaker

The report showed 39 per cent of Negro schools offer physics and 28 per cent white schools offer the course. This is an average of 30 per cent for both races and falls short of the national average of 57 per cent.

CARR TOLD the science group that the students taking science courses break down as follows: Negro biology students register 26 per cent compared to whites with 17 per cent. National average is 21 per cent.

Chemistry courses taken by Negro students show 13 per cent, as compared to 7 per cent among whites. National average is 8 per cent.

Physics courses among Negroes is 9 per cent and 5 per cent for whites. National average is 4 per cent.

Negroes are ahead in advanced science courcses with 48 per cent taking the courses and 29 per cent of white students enrolled. National average is 33 per cent.

NEGRO SCHOOLS, however, have less adequate laboratory facilities and less adequate teaching instruction, Carr said.

Mathematics and biology are taken by more white students and exceed the national average in all courses but trigonometry.

The Science Academy will conclude its annual meeting today with a business session and section meetings at Howard College.

Science In Alabama

Howard Carr, head of the physics department at Auburn, undertook a survey some months ago to determine the state of science and mathematics instruction in Alabama high schools.

Carr's findings, as he notes, were both disturbing and comforting.

Of 344 white high schools responding, 97% offer biology courses. Of 162 Negro high schools, 96% offer the subject. Both percentages are well above the national average of 90%.

Physics: 39% of the Negro schools and 28% of the white offer it every year; 30% of the Negro and 57% of the white schools offer it every other year. National average: 57%.

The over-all percentages of Alabama students taking advanced science courses:

	Negro	White	U.S.
Biology	26%	17%	21%
Chemistry ..	13	7	8
Physics	9	5	4
Total	48%	29%	33%

It is in the quality of instruction that Carr finds least to cheer about. Only 16% of the state's biology teachers, says Carr, "have a competency gained by extensive and formal collegiate training."

No one [says Carr], objectively looking over the high school science programs in the state, can accept the thesis that three-quarters of the biology and chemistry teachers are well trained [as the schools estimated in the questionnaires] . . . and that two-thirds of the physics teachers are likewise giving adequate instruction.

Why, then, the optimistic attitude of school officials concerning instruction? After a long dry spell of poor science work in the high schools," says Carr, "it appears that a light shower of scientific teaching effort is taken as adequate instruction."

Carr draws no conclusions and makes no guesses as to the greater apparent interest of Negro high school students in biology, chemistry and physics than white students.

Carr's most salient conclusion, perhaps, is the need for a more realistic appraisal of the adequacy of instruction. Also the steady decline in the number of students taking physics.

Such surveys as Carr's do not provide answers; they raise questions. But they are questions that need to be raised over and over in Alabama until some real concern for education is aroused.

Students Strike At Tuskegee

TUSKEGEE, Sept. 17 (AP)—An estimated 50 students refused to attend class at Tuskegee Institute High School for Negroes yesterday, and the principal said only a dozen or so had returned to school today.

Principal R. W. Stone said the students walked off the school grounds after he ordered them to get to their class or leave.

Stone said school authorities are investigating the incident but that he hasn't determined the cause of the walkout. He said a few had said something about wanting a school dance.

The school, a part of the Macon County School System, is located in the Tuskegee institute community.

Some 50 students left the school grounds around noon, the principal said, and "I saw about a dozen" who had returned to classes today. The school has an enrollment of about 900.

Stone said he found the students and some non-students "causing a ruckus" in the school building yesterday. He said he asked the students to go to classes and when they didn't, he ordered them to leave.

Stone said he did not know the non-students or their purpose in being on the school grounds, but that he thought they were visiting during recess.

One of the students who left with the group was a driver of a school bus, the principal continued. He said that by participating in the walkout, the driver had "forfeited his right to work for the school."

Stone said no action has been taken yet against any of the students who participated in the walkout.

NEGROES BACK IN CLASS

School Dance Protest Ends Without Incident

TUSKEGEE, Ala., Sept. 18.—(UPI)—Tuskegee High School Principal R. W. Stone said most of the 50 Negro students who refused to go to school in protest of a delay in a back-to-school dance returned to their classrooms Thursday.

Stone said the students returned and resumed their work in an orderly fashion.

The principal said he talked to a meeting of the PT-A Wednesday night and explained his decision to "put first things first" and delay extracurricular activities such as the dance until the school program was well under way. Mr. Stone said he received a standing ovation.

An estimated 50 students dropped out of class Tuesday and lingered on the school grounds until ordered to leave.

Pupils Return To Classes At Tuskegee Institute High

TUSKEGEE (AP)—A student walkout in protest against delay in a school dance was reported ended Thursday with most of the 50 striking pupils back in class at Tuskegee Institute High School.

"Everything is quiet and the situation has returned to normal," said Principal R. W. Stone. He said he doesn't expect any further demonstration by the students.

Stone met with parents at a P-TA meeting Wednesday night to explain why he refused permission for a back-to-school dance before the teaching program was well under way.

The parents supported his position with a "standing ovation," Stone said, after he explained his decision to "put first things first" and stress the teaching phase of the school program.

While the principal said he isn't opposed to school dances and other extra-curricular activities, he said they should not be given precedence over scholarship and education of the students.

Stone blamed the demonstration on a group of what he called "misguided" pupils who were impatient because the dance was not arranged to their liking. He said they were disappointed when the other students didn't join them in the protest.

As for the dance, he said, it can and will be scheduled later.

The principal said he had no plans for disciplinary action against the students who left their classes Tuesday. His school, located near Tuskegee Institute, is a part of the Macon County school system.

Mob Chases Negroes in Birmingham

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Sept. 3 (AP)—A milling crowd of jeering white men and teen-agers chased Negroes away from the vicinity of Phillips High School today, standing guard against any Negro attempts to enroll.

The crowd swelled to more than 150 and remained at the scene for more than four hours until dispersed by police. A white boy suffered a head injury. He said he was struck by a rock thrown by a Negro youth.

Police arrested three white men who they said refused to move.

Negroes attempted to enroll at the white downtown high school last September, but no attempt was made by members of their race to enroll at a white school as registration began today.

Passersby

The Negroes who were chased away were pedestrians who apparently were passing through the area just northeast of the business section. The crowd contented itself with yelling at Negroes passing in vehicles.

Police Commissioner Eugene Connor stationed police at Phillips and also at Woodlawn in East Birmingham, where a smaller crowd of whites gathered.

John Brand, 16-year-old Phillips freshman, suffered a cut over his left eye which required several stitches.

He told officers that he was with a crowd of white students at the northwest corner of the block-long school building when four teen-age Negro boys approached.

Brand said that the Negroes started across the street as if they were going to walk through the middle of the crowd and the white students surged toward them. The youth said one of the negroes threw a brick as the four fled.

Two Injured In Disorders At Phillips

Crowds Expect Integration Try At Birmingham

BIRMINGHAM (AP) — A student was injured, a policeman was slugged and three men were arrested during disturbances caused by fears that Negroes would attempt to enroll at Phillips High School Wednesday. All were white.

The fears were groundless because no Negroes attempted to register at any white school as they did at Phillips last September.

The Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth, Negro integration leader who is pressing a school desegregation suit, said no such attempt would be made while the case is pending before the U.S. Supreme Court.

A crowd of white men and teen-age youths which grew to more than 150 stood guard at Phillips, chasing away several Negro pedestrians who entered the area. The Negroes apparently were passers-by.

CROWD DISPERSED

After more than four hours of milling around and jeering at passing Negro motorists, the crowd was dispersed by police.

Sgt. J. E. McDonald said that three men were charged with loitering. They were identified as Floyd Bearden, Robert Bradshaw and David A. Rollings, all of the Birmingham area.

They were freed on $50 bond each for trial in Recorder's Court at 10 a.m. Thursday.

Public Safety Commissioner [illegible] issued a stern [illegible] so-called "outsiders" [illegible] from city schools; [illegible] and everybody—especially outsiders—to help keep segregation in Birmingham schools," he said.

Connor said that Patrolman R. C. Casey was struck by an unidentified man while directing a crowd at Phillips. He was not hurt seriously.

John Brand, 16-year-old Phillips freshman, suffered a cut over his left eye. He said he was struck by a brick thrown by a young Negro.

Brand told officers he was in a group of Phillips students when four young Negroes started across the street toward them. He said the Negroes ran when the white students started toward them, but one of the Negroes threw a brick which struck Brand.

Shuttlesworth and parents of four Negro children are attacking Alabama's school placement law, which was designed to preserve racial segregation in public schools.

Arson ruled out in Brighton fire

BESSEMER, Ala., Sept. 10—Arson has been ruled out in a fire which caused $50,000 damage Friday night to Brighton High School for Negroes.

State Fire Marshal Tom Hall said he has ruled the blaze accidental after an investigation conducted by him, Assistant Sheriff [illegible] and Deputy [illegible].

Hall said the investigation showed that the fire was not deliberately set and that it was apparently caused by defective wiring.

The state fire marshal entered the investigation at the request of the sheriff's office after rumors of possible arson

Pupil transfer case decision here delayed

The Birmingham Board of Education Friday heard the appeal of a fifth-grade student who wished to transfer from Banks to Woodlawn High School, but rendered no decision.

The hearing on an appeal by Carole Elaine Wortham was the first to be held here under rules set up by 1957 revisions of the School Placement Law.

Carole and her parents, Mr. and Mrs. T. Guy Wortham of 727 80th-st. s, are appealing a decision by Dr. L. Frazer Banks, superintendent of education, who denied her original application for transfer.

Ormond Somerville, attorney for the board, said that if all members had been present, a decision could have been rendered on the spot.

WITH ONE MEMBER absent, however, statements were made for the record by the Worthams, giving their reasons for seeking the transfer.

Additional statements by Dr. Banks and Sellers Stough, assistant superintendent in charge of high schools, giving their reasons for denying the application, also were read into the record.

T. R. BROOM, president of the board, said the record would be reviewed, and the Worthams would be notified of the board's decision by mail.

In other business, the board authorized transfer of a $100,000 allocation from two Negro schools to two others.

The money originally had been allocated to Cameron and Lane Schools. Instead, $75 000 will be used to construct new classrooms at Shields School and the remainder will be used in renovations at Lewis School.

Two Negroes' transfer bids turned down

Parents of two more Negro students seeking transfer to white schools today were notified by Dr. L. Frazer Banks, superintendent of Birmingham schools, that their applications have been denied.

Dr. Banks said he sent letters denying the applications to Mr. and Mrs. Frank E. Johnson Sr., parents of Frank Johnson Jr., 17, of 2515 Third-av. s, and to Mr. and Mrs. Vann English, parents of Carolyn English, 14, of 804 46th-st, n.

These new rejections bring to nine the total applications for transfer of Negro students the superintendent of education has denied in seven days.

Last Monday Dr. Banks sent letters to parents of seven other Negro children denying their applications for admission to white schools.

One was rejected because the applicant was under school age. The other six were rejected on the grounds that pupil assignments for the year had been made before the applications were entered and that no "special circumstances" had been shown to justify transfer.

AT THE TIME, the applications of Frank Johnson Jr. and Carolyn English were incomplete.

Subsequently, Dr. Banks' office said, the remaining two students completed their application forms and submitted them for investigation and consideration of the superintendent's office.

The Johnson youth, a senior at Ullman High School, is seeking transfer to Phillips.

The English girl was graduated from Kingston Elementary School at mid-term and is a freshman at Ullman. She is seeking transfer to Woodlawn.

THE WORDING of the letters sent today was almost identical to that of the letters sent to the parents of the other students last week.

The letters to the Johnsons and Vanns stated:

"Your application . . . was received Jan. 30, 1959, after teacher and pupil assignments had been completed and classes organized.

"Our study of the reports from the guidance department and our investigation in connection with the application have not revealed any special benefits which this child would receive from such a transfer now, or other extraordinary circumstances justifying the granting of said application at this time, and it is accordingly denied."

Applications filed here—

Eight Negro children ask transfer to white schools

Eight Birmingham Negro children have asked Birmingham's Board of Education to transfer them from their present schools to white schools.

Birmingham Superintendent of Education Frazer Banks said today that applications had been filed for transfer from Negro schools to Graymont Elementary School and Phillips High School.

Educational observers construed the action as a direct attempt to test Alabama's school placement law.

FIVE OF THE CHILDREN applying for transfer, Dr. Banks said, were parties to a suit which resulted in a U. S. Supreme Court ruling that the Alabama placement law is constitutional on its face, but could be unconstitutional in its application.

Three children of the Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth, Negro integration leader, are among those seeking enrollment in white schools.

"We're going to see how they apply it (the placement law)," Shuttlesworth said.

The 1957 placement law gives local school boards broad authority in assigning students to classes. School authorities may consider not only scholastic ability but temperament, family background and the effect enrollment of a student might have upon the school and community.

WHEN THEY FILED their previous applications, the Negroes did nit wait until school authorities completed processing them under provisions of the placement law. They went into Federal Court with the contention that the law was unconstitutional and should be thrown out. They lost that suit.

Shuttlesworth was beaten by angry white men when he attempted to enroll several Negro children at Phillips in the Fall of 1957.

Dr. Banks said the children will receive placement law tests as soon as dates for them can be arranged with the guidance department.

Those seeking enrollment at Graymont and Phillips, the school official said, are:

Floyd D. Armstrong, not now a student; Dwight E. Armstrong, Wilkerson first grade; James Armstrong Jr., Wilkerson third, and Denie Armstrong, Wilkerson fourth, children of James Armstrong, 227 9th Court, West; all seeking enrollment at Graymont.

FRANK JOHNSON JR., Ullman 12th, son of Frank Johnson Sr., 2515 Third-av, s; seeking enrollment at Phillips.

Ruby Fredericka Shuttlesworth, Parker second semester; Patricia Shuttlesworth, Parker fifth semester, and Fred Lee Shuttlesworth, Parker first semester; children of the Rev. Shuttlesworth; seeking enrollment at Phillips.

The Shuttlesworth children and Denise and James Armstrong Jr. were parties to the suit.

Fire destroys Negro school near Bessemer

BESSEMER, Ala., March 17—Residents of an area near here helpless without any type of fire-fighting equipment, watched Academy Junior High School for Negroes burn last night.

THE SIX-ROOM frame building was the school for 200 students in the first nine grades.

Principal William Hazierly said he was to confer today with county school officials to determine a temporary location for classes.

Hazierly said from all indications, the fire started in a corner of the building. He said the cause had not been determined.

The loss was estimated at about $35,000.

LAST NIGHT'S fire marked the second Jefferson County school loss within a week. One wing of the Brighton Elementary School for Negroes were destroyed by fire last Thursday night.

Jackson Negro Class Suspended En Masse

GROVE HILL, Ala. (AP) — The entire senior class has been suspended from a new Negro high school in Jackson, Ala., for what a school official described as refusal to participate in classroom work.

The county education superintendent, Forest Lee Mathews, said Friday night that the 46-member class organized a "big bopper" society which intended to disrupt the function of the school.

He said the 33 boys and 13 girls are out of school "until they can convince me and the Clarke County Board of Education that they are willing to abide by the public school regulations that apply to all students white or colored alike."

He said he couldn't "read any racial issue or anything like that into" the trouble.

Mathews said that after Principal James Nichols of the Harper High School reported the activities he investigated and found that the seniors "got the idea they didn't have to participate in class exercises at all, take orders from anyone and that they would disrupt functions of the school in every way they could.

"That left but one course of action—that was to suspend the entire class."

"BIG BOPPER" CLUB

Nichols said members of the "big bopper" club sat in classrooms with arms folded and refused to answer question. They also refused to eat in the school cafeteria, he said.

The principal, a Negro, quoted letters taken from club members as saying:

"I hereby solemnly swear by all my ability and power to erupt (sic) the entire student body of the school. I intend to overthrow the function of the school—as my power is unlimited. And I defy anyone who interferes with my plans."

The letters were signed "Big Bopper."

Nichols said the group adopted a uniform of blue jeans, red shirts, one suspender over the shoulder and one under the arm and a red patch on one leg of the jeans.

The school is the largest of four Negro high schools in this south Alabama county. It has an enrollment of 650.

Mathews said, "The trouble was headed by a group of juvenile delinquents, reform school graduates and ex-jailbirds."

Dr. L. Frazer Banks Styled As "A God-Sent Superintendent"

By MARCEL HOPSON

Dr. L. Frazer Banks, retiring superintendent of Birmingham Public Schools, was described as "A God-sent superintendent" in praise heaped upon him by graduating orators and faculty members and pupils of all negro-attending high and elementary schools in the system at Parker High School's 90th Commencement Exercises in the school's auditorium, Friday night, May 29.

Eight of Parker High's 319 graduating seniors appeared as orators and depicted vividly Dr. Banks' 17 years as superintendent as "An Era of Progress and Achievement for the Birmingham Public Schools, 1942-1959."

Miss Willa Ginwright, giving Dr. Banks credit for the progress and growth of education in Birmingham, cited the newer and better buildings, newer, better and more instructional facilities.

Miss Birdie Dardy cited the provision of more space for educational, non-educational and miscellaneous facilities and equipment at the schools.

She cited the new library built in 1952, new biology laboratory in 1953; new wing and class rooms in 1957; new gymnasiums at Parker High, Ullman High, and Western High schools, the auditorium at Ullman; and additional classrooms and auditoriums at Tuggle's and Lincoln Schools. It was said that over 22 million dollars were spent for these facilities.

It was also pointed out that only 70 public schools opened their doors in 1942, but in 1959, 101 public schools were available for students in Birmingham.

Miss Earnestine Jeffries reported that 22.10 percent of the teachers in the Negro-attending schools have the master's degree. Basic salaries are $250 per month, and an additional $10 for master's degree - holding teachers. There were 35.6 pupils per classroom in 1945, but there are only 29.7 pupils in each classroom in 1959.

Miss Jacquelwyn Willis, citing the new areas of education adopted, pointed out new and more emphasis placed on speech therapy for children with speech impediments; expanded spastic and auditorium programs; and new trained specialized workers such as guidance counselers, auditorium teachers, attendance workers and spastic teachers.

Miss Mary Nelson explained the expansion of the course of study in relations to the provision for ninth and tenth grade students, classes in special languages such as French, Spanish and Latin, the latter if enough students applied; expanded subjects in Algebra, Bookkeeping, and Speaking.

She pointed out that these "enriched courses" would enable students of Parker High to try and qualify for studies at any higher institution of learning in the United States. She also pointed out that all high schools, since Dr. Banks took office 17 years ago, have been accredited by the various state and national educational bodies.

Arlee Russell, class president, serving as master of ceremonies, repoiced over the fact that in recent years, Parker High students have participated in more national educational tests than at any other time.

Miss Edith Eddleman, speaking on harmonious and public relations, cited the success of the school's athletic program; schools' participation in the YMCA, YWCA and Jefferson County Safety Council programs.

Arthur J. Hanes, president of Birmingham Board of Education, declared that 'Equal education should be provided for every boy and girl, regardless of whatever the section or location of the community in which they live."

A total of 604 Negro candidates were among the 1,653 Birmingham high school graduates.

Principal R. C. Johnson assisted Dr. Banks in presenting the diplomas.

THREE ATHLETIC SCHOLARS

Three outstanding Parker High athletes were among 14 graduates receiving scholarship awards.

Athletes receiving full four-year tuiton scholarships were state track king Willie Westbrooks, Florida A. and M. University; Birmingham World 1958 All-County First Football Team center Willie Clyde Jones, Miles Colege ;and Birmingham World 1958-59 All-County Second Basketball Team forward Melvin Carter, Tuskegee Institute.

Other recipients were Edith Eddleman, $2,000.00 scholarship to Valparaiso University; Laura Brown, all-expense scholarship for Summer Study At Dillard University, with opportunity to win Fall scholarship; Cedric Johnson and Geraldine Ellen, $1,299 and $1,000 scholarships, respectively, to Knoxville College; Robert Malone, Jr., all-expense scholarship for Summer Study at Morehouse College, with opportunity to win Fall scholarship; Jacquelwyn Willis, a $50 omega Psi Phi Fraternity scholarship for being a successful participant in a competitive examination given by the fraternity; Estrelta Holloway and Nona Rae Norman, both tuition scholarships to Spelman College; and Charlie Smiley, Thomas Stewart and Eunice Brown, each $150 scholarships to Stillman College.

At Friday exercises—

City Negro highs to graduate 458

Birmingham Public School System's three Negro high schools will graduate 458 seniors at exercises at 7:30 p.m. Friday.

This makes a total of 1007—third largest mid-term graduation class in the history of city schools — thanks to receive diplomas this week. Six white high schools graduate 549 seniors Thursday night.

New Negro High School Is Started In Pickens

Special to The Post-Herald

ALICEVILLE, Jan. 19—A new high school for the Negro population of this end of Pickens County was put to use this week.

About 400 pupils are attending classes in the building, known as Summerville Industrial High School.

The school is located in the northwest section of town on the road to Columbus, Miss., and is near the Negro elementary school and Tilly Hamlet, housing project for Negroes.

According to H. C. Elmore, county superintendent of education, Summerville High has 16 class rooms, a vocational shop, a combination auditorium, lunch room and gymnasium.

It is constructed of block and brick, has tile floors and central heating. The auditorium has hardwood floors.

Bond & Bond of Montgomery was the architectural firm and Lynn H. Blair of Alexander City was the contractor. Construction cost was $182,000.

Summerville Industrial High School replaces the old school located about five miles south of town.

O. J. Brooks i sprincipal. The new school is located within the city limits and has city water, natural gas, electricity and sanitary facilities.

The school was financed by district and county taxes.

School Reinstates 36 Negro Students

Ten Of Alabama Class Are Still Suspended

JACKSON, Ala., March 18.—(AP) — The majority of the members of a suspended Negro senior high school class were reinstated Wednesday.

Clarke County Supt. Forest Lee Methews said he reinstated 36 of the class of 46 after a meeting of the county board of education.

The entire senior class of the Harper High School for Negroes was suspended March 5 because of the activities of a group named the "Big Bopper." School officials said members of the group disrupted classroom operations by refusing to answer questions of teachers and by engaging in other activities.

Mr. Mathews had said earlier that ringleaders of the group will be permanently expelled. He said today that any such action will be taken at the meeting of the board next week.

The school superintendent said the reinstated students and their parents pledged that there would be no further such action.

County High Schools Aided By Funds; Students Tested

Macon County is receiving $4,171 in federal funds from the 1958 National Defense Education Act, according to Superintendent C. A. Pruitt. This sum, to be matched by the Macon County Board of Education, makes a total of 8,342 which is being used in the larger high schools of the county to strengthen science, math and modern foreign language instruction.

Mr. Pruitt stated that some much-needed visual and hearing aid equipment is now on order along with permanent-type material and equipment for the science labs of the schools.

Another section of the above act provides programs of testing and guidance counseling in secondary schools. Between April 9th and April 22nd, all the pupils of the 8th, 9th and 11th grades of Macon County schools were given tests in mental maturity and achievement tests in language, reading and math.

The information gained through these tests will be permanent records kept in the superintendent's office for future valuable use. Teachers and sponsors of the program believe it will be most useful in guidance work and counseling with students.

Little Rock Plans New Bid to Courts

By LLOYD HOLBECK,
United Press International.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Jan. 21.—The Little Rock School Board decided today to ask Federal District Court to allow it to open the city's four closed public high schools on a segregated basis by Jan. 26 and let the board assume full responsibility of the schools.

It promised to come up with some plan to operate the schools under decisions of the U.S. Supreme Court not later than Aug. 15. The board did not indicate if the plan would be for operation of the schools on an integrated basis.

The action was in reply to an order by Federal District Judge John E. Miller to develop a plan within 30 days to operate the schools integrated.

The state president of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People immediately objected to the board's plan.

"It certainly would not be acceptable," said Mrs. L. C. Bates. "We would fight it in court."

The board said calmness could be restored only by:

● Permitting the district to operate all closed schools on a segregated basis;

● Permitting the board to ask Gov. Faubus to return the closed schools to its jurisdiction;

● Permitting the board to open and operate the schools segregated at the earliest possible time—Jan. 26, the date of the start of the next school term.

The action was the first by the board that was elected Dec. 6 to replace the old school board which had resigned en masse the month before. The six-member board is equally divided between outspoken segregationists and moderates. Seating unconstitutional, Negroes began sitting where they desired.

In almost all cases, Negroes chose to sit where they were accustomed to being—in the rear section.

Several trolleys were sighted, however, with Negroes occupying front seats and white passengers the middle of rear sections.

A spokesman for the Atlanta Transit Co. said there had been no incidents.

LITTLE ROCK ASKS SCHOOL REOPENING

Board's Plea to U. S. Court Calls for Segregation Pending a New Plan

Special to The New York Times.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Jan. 2—The Little Rock school board asked Federal District Court today to allow it to reopen the city's four closed high schools Monday on a racially segregated basis.

However, Federal Judge John E. Miller said at Fort Smith that he doubted that he could conduct a hearing on the board's request this week or next. He said it might be the first week of February before he could hear it.

The board promised in its request to submit by Aug. 15 its own plan to meet the integration requirements of the United States Supreme Court.

If Judge Miller grants the request, it will do away with the school district's "gradual integration" plan and put the district where it was in 1955, before the first plan was adopted.

N.A.A.C.P. Attacks Plans

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People immediately called the request unreasonable. Mrs. L. C. Bates, state president of the N.A.A.C.P. said she did not think the board was acting "in good faith."

The N.A.A.C.P. has expressed its dislike even for the old plan, which began with integration on the high school level in 1957 and was to continue through the other grades by 1963. Nine Negroes attended Central High School in 1957-58, but the plan was halted by the closing of the city's high schools.

The school board's proposal was its response to Judge Miller's action Jan. 10. On that day he ordered the board to report to him within thirty days on steps taken or proposed to integrate its schools.

Ed I. McKinley Jr., president of the board, said the board would hire "experts in the field of educational surveys" to help draft a plan that would be acceptable "to both the court and the people."

Mr. McKinley said he had talked with Gov. Orval E. Faubus, who closed the high schools last September. He said the Governor would probably return the schools to the board's jurisdiction if Judge Miller granted the request.

Little Rock School Board Plea Denied

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP)—A federal judge refused Tuesday to permit the reopening of Little Rock's closed public high schools on a temporarily segregated basis.

U.S. Dist. Judge John E. Miller's ruling left the tangled legal situation here stalemated at least until the constitutionality of Arkansas' anti-integration laws is decided.

School Board President Ed. I. Kinley Jr. said the refusal of the board's request killed all hopes of reopening the high schools this term, either segregated or integrated. They were shut by Gov. Orval E. Faubus in September before classes began.

STALMATE PLAN

The board sought to reopen the schools segregated while working out a new integration plan to replace one which caused Faubus to shut the schools. The new plan would have been submitted to the court by Aug. 15.

Attorneys for the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People and the U.S. Justice Department opposed the board's proposal.

In turning down the board's request, Judge Miller added: "The court knows of no affirmative steps that the board might take toward the opening of the closed schools on an integrated basis so long as the act of the General Assembly of Arkansas under which the governor issued his proclamation closing the schools is in effect."

Arkansas Senate OK's Broadening Of Pupil Aid Act

Measure Allows Transfer Of Funds Regardless Of Integration Issue

AMENDS FAUBUS PLAN

Bennett Proposal To Permit Any Business To Choose Its Own Customers Given House Approval

By KENNETH JOHNSON
From The Commercial Appeal Little Rock Bureau

LITTLE ROCK, Feb. 19.—The Arkansas Senate approved without debate Thursday a bill amending one of the anti-integration acts sponsored by Gov. Orval Faubus in the August special session. It concerned financial aid to students caught in an integration dispute.

Introduced by Senator J. Lee Bearden apparently with endorsement of the Governor himself, the bill was another of the "follow-up" proposals in the regular session to broaden some of the legislation voted in the August special assembly.

Measure's Provisions

The proposal would direct transfer of state aid from one district to another, regardless of whether an integrated school had been closed and whenever pupils transfer to another district to escape the impact of integration.

The special session measure, now Act Five, had authorized transfer of state funds to another district only if schools had been closed, as in the Little Rock situation. The transferred funds would accrue to a district which took in pupils from the integration-affected schools.

House action awaits on Senator Bearden's measure.

Meanwhile, the House gave approval to a segregation proposal drafted by Atty. Gen. Bruce Bennett and introduced by Representatives O. P. Hammons of Forrest City and Clarke Kinney of Hughes. The measure authorizes any place of business in Arkansas to choose its own customers. The bill would give a proprietor authority to refuse service to a customer.

Mr. Hammons, calling the bill up for passage, said it was both noncontroversial and simple. The House approved it 83-0. Senate action must yet be taken.

Co-Habitation Action

The Senate earlier had given final approval to a bill introduced by Representative Kinney, re-defining the law on illegal co-habitation.

Senator Clarence E. Bell of Parkin called up that measure and got 31-0 passage.

Other floor action in the two houses included Senate adoption of a measure authorizing travel of oversize trailers on Arkansas highways under special permit. Introduced by Senator Morrell Gathright of Pine Bluff, it would require any trailer over eight feet wide to have a special permit.

Over objections of Senator Robert Hays Williams of Russellville, that measure was adopted 30-1, with House action yet to come.

New Step Urged Against Mixing

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP)—A Little Rock school board member who has advocated a "showdown" with the federal government over integration of schools has made a new proposal.

Traffic Judge R. W. Laster proposed that an additional clause be added to contracts of teachers in the Little Rock system, cancelling the contracts if the schools should be integrated.

The contracts are scheduled to be renewed in April or May.

Laster, in a statement, suggested that a clause be written by an agreement between the into all teaching contracts where-school board and teachers would be made that if integration came the pacts would be voided.

"With this type of agreement, no school in this district could be integrated by force of the federal government and still have the teachers conduct classes," Laster said.

He said the agreement would violate no state or federal law.

Laster earlier had called for Gov. Orval E. Faubus to return control of the four closed Little Rock High schools to the school board for reopening on a segregated basis. He proposed that the federal court order to integrate the schools simply be ignored "and let the devil take the hindmost."

Anti-Integration Package Sent Arkansas Lawmakers

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP)—A package of 15 anti-integration bills authored by Atty. Gen. Bruce Bennett was introduced Wednesday in the Arkansas House.

One measure is modeled on the Alabama pupil placement law which has been upheld on its face by the U.S. Supreme Court.

Several of the bills would reenact laws passed with Bennet's sponsorship in the August, 1958, special session of the legislature. Why they were re-introduced was not explained.

Among new measures are bills to make in unlawful to encourage disobedience of any law of the state of Arkansas or non-conformance with established traditions of the state.

This apparently would make it illegal for any resident to encourage integration.

Another bill would authorize the state or any of its political subdivisions to sell or lease any public park or facility.

This was designed to clear the way for disposal of such facilities in case an integration order is issued against them.

One bill would prohibit hiring by the state or any county or municipality of any member of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People.

Direct Grants

Faubus Comes Up With Pupil Pay

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — (UPI) — Gov. Orval Faubus revealed Monday the latest gambit in his fight against integration — a proposed state law to give state money to students who don't want to attend integrated schools.

Faubus said a bill to make such a law will be introduced this week in the Legislature. He predicted it can not be overturned by any court.

Faubus said that under the plan, any student could receive a direct grant from the state for educational purposes. The money could be spent for public or private schools.

FAUBUS

The governor closed Little Rock's four public high schools Sept. 12 to block court-ordered integration. They have never opened.

Faubus said his plan will help private schools particularly but said it does not mean abolition of the public school system, since the tuition can be used by the student in any other school district.

Race will not be mentioned in the measure.

The governor said he does not think the courts can touch the proposed law.

Little Rock Blame Laid To Congress

WASHINGTON — (UPI) — A spokesman for the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith said Friday that Congress helped bring on the Little Rock school crisis by failing to enact a stronger civil rights bill in 1957.

Herman Edelsberg, testifying before the Senate constitutional rights subcommittee, said it was important that Congress not repeat the mistake in writing new civil rights laws.

"It is now clear that much of the trouble in Little Rock stemmed from local miscalculation regarding the interest, responsibility and determination of the federal government to enforce the law laid down by its courts," he said.

He said the elimination by Congress of the controversial Title III section of the 1957 civil rights law "contributed to this unfortunate miscalculation."

Title III would have authorized the attorney general to seek Federal Court injunctions to halt violations of civil rights. Persons violating such court orders ordinarily would not receive jury trials.

Edelsberg was one of a half-dozen witnesses testifying before the subcommittee on new civil rights proposals.

Little Rock May Be Licked Daisy Says

Crusader Chicago Ill.
Sat. 8-15-59

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — Police were on the alert for the second day in a row Thursday as four Negro children headed back to school with their white classmates after police bashed heads the day before to break up a parade of 200 white segregationists men, women and children near Central High School where integrated classes opened.

Mrs. L. C. Bates, president of the Little Rock NAACP branch, said if the integration attempt goes through the weekend, "we've got it licked."

Coming from a rally at the state capital where they were addressed by Gov. Orval Faubus, the paraders shouted "Cowards," at the police and as a result, 23 of them were swept off to jail.

Segregationists leader complained about the use of police nightsticks and fire hoses to disperse the mob.

Two Negroes went to Central High on Wednesday, but only Jefferson Thomas, 16, a veteran of the 1957 troop-guarded integration program at Central, will remain.

The other, Elizabeth Eckford, one of the nine Negroes enrolled at Central in 1957, has gained enough credits through correspondence to enter college. She went Wednesday to Central to consult with her counsellor.

Thomas said the students "did not do anything or say anything" and thought their attitude was changing. Three Negro girls, Effie Jones, 17, and Estelle Thompson and Elsie Robinson, both 16, returned to classes at Hall High "Everything was OK," Elsia declared.

Four Negroes Enter School At Little Rock

Chicago Ill. Defender
Sat. 8-15-59

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — Four Negroes strolled calmly to and from classes at two high schools Friday as Little Rock ended its third day of integration.

Police kept an eye on the situation, but no protests were heard, no taunts or insults directed at the Negroes.

Gov. Orval E. Faubus indicated Friday, for the first time, that he might use state police and troops if there are further integration disorders. Previously, the governor said emphatically he would never use his powers to enforce integration.

At Hall High School, in a fashionable residential area, three Negro girls entered and left without a sign of resentment. Effie Jones, Estella Thompson and Elsie Robinson were hardly noticed.

The situation was the same at Central, where 16-year-old Jefferson Thomas is the only Negro student.

Faubus told a news conference he had been prepared to send state police and Arkansas National Guardsmen into action Wednesday if local authorities had been unable to quell a segregationist demonstration.

Three More Suits Are Filed Against Little Rock Chief

Pittsburgh Courier
Charleston S.C.
Sat. 8-15-59
Bus. 11-17-56

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — Three civil rights lawsuits growing out of the racial controversy were filed against Police Chief Gene Smith Monday. They totaled $200,000.

That made a half million dollars in such suits now pending against Smith in U.S. District Court.

Like all except one of the previous cases, Monday's suits arose from a segregationist demonstration which Smith and his men broke up near Central High School Aug. 12, when the school opened with limited integration.

J. D. Bass, 63, of Pine Bluff, Ark., said an American flag he was carrying in the march toward the school was taken from him. Then, he said, he was taken into custody without cause and held several hours without being allowed to see a lawyer or use a telephone. He asked $50,000.

Glenn M. Paul of Little Rock sued for $100,000, saying his two daughters, Glenna, 16, and Marilyn, 14, were doused with water from firemen's hose used against the demonstrators, then detained and "handled as though they were hardened criminals."

Similar allegations were contained in a suit for $50,000 by Mrs. C. M. Hollingshead. She said her son, Larry Wayne Buster, 12, was picked up at the scene of the demonstration.

Five similar suits, each seeking $50,000, had been filed previously.

In addition, E. A. Lauderdale, Little Rock segregationist leader, is suing Smith for $50,000 for alleged violation of his civil rights in his arrest in connection with three integration-linked bombings Sept. 7.

Faubus Vetoes Bill To Reopen Closed Schools

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — Gov. Orval E. Faubus Tuesday vetoed a bill which would have automatically reopened Little Rock's closed public high schools in September.

Faubus said the bill would have weakened his school closing power under an anti-integretion act passed by a special session of the state legislature last summer.

The school opening bill was introduced in the Senate in February with the backing of the entire Pulaski County (Little Rock) delegation. At the time, Faubus said he didn't object to the bill.

Under terms of the measure, control of the closed schools would have been returned to the Little Rock School Board. The board would have had to open the schools under the state's pupil assignment law, which provides for students to be assigned to particular schools for a variety of reasons.

The bill wouldn't have prevented the governor from closing the schools again.

Board Member Resigns Post In Little Rock

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — A newly-appointed member to the Little Rock school board quit his post Monday night, saying he was unqualified to serve.

H. L. Hubbard said in a statement that he had discovered since his appointment last week that he was ineligible to serve. He did not elaborate.

Board members are required to own personal property in the district in which they serve and to hold a poll tax receipt. Hubbard possibly lacked one of these qualifications.

Hubbard, B. Frank Mackey and J. H. Cottrell were named to the board to replace three segregationist members who were recalled by voters in an election May 5.

Brief Attacks Proposed School Closing

U.S. Requests Federal Court To Invalidate 'Evasive' Arkansas Laws

BY KENNETH JOHNSON

From The Commercial Appeal Little Rock Bureau

LITTLE ROCK, April 28. — The Justice Department in a 29-page brief filed here Thursday blasted Arkansas' school closing law and a companion measure as "obviously evasive" laws to circumvent court integration orders.

The brief was filed in advance of the scheduled May 4 hearing here at which a three-judge Federal panel is scheduled to rule on validity of the school closing laws.

The measure, known as Act 4, as well as an act authorizing transfer of funds from an integrated district, are both unconstitutional, the Government brief argued.

Wants Laws Voided

The brief, which bore the signature of Atty. Gen. William Rogers, urged the court to promptly invalidate both laws. A special legislative session, called by Gov. Orval Faubus, adopted the two laws at his recommendation. He invoked Act 4 in closing the four high schools here last fall, when courts again ordered that integration must proceed.

The Justice Department brief noted that from the wording of the act, it was clear the only schools that would have been, or would be, closed under its provisions are those that are desegregated or about to be desegregated.

The brief argued that Governor Faubus has had only the flimsiest evidence to support his claims that he acted in order to preserve the public peace and order. The Supreme Court in upholding the integration order here disposed of that argument long ago, the Justice Department argued.

Conditions Inadequate

"If the conditions upon which the Governor relies were legally inadequate to sustain a suspension of desegregation, they obviously are equally inadequate to sustain the closing of the schools.

"Now, as then, it is the duty of the state of Arkansas to deal with violence, not to rely upon it so as to deny constitutional rights."

Not only are Negroes' constitutional rights being denied, but white patrons also are suffering financially from the school closing and fund transfer laws, the Government argued.

School Board Challenges Negroes' Suit

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., April 23 (AP) — The Dollarway School Board filed a strongly worded challenge in United States District Court here against a suit seeking desegregation of Dollarway High School near Pine Bluff.

Board attorneys yesterday asked a summary judgment in favor of the defendants. This would amount to dismissal of the suit.

The Board also asked that a three-judge Federal court, already assigned to hear the case May 4, be dissolved as the plaintiffs had not stated a Federal question "of substance."

In a brief accompanying the motions, the Board said three Negro students, on whose behalf the suit was filed, had not exhausted administrative remedies available to them under the Arkansas Pupil Placement Act of 1958.

The three are seeking to enroll in the all-white Dollarway High School. They now attend the Townsend Park High School for Negroes. The two schools are the only ones operated by the Dollarway Board. Each has about 1200 students.

"The plaintiffs apparently assume that as a result of the Brown decisions (U. S. Supreme Court desegregation decisions), color is a magic key that automatically unlocks all entrance doors to public schools and that color ipso facto gives the child or its parents an unbridled discretion in the matter of choice of schools."

The Board said that in its reading of the Brown decisions it could not find "any pronouncement that the Negro is to be permitted to run rampant through the Federal courts, ignoring traditional rules of procedure and provisions for appellate review, and to drag with him through the courts and into bankruptcy any school district that he capriciously selects."

No Penalty Attached To Little Rock Action

CHICAGO, April 23 (AP) T. H. Broad, president of the North Central Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools, says the withdrawa of three Little Rock, Ark., high schools from the Association "involved nothing punitive."

In a locally telecast program on Station WNBQ, Broad was asked last night whether the voluntary withdrawal, requested by the NCA Arkansas State Committee, involved penalties for Central, Hall and Horace Mann schools. He said it did not.

3 Negroes File U.S. Appeals Against Arkansas School

ST. LOUIS (AP) — The three Negro pupils involved in the integration furor in the Dollarway, Ark., school district filed appeals of their own Tuesday with the U. S. Eight Circuit Court of Appeals.

Earlier in the day the court set Monday for arguments on alternative motions by the Dollarway district, which is trying to keep the Negroes out of its all-white school when classes resume Sept. 8.

The cross appeal in the names of Ernestine Dove, 16, James Edward Warfield, 13, and Corliss Smith, 12, opposes a move by the school district to gain a stay of judgment on the integration order signed by federal district Judge Axel J. Beck.

The pupils' notice received in the mail also contained an appeal from that portion of Judge Beck's integration order which ruled that the Arkansas pupil enrollment act of 1956 and the Arkansas pupil assignment act of 1959 were constitutional on their face.

Opponents of the acts have claimed that they restrict the number of Negro pupils in white high schools and slow down integration by providing that each case be considered individually.

Earlier in the month when Judge Beck handed down his ruling in the Dollarway case the Elk Point, S. D., jurist noted that the acts were used by a school board as "a cover up to conceal its anti-racial, pro-racial segregationist attitude."

The Dollarway district earlier in the day petitioned the court of appeals to advance to its September docket an appeal from Judge Beck's integration order or to grant a stay of judgment on the order.

If a stay were granted, the three Negroes could be kept out of the school pending final determination of the school district's appeal.

The appeals and cross appeals will be heard Monday along with a brief on the merits of the case to be offered by Atty. Gen. Bruce Bennett of Arkansas.

"Your Welcome Has Shown to Us What It Means to Be An American"

These were the words of Carolyn Jean Porter, one of the 700 odd displaced American Negro students of Little Rock, when she spoke to her graduating class of 90 students and an audience of several thousands. Carolyn was not speaking to Arkansans and neither was she talking to an integrated graduation class in Little Rock, because under the regime of Orval E. Faubus, NO Negro children and very few whites will ever get the experience of "What It Means to Be An American."

Carolyn was speaking to people in Connecticut where she and Essie Beatrice Knowles graduated from the Housatonic Valley Regional high school in Falls Village, Friday night with honors in a democratic and Christian atmosphere far beyond the fondest dreams of their imagination.

Carolyn and Essie were chosen by Mrs. L. C. Bates for their academic achievements and high standards of deportment, when a white friend Mrs. Howard Lewis Aller of Connecticut asked Mrs. Bates to let her educate two of the Negro students, whom Faubus had locked out of the high schools. Mrs. Allen wanted to demonstrate to the Negro students that Christianity and democracy did exist in this country.

Carolyn is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Porter and Essie is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. R. B. Knowles. While these young high school students were displaced in Little Rock by Arkansas's chief executive ,they were made citizens in Lakeville, Conn. and accepted not only, in the educational circle, but participated in the civic, social and religious activiti They both were members of one of the leading churches in the city and became members of the interracial choir. 'Rather Be Dumb Than To Study With A...

By BERNIE BROWN

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — (UPI)— Under flying confederate flags, 35 defiant teen-agers who don't want to go to school with Negroes, washed cars Friday trying to raise enough money to re-open their bankrupt, private, segregated school.

The students attended T. J. Raney High school last year, which was Gov. Orval Faubus' answer to Supreme Court integration orders. Faubus closed all four of Little Rock's public high schools.

But last Monday, Dr. Thomas J. Raney, president of the Little Rock private school corporation and for whom the school was named, announced the school had run out of money and would not re-open this Fall.

$1.50 A CAR

Dedicated segregationists from all over the world had donated money for the school's operation.

The students washed cars for $1.50. The fact that it would take at least $400,000 to get the school re-opened, did not seem to dampen the students' spirits.

"We aren't trying to raise the whole amount," said Sharon Morris, 15, "We just want to get a fund going so we can get our school open again."

RATHER NOT

Most of the students said they would rather not attend any school if the only choice was to attend classes with Negroes.

"I would rather be stupid than go to school with a nigger," said a blonde girl whose red shorts were still soaked with water from washing a car.

Little Rock's four high schools are scheduled to open next Wednesday, almost a month ahead of schedule. And two of the schools are scheduled to admit Negroes.

PARENTS MAY ACT

"Listen, I was there when the riots happened in 1957," said a boy wearing glasses, "and I don't want to be there this year."

One student said that if Raney high doesn't open most students in the group would not attend any integrated schools unless their "parents make us."

"Some of the kids have to go back to Central and Hall high (the two schools scheduled to admit Negroes) this year because their folks got heavy-hearted and made them go," said one youth.

Little Rock Negro Says Classmates Friendlier Now

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP)—The silence barrier has been broken for Jefferson Thomas, the only Negro among 1,400 white students at Central High School.

"Lately it has begun feeling more friendly inside," Thomas said Friday at the end of the first full week of classes. He had walked out of school alongside a white boy. They appeared to be chatting amiably.

Thomas said he had known the white youth in 1957, when Thomas and eight other Negroes attended Central through a cordon of federal troops.

It was the first time a white student had spoken to him outside of school, he said. Other white students paid them no attention.

Little Rock High Silence Barrier Reported Cracked

Little Rock, Ark., Aug. 21 (AP) — Jefferson Thomas has cracked the silence barrier at Central High School.

The only Negro among 1,400 white students in the school, Thomas said Friday that "lately it has begun feeling more friendly inside." He said some of the white students are speaking to him and acting more friendly.

The 16-year-old senior and a white youth emerged Friday from the school apparently engaged in a friendly chat. Thomas said he and the white boy were talking about classes "and things in general."

It was the first time a white student had spoken to him outside the school, Thomas said.

School Board Control In Little Rock to Stand

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Nov 27 (AP). — Any segregationist hope of getting control of the Little Rock School Board at the approaching school election was killed by the Arkansas Supreme Court yesterday.

The court with one dissent issued a ruling under which only two of the six members of the board will be up for election on December 1.

That nullified a lower court decree that four board members would have had to run.

The board is in disfavor with those favoring a dual school system because it opened the public high schools this fall with limited integration. Their leaders have said they would oppose any board members seeking new terms. Even if candidates favoring racial separation were to be successful they would be in the minority on the board under the Supreme Court ruling.

The Supreme Court held that the term of board member B. Frank Mackey expires this year. That means if Mr. Mackey wants to continue on the board, he will have to run at the school election for a regular three-year term.

Also up for election this year—but not directly involved in the court suit—is the position held by board president Everett Tucker, jr.

Mr. Tucker was elected to a one-year term in December, 1958, when an entire new board was chosen after a former board quit as a result of the integration controversy.

White Youths Reinstates

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — The Little Rock School Board has reinstated 10 white pupils suspended last Friday after a mild demonstration over expanded integration at Central High School.

The pupils and some of their parents met with the board Thursday.

Three other suspended pupils did not attend the hearing and two sent word that they were withdrawing from school. All 13 were involved in the demonstration.

Little Rock 'Submission'

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Feb. 9 (AP)—A committee of citizens, without official status, met yesterday and formulated a 4-point program to help Little Rock's submission to school integration.

James T. Karam, clothier and friend of Gov. Orval E. Faubus, said the program was outlined after a meeting of about a dozen members of the committee, including one Negro, not identified.

The plan called for health tests for students and suspension of those having communicable diseases; achievement tests for all students and grade placement based solely on these tests; the "highest of moral codes" and the segregation of students by sex.

Karam said the committee's total membership of 23 came from organizations that have been involved in the Little Rock dispute but did not have the official sanction of these organizations. He listed the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People as being represented.

Mrs. L. C. Bates, president of the Arkansas chapter of the NAACP, said "no officer or responsible person representing the NAACP has anything to do with the committee."

Karam said the program's aim is to make what he called inevitable integration as desirable as possible for both races. He said it did not advocate integration.

He said the plan will be submitted to the Little Rock School Board after more study, adding:

"We are not working on a plan of integration. But we are a group of people who feel there is no reason to think that Arkansas laws may not be knocked in the head as the Virginia laws were. And we just think we ought not to wait, but ought to come up with some kind of a plan to offer against that day, if and when it comes."

Turns Down Appeal To Open Central

BY LLOYD HOLBECK

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. —(UPI)— U. S. District Judge John E. Miller turned down Tuesday a request of the Little Rock school board that it be allowed to open the city's four closed high schools segregated while it prepares a new plan for integration.

Wiley A. Branton, chief legal counsel of the NAACP in Arkansas, immediately asked for a three-judge federal court to determine if the law Gov. Orval Faubus used to close the schools is constitutional.

The school board wanted to open the schools segregated immediately then be given until Aug. 15 to present a new integration plan to replace the one which led to rioting at Central High school Sept. 23, 1957.

Miller, however, accepted a report from the board which in effect said it could do nothing in the face of four state laws passed by a special legislative session last Aug. and which Faubus used to close the schools.

Judge Miller said that under the gradual integration plan which he approved in 1956 and which was later approved by the U. S. Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals in St. Louis, "all public schools would have to be opened on a non-segregated basis."

Miller said he was conscious that many problems faced a board trying to bring integration to a school.

"If they are unable to operate under that plan, they should not be denied the right to formulate a new plan of operation," he said.

School Superintendent Terrell E. Powell took the stand and said that 1,085 white and Negro students were getting no schooling since Faubus closed the three white and Negro schools to block integration Sept. 12.

Thurgood Marshall, of New York, the NAACP's chief legal counsel, questioned Powell sharply, asking the superintendent if he knew how many students transferred from the Little Rock district were getting an education.

Marshall asked Powell repeatedly if the new plan the board wants to present would be for or against integration.

"We just want time to solve the dilemma we're in," said Powell.

Herschel Friday, Jr., attorney for the school board, argued that children, especially the Negroes were the only ones suffering because of the school closure. He suggested that the Negroes would not be hurt by being segregated.

NEGROES ENROLL AT LITTLE ROCK

No Disturbance Is Created as 5 File Applications to Attend Central High

By CLAUDE SITTON
Special to The New York Times.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., July 21 —Five Negro students were registered today without incident at Central High School.

The police stood by to prevent violence.

The first day of pre-registration, which will continue through Friday, also passed peacefully at the city's three other public high schools.

They are scheduled to open Sept. 8 under a recently reaffirmed Federal Court ruling calling for a continuation of phased desegregation. The city's four high schools were closed last year by Gov. Orval E. Faubus.

Many persons here expect the Governor to attempt to block their reopening. He has said that he might call the Legislature into special session as he did last year, possibly to consider new anti-integration measures.

Restricted to Seniors

Only prospective seniors were enrolled today at Central, Hall High, Technical High and the city's one Negro institution, Horace Mann. Juniors will be registered Wednesday and sophomores Thursday. Applications of those who missed the first three days will be accepted Friday.

Although there were only 429 applicants today, officials did not think this significant. Superintendent Terrence E. Powell said only 60 per cent generally enrolled at pre-registration.

"I believe a lot of students are either out of town or were caught unaware by the short notice," he added. Announcement of pre-registration was made a week ago.

Mr. Powell also said that because of privte, segregated high schools now operating here, he expected Central's senior class to total about 375. Previous classes have had more than 500 students.

4 of 'Little Rock 9'

Four of the Negroes who signed up at Central High were among the original "Little Rock nine." They attended the first year of desegregated classes—1957-58—at the institution under the eyes of Federal troops called in to quell a riotous outbreak.

None of the four appeared at the yellow brick field house on the oak-shaded campus to fill out a brief form, which made no mention of race. Instead, their parents went through the formalities for them.

The fifth, Gloria Gant, entered the building on crutches in the early afternoon, completed the registration process and left in a car driven by a youth who identified himself only as her boy friend.

Hopes to Attend Central

Her mother, Mrs. William Lupo, said later that the girl intended to attend Central if education officials "will let her."

The officials have said that under pupil placement provisions students would not necessarily be assigned to the school at which they register.

Police Chief Eugene G. Smith supervised the policing of the four high schools. He issued a statement yesterday warning that potential trouble makers would be arrested. None appeared.

Those registered by their parents were Melba Patillo, Jefferson Thomas, Elizabeth Eckford and Thalma Mothershed.

Norfolk Assigns Negroes

NORFOLK, Va., July 21 (AP) —Applications of two Negroes for transfer to white or predominantly white schools have been approved by the Norfolk School Board. Twenty-one others were rejected.

The board chairman, Paul Schweitzer, said the placement forms would be sent to the state pupil placement board this week.

E. L. Lamberth, Assistant Superintendent of Schools, said five of the applications were denied because the pupils lived neare a Negro school than to a white school. The board declined to say why it rejected the sixteen other applications.

Lawyers in Accord

NEWPORT NEWS, Va., July 21 (UPI)—Negro and white lawyers agreed today in a conference with Federal District Judge Walter Hoffman that no new applications for white schools would be made by Negro students until September.

This meant that the city, where ten Negroes had asked to enter previously all-white schools, probably would avoid desegregation during the 1959-60 school term.

Judge Hoffman earlier had ordered the city to submit a desegregation plan by Nov. 8.

Houston to Offer Plans

HOUSTON, Tex., July 21 (AP) — The Houston School Board last night instructed its attorney to handle the problem of integrating the city's public schools.

Federal Judge Ben C. Connally has ordered the board to file by Aug. 17 its plans for integration. Three plans have been placed before the board but none has been adopted.

The attorney, Joe Reynolds, said he would place all three plans before Judge Connally.

Little Rock Schools Sign 10 Negroes

2 Register At Hall High, Never Integrated

Little Rock, Ark., July 22 (AP)— Three more Negroes registered at Central High School and two signed up at Hall High School Wednesday to bring to 10 the number seeking to enter once all-white schools.

William Norwood, 17, was the first of his race to report to Hall, which serves a predominantly white area containing some of the city's most expensive homes.

A Negro girl, who refused to identify herself to reporters, later registered at Hall.

A new Little Rock School Board, which has announced its intent to open all schools this fall, but to use a pupil-assignment act to minimize court-ordered integration, recently altered the Hall attendance area so it now takes in an estimated 25 or 30 Negroes of high-school age.

Five Negro seniors signed up at Central Tuesday as the board started biracial registration.

Wednesday was set aside for junior registration.

FAUBUS' POSITION STRONG DESPITE LATEST SETBACK

The Hostility in Little Rock Does Not Diminish His State-Wide Following

By CLAUDE SITTON

Special to The New York Times.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., May 30—Back in 1955, not long after he had moved into the Governor's chair, Orval Eugene Faubus observed that "in politics it's often your friends that give you the most trouble."

The one-time postmaster from the Ozark hill country saw the truth of that statement driven home this week in a most unforgettable manner.

The trouble arose when three Faubus supporters on the Little Rock School Board attempted to conduct a partisan purge of forty-four public school teachers and principals.

The political heresy of these militant segregationists brought their ouster Monday in a recall election and the endorsement of three anti-Faubus moderates on the board. It also gave the 49-year-old Governor his third political setback in six months, the second at the hands of this troubled city's voters.

Furthermore, the outcome caused his enemies, and a few friends as well, to wonder if Mr. Faubus had started the downhill plunge from a peak of popularity.

First Setback

His first reversal came last Dec. 6 with the election of the three members of a five-man moderate slate to the board. They had expressed a personal preference for segregation but had said they would accept token integration if necessary to reopen the four high schools closed by Mr. Faubus in September.

The Governor attacked them as integrationists. His friends set to work to assure their defeat. But the erstwhile political magic of a Faubus denunciation failed. Voters chose a split board of the three moderates and the three pro-Faubus segregationists, one of whom who had no opposition.

This must have been particularly disappointing to the Governor. The resignation of five of the old board members, who had suffered repeated attacks from Faubus backers, had offered promise of a more friendly group.

He then turned to the Legislature in an attempt to break the deadlock left by the election.

An administration bill was introduced giving the Governor power to appoint three additional members of the board. It was passed by the House but was shouted down in the Senate on March 2. The Pulaski (Little Rock) County delegation applied such adjectives to the measure as "monstrous," "disgraceful," "ridiculous."

This marked the first time since nine Negroes were admitted to Central High School in September, 1957, that the Legislature had failed to do the bidding of Mr. Faubus on a proposal connected with segregation.

The history of his latest defeat dates back to early February. He told newsmen then that he would have no objection to the discharge of Jess W. Matthews, Central High's principal, and J. P. Powell and Mrs. Elizabeth Huckaby, vice principal at the school. He said the three had "discriminated" against white students during the institution's one year of integrated classes.

Some local observers now contend that Mr. Faubus had no intention at that time of touching off the mass dismissals announced May 5 by his three supporters on the board.

He has since conceded publicly that the purgers probably made some mistakes.

Announcement of the discharges brought roars of outrage from Little Rock's moderates, most of whom had not been heard from in more than a year. No longer did they seem hesitant to speak out because of a fear of reprisals from the extremists.

Fair Treatment

Behind this development lay the fact that the campaign against the would-be purgers turned not on the segregation controversy but on the question of fair play for the teachers.

With the exception of the predominantly Negro wards there was no clearly defined mandate in the election returns for reopening the schools on an integrated basis.

Despite the reversals suffered by Mr. Faubus in Little Rock, where he has never been particularly strong, he remains a political power in the state.

For even his bitterest enemies concede that he has as yet made no fatal mistake. His popularity is generally intact, especially in the mountain counties and in populous eastern Arkansas.

Where does he go from here? Although the term of United States Senator John L. McClellan, a Democrat, expires next year, it is doubtful that Mr. Faubus would run against him. The two have exchanged political favors in the past. More important, as things stand today, not even a Faubus would face a McClellan with any assurance of victory.

The possibility remains that he will seek an unprecedented fourth term as Governor next year with an eye to opposing Senator J. William Fulbright, also a Democrat, in 1962. Barring a sharp drop in the Governor's popularity, the Senator would be hard pressed to stave off such a challenge.

Fulbright in Trouble

Mr. Fulbright's contribution in the field of foreign affairs is not fully appreciated by most Arkansans. He has been criticized for not speaking out more often and vigorously in favor of segregation. It is questionable whether he could match Mr. Faubus as a campaigner, according to those who know both men's abilities.

There is an expression in the Governor's native Ozarks that sums up the advice political observers here might offer the Senator. It is: "Keep a watch-eye on all corners."

Farewell, Little Rock

To many newspaper readers around the country, the dateline "Little Rock" and the name Harry Ashmore have become virtually synonymous. As an editor, Ashmore has popped into the headlines time and again, with his criticisms of Gov. Orval Faubus and the segregationists. When the Teletype machines clicked out the Little Rock dateline last week, the embattled Ashmore made news again—this time by announcing his resignation as executive editor of The Arkansas Gazette. The 43-year-old Ashmore said he had accepted a "dream job" offered him by the Ford Foundation's Fund for the Republic.

At a new center for the "Study of Democratic Institutions" near Santa Barbara, Calif., Ashmore will join historian Allan Nevins and "a group of thinkers" in research to appraise the role of the mass media in a free society.

Top Job: "It's no stopgap job," Ashmore said. "I'm getting into a national position in terms of newspapers and the whole media field."

To replace Ashmore, J.N. Heiskell, The Gazette's energetic 87-year-old editor and owner, promptly announced the hiring of James Powell, associate editor of The Tampa (Fla.) Tribune, as editor of The Gazette's editorial page. Tall, dark-haired, and 39, Powell echoed Ashmore's oft-stated stand on the Supreme Court decision and on integration as opposed to segregation: "To me it's simply an issue of law and order."

Ashmore, disclosing that the Ford Foundation job was offered him a year ago, said he felt that his job in Little Rock was done.

"I've been here engaged in mortal combat with Faubus and the forces of idiocy for years," Ashmore said. "Now I find myself in the position of a vindicated prophet. The schools are open.

"But if I lived forever and grew a white beard, some of the people here would never trust me."

At Little Rock

School Situation Quiet, But Arrests Are Made

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) —Second-day integration in Little Rock's high schools was peaceful Thursday but four boys were arrested and three Negro men were held in racial friction on the outside.

Four white boys were seized in front of Central High School before it opened with one Negro, 16-year-old Jefferston Thomas, in class.

Three of the teen-age boys were taken into custody when they drove up in an automobile with Confederate flags flying. Police arrested the fourth after he defied an order to leave the school area.

Men Arrested.

State police arrested the Negro men near the home of an official of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored people Wednesday night. They said two of them would be charged with carrying concealed weapons.

One of the Negroes was Ellis Thomas Sr., 48, father of Jefferson Thomas. Another, Isaac Mullen, 42, is a house guard for Mrs. L. C. (Daisy) Bates, state president of the NAACP. They and Dr. Garland P. Freeman had left Mrs. Bates' house just before their arrest.

The placid atmosphere Thursday contrasted vividly with the uproar near Central Wednesday, when club-swinging police charged into a parade of howling segregationists and stopped its advance on the school.

Across town from Central, three Negro girls entered and left Hall High School for the second day without trouble.

Thomas went to Central alone. A score of white students were sitting on the steps of the 1,400-pupil school when he arrived. They did not even look at him as he went in.

He was accompanied to class Wednesday by Elizabeth Eckford, 17, another of the three Negroes assigned to Central by the Little Rock School board. She is not expected to return because she has earned enough credits through correspondence courses to enter college. The third Negro assigned to Central, Carlotta Walls, is in summer school at Chicago.

Police found a brass-weighted rubber hose, a tire tool and a wrench in the flag-decorated auto carrying the three white youths.

At Hall, the only sign of protest occurred when two white girls drove by in a convertible plastered with anti-integration banners. Police ignored it.

The three Negro girls, Effie Jones, 17, and Elsie Robinson and Estella Thompson, both 16, did not report any trouble inside Hall. A white student said they sat by themselves, away from other pupils, when they could.

Gov. Orval E. Faubus, who cautioned segregationists against violence shortly before the demonstation near Central Wednesday secluded himself.

Police Chief In Little Rock 'Hardheaded'

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — Gene Smith is a police chief who, in the eyes of his men, has "guts to face anybody or anything."

The responsibility for keeping order when two high schools were integrated here Wednesday fell on Smith and his 150-man police force.

For most of them, it was not a new assignment. Smith and 100 officers battled and repulsed a segregationist mob at Central High in 1957.

Smith directed his men at Central High Wednesday when a crowd of approximately 200 segregationists marched on the school before it reopened on a segregated basis. Police swung their nightsticks and, with the cooperation of firemen spraying water on the crowd, broke up the demonstration.

Smith took charge again Thursday, dispersing a small crowd of spectators who gathered across the street from the huge school.

At 6 feet 2½ and 200 pounds, the 45-year-old Smith looks like the career police officer he is. A veteran of 24 years on the force, he reached the officer's chair in December, 1957, despite segregationist opposition and the cloud of a 1954 demotion.

"I don't consider myself a hard man," Smith said. "But I'm hard-headed where the law is concerned."

Does he consider integration the "law of the land?"

"That's out of my province," Smith replied. "But we'll do everything we can to protect life and property and to preserve the public peace. That's what we do every day."

Smith discounted segregationist charges that half of his men planned to resign if they were ordered to enforce integration.

"I haven't heard a single complaint," he said. "My men are used to enforcing the law. I don't expect them to change."

Smith joined the force in 1935 and was a sergeant when he joined the Navy in 1941. After his discharge from the Navy in 1946, he became captain and was promoted to assistant chief in 1953.

In May, 1954, he was demoted to sergeant by then Chief Marvin Potts on charges of conduct unbecoming an officer. He filed suit against Potts and was reinstated under court order three months later. When Potts resigned in the fall of 1957, the city Civil Service Commission chose Smith as chief.

Born and reared in Little Rock, Smith was a football and track star at Little Rock (now Central) High School. His children, a boy and a girl, both now grown, were educated here.

Mixed Schools Opening Today at Little Rock

Four Negroes Slated to Attend; Faubus Warns Against Violence

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Aug. 12 (AP).—Two Little Rock high schools open today with token integration. School authorities and police have made firm pledges to keep order.

Gov. Orval E. Faubus continued his criticism of local officials, but warned against the use of violence.

Segregationists planned a rally on the State capitol lawn this morning, a half hour after three Negro girls were scheduled to enter previously all-white Hall High School.

Central High, where integration was carried out under the eyes of Federal troops in 1957 and 1958, was slated to open 2½ hours after the start of classes at Hall.

One Negro at Central

Only one Negro boy was expected to attend Central among the hundreds of whites. A total of 3,021 students has been registered and assigned at the city's four high schools.

Little Rock Technical High, a white school, and Horace Mann, a Negro institution, did not figure in the Little Rock School Board's integration plan.

Only half-day classes are scheduled this week, with a regular full-time schedule to begin Monday. The school board said it scheduled the half-day classes because all city high schools had been closed for a year, under order of Gov. Faubus.

Police Chief Eugene G. Smith would not reveal his plans to keep order, but said that he would not "put up with any foolishness."

School board officials said they would deal "firmly, fairly and effectively" with any students causing trouble in the schools.

Faubus Goes on TV

In a last-hour surprise, Gov. Faubus took to television last night. He accused the school board and Police Chief Smith of becoming puppets of the Federal Government.

The Governor also tried to discourage the segregationist rally on the Capitol lawn this morning by saying he would't be there. But segregationists insisted on going ahead with the meeting.

Gov. Faubus warned that the integration battle was not over. He called the school board members traitors and told them:

"Your troubles are only beginning."

Even as Gov. Faubus spoke, the State president of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People reported her house had been fired upon from a speeding car.

Mrs. L. C. (Daisy) Bates said several shots were fired and a white neighbor, K. R. Honey, reported one bullet crashed into his living room, where it missed his 9-year-old daughter Janet by less than a foot.

Stopped Integration Twice

Twice Gov. Faubus has stopped integration in Little Rock. The first time was in the fall of 1957. Then he called out National Guardsmen to temporarily turn back nine Negroes from Central High School. Last fall he closed the schools with a State law which since has been declared unconstitutional.

Gov. Faubus said he felt there was "more bitterness" now than in 1957 and that he took to television chiefly to discourage possible disorder.

The Governor said he had heard reports there would be protest meetings. "You have that right," he said, but added he saw nothing to be gained by violence.

Instead, he urged citizens to carry on the fight against integration by electing officials who would not betray their cause.

His talk came at the end of a day in which white students were assured of legal help should they be expelled over problems arising out of integration.

And 18 Little Rock attorneys pledged themselves to bring any agitators into court by injunction if necessary.

Pleads Against Violence

Gov. Faubus made his plea for peace on the heels of one from the Arkansas Christian Movement, a group of 175 Negro churches in Arkansas, which implored members of the Negro race to avoid violence at all costs. The movement was formed in 1956 to fight State segregation laws.

At a meeting here yesterday the movement assailed the Little Rock School Board president, Everett Tucker, jr., saying he had shown "gross ignorance of the aspirations and longings of our people."

Mr. Tucker had expressed surprise over the NAACP contesting in Federal court a State pupil placement law. It was used by the school board to place all but 6 of 60 Negroes who wanted to go to white schools in all-Negro Horace Mann High.

Mr. Tucker said it seemed to him the Negroes "should be grateful that the school board is making it possible for Negro children to resume their interrupted education."

Three all-white private schools were started after Gov. Faubus closed the public high schools in the fall of 1958. No private schools were started for Negroes.

But in Chicago the head of the Nation's largest Negro church denomination criticized the NAACP for its court action.

"The struggle for democracy in education is not only a legal question but a question of achieving constructive human relations and good will," said the Rev. Dr. J. H. Jackson. He is president of the National Baptist Convention, U. S. A., with a membership of 5 million.

The assurance to white students who might get expelled over integration trouble came from the Rev. Wesley Pruden, chaplain of the Capital Citizens Council. Mr. Pruden said money for court fights against expulsion would be provided by the Freedom Fund, which he and Dr. Malcolm Taylor heads.

Dr. Taylor also is president of the Citizen's Council, which has declared a boycott against Main street merchants employing Negroes.

Businessmen have reported for the council, said the buyers' strike was "going to be slow but no noticeable drop in sales, poison."

After skirmishes—

Little Rock sits watching, waiting

BY JAMES E. JACOBSON
News staff writer

LITTLE ROCK, Aug. 14—At noon yesterday, twenty-four hours after police and segregationist demonstrators had mixed it up in free-swinging skirmishes a block from Central High School, the same officers set on curbs lunching on bologna sandwiches and soft drinks.

The newsmen who had raced back and forth behind the police lines Wednesday, trying to be on the spot for everything, congested in the few shady spots on the sidewalk across the street from Central, comparing notes on the previous days activities, swapping the latest rumors, cursing the heat for the thousandth time.

Occasionally one of the police officials stopped by and squatted for a few minutes in the shade, then wandered off and joined another group for a few minutes of conversation.

There was one brief flurry of activity when Police Chief Gene Smith arrested a youth on one of the corners across from the campus because "I got tired of listening to him," but it was short-lived. All of those present on some sort of business, as well as the few curious onlookers who never numbered more than 25—settled down to more waiting.

SHORTLY BEFORE 1 p.m. Jefferson Thomas appeared. The Negro student walked to one of the huge school's side doors, showed his identification card and stepped in side.

The reporters made a note or two and some checked their watches.

A newsreel camerman who had been set up half a block away, rushed up, perspiring while wrestling with heavy camera equipment, and asked, "Where is he?" No one had the heart to tell him.

Within a few minutes most of the newsmen had started toward their cars or in search of a cab. A plainclothesman crossed the street and talked to one or two lingerers.

"Well," he said, mopping his forehead with a handerkerchief, "it looks like we can go home."

Youngsters back at Central High

(SPECIAL TO THE AFRO)

LITTLE ROCK, Ark.—"We'll be back," they said when Gov. Faubus closed this city's schools last fall.

Not only did five of the original "Little Rock Nine" come back when registration opened last week, but 30 others signed up for classes in Central High School and two other high schools.

The five "originals" who signed up, all seniors, were: Melba Patillo, Jefferson Thomas, Elizabeth Eckford, Thelma Mothershed and Carlotta Walls.

Three of the original nine have left Little Rock. They are Ernest Green, only colored student to graduate from Central High School; Minniejean Brown, who was suspended from the school and resumed her education in New York, and Terrance Roberts, whose family moved to California.

One other student, Gloria Ray, is expected to register for Central High School when registrations are taken for non-seniors.

THE TOTAL number of colored high school seniors registered breaks down into 25 for Central High School; five for Hall High School in an exclusive community, and one for Tech High.

The state pupil placement board must still pass on their registrations. This means that all 35 senior applicants may not be admitted to the schools they applied for.

Greeting the students, white and colored, at Central High School which had been closed for a year along with other city schools, Principal Jess Matthews said:

"I'm glad to see you. It's good to have some customers again."

SCHOOL OPENS Sept. 8 by decision of the local citizens. In a speicial election, the local residents ousted three members of the school board who favored keeping the schools closed and endorsed the three who favored opening them.

Police Chief Eugene G. Smith warned that anyone creating a disturbance during registration or school opening would be arrested and jailed.

This assertion was attacked as a "threat" by the Capital (white) Citizens Council.

IN NORFOLK, VA., the school board advised the state pupil placement board to admit two of 23 colored students who applied for assignment to formerly all - white schools.

The board did not fully explain why it denied the applications of the other 21.

A report came from Newport News that colored lawyers agree not to try to enroll any students in schools attended only by white students.

The city school board is under federal court order to file a desegregation plan by Nov. 12. Lawyers for both sides allegedly agreed that no students would file for admission to schools before the September term began.

* * *

IN ATLANTA, GA. three colored students missed the deadline for returning their applications to the Georgia State College of Business Administration. They will not be admitted.

Meanwhile, the city board of education announced that it will appeal a federal court order to submit a plan for desegration by Dec. 1.

Georgia's governor, Ernest Vandiver, called for his general assembly to enact laws against barratry. He hopes to use these laws against the NAACP.

That organization, meanwhile, is planning assaults on segregation in Savannah and, according to Thurgood Marshall, "about three other places."

* * *

THE HOUSTON, TEXAS school board turned over its integration problem to the city attorney. The board has until Aug. 17 to produce in federal court an integration plan. The board told the attorney to do it.

Mrs. Charles White, only colored member of the board, chided her colleagues, saying: "We should shoulder the responsibility that is ours."

Meanwhile a junior high school rejected the application of a colored girl for its summer session.

IN NEW YORK, the board of education restudied the decision to shift 400 colored pupils from a congested Brooklyn area to two Queens communities.

The original decision led to protests by Queens segregationists. Dr. Gardner C. Taylor, only colored board member, challenged the lawyer for the Queens group to justify his clients' stand.

Arkansas Legislative Committee Declares Communists Stirred Little Rock's Crisis

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP)—An Arkansas legislative committee declared Friday that the racial trouble here was fostered by the Communist party.

It charged that the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People had become a tool of the party.

Mrs. L. C. Bates, president of the Arkansas branch of the NAACP, promptly denied the latter assertion. She said that the U.S. Department of Justice and J. Edgar Hoover, director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, have "given us a clean bill of health many times."

The accusations were contained in a 32-page report based on a three-day hearing held by the committee here last month. The report was released by Atty. Gen. Bruce Bennett, who directed the questioning of witnesses at the inquiry.

Chief witnesses at the hearing were J. B. Matthews, a former aide of the late Sen. Joe McCarthy, and Manning Johnson, a New York Negro, who said he was a former Communist.

Both testified they thought racial friction in the South was at least partly incited by the Communists.

Bennett did not call any NAACP members or other "hostile" witnesses. The attorney general is the author of a number of legislative acts aimed at the NAACP and instigator of several lawsuits against the organization.

"The committee is convinced that the racial unrest in Arkansas was deliberately planned by the Communist party as part of the directive handed down by Moscow in 1928," the report said.

"The NAACP appears to have been heavily infiltrated with subversives, and, wittingly, or unwittingly, is now a captive of the Communist apparatus," it added.

Gov. Orval E. Faubus on Sept. 2, 1957, surrounded Central High School with National Guardsmen to prevent a small group of Negroes from attending. A year later he closed all four Little Rock public high schools in a move against integration.

The report blamed the beginning of the trouble on the Communists.

In New York, Roy Wilkins, executive secretary of the NAACP issued the following comment on the committee's report:

"This hash has been warmed over so many times that it no longer has even a smell. Legislative committees in Florida and Louisiana already have come up with 'findings' based upon the testimony of hand-picked professional witnesses.

"Atty. Gen. Bennett of Arkansas has merely imitated Florida and Louisiana, even to the point of using the same traveling troupe of alleged experts.

"Of course, no NAACP representatives were called to testify at this rigged hearing. Needless to say, the so-called findings are without foundation."

Race Unrest Laid to Reds By Arkansas

LITTLE ROCK, Jan. 16 (AP) A state legislative committee today charged that Arkansas' racial unrest was deliberately engineered by the Communist Party.

A report by a special Education Committee of the Arkansas Legislative Council on its recent probe of alleged subversive activities also accused the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People of being a "captive of the Communist apparatus."

Mrs. L. C. Bates of Little Rock, president of the Arkansas chapter of the NAACP, promptly denied that the organization had any links with subversives.

"I think I would prefer taking the word of J. Edgar Hoover (Director of the FBI) and the Justice Department about our organization," she said. "They have clearly given us a clean bill of health many times."

Covers 3-Day Hearing

The Committee report covered the findings of a 3-day hearing at Little Rock last month.

The principal witnesses at the hearing were J. B. Matthews of New York, a former aide of the late Sen. Joseph R. McCarthy of Wisconsin, and Manning Johnson of New York, a Negro who said he once belonged to the Communist Party. Matthews and Johnson testified they believed the South's integration troubles were partly brought on by subversives.

No NAACP members were summoned to testify at the hearing, which was conducted by Arkansas Attorney General Bruce Bennett. The Attorney General, an outspoken foe of the NAACP, pushed a number of anti-NAACP measures through the Legislature in last summer's special session.

The Education Committee's report contended "there has been and now is subversion present in the racial unrest in our state."

Committee "Convinced"

"The Committee is convinced that the racial unrest in Arkansas was deliberately planned by the Communist Party," the report added. "The NAACP appears to have been heavily infiltrated with subversives and, wittingly or unwittingly, is now a captive of the Communist apparatus."

Bennett, who released the report to newsmen, said he believed it was the first time any investigating agency had found the NAACP "subversive."

The 32-page report, largely a summation of proceedings at the hearing, said "this Committee has found that the incident which occurred at Little Rock on Sept. 2, 1957, (the beginning of the integration crisis at Central High School) was not something that just happened overnight."

"It was planned, schemed, calculated, and had as its motivating factor the international Communist conspiracy of world domination squarely behind the entire shocking episode."

Little Rock 'Reject' Is a Top N. Y. Pupil

By George W. Cornell

NEW YORK, Jan. 15 (AP) She doesn't like to discuss Little Rock. "But you can't help remembering . . ." A fleeting tension crossed Minnijean Brown's face, then she smiled gayly. "Let's talk about the present."

A poised, vivacious Negro girl of 17, Minnijean was expelled from Central High School in Little Rock, Ark., a year ago after clashes with white students. She's now a senior at the new Lincoln School here.

"She's one of the most popular kids around here," said John J. Brooks, the white director of the private, interracial school. "The girls like her. The boys like her. The teachers like her. She has a lovely personality."

In the time since the explosive racial conflicts at Little Rock made Minnijean a cause celebre, she said the most comforting change has been in escaping the focus of attention — in being just another student."

'Just Part of the Whole'

"The next day after I came here," she said, "I was just another part of the school. Not someone to be singled out, or pointed to as special, but just part of the whole. And that's what is important."

Minnijean was given a $1050 scholarship to the school, a progressive educational institution with high academic standing and an enrollment of 431, including pupils both from poor and wealthy families.

A large majority are white, but there's a wide mixture of other races, from this country and abroad. Poorer students, chosen on the basis of potentiality, get scholarships—40 per cent of the total.

The school is under the trusteeship of Columbia University Teachers College.

"It's the best school I've ever been to, or even imagined," said Minnijean, her voice softly eager. She is a tall, pretty girl, with an easy smile and merry eyes. She wore a green sweater, black skirt and bobby socks.

Friends of 2 Races

Asked if she'd found her best friends among Negro or white pupils, she said, "I never thought of it like that." Pressed on the point, she said her four closest pals here were two Negro girls and two white girls.

She refused to draw any contrast between her present experiences and those in Little Rock's Central High, where name-calling, blows and other incidents occurred while she and eight other Negroes attended under Federal troop guard.

"I don't want to say anything about it," she said. "Little Rock is still my home."

She hesitated, then added in a rush:

"I don't think any Southerner, Negro or white, can forget the South as long as there is all this tangle in Little Rock or anywhere else in the South. It's nice here, but I still can't forget those students walking the streets with no school to go to."

Little Rock's public schools have since been closed in the racial strife.

In Final Semester

Minijean now is in her final high school semester, and is going through a round of faculty conferences to map plans for college. She's also virtually up to her neck in extracirricular activities.

"It's part of education," she said.

She's on the yearbook staff, the social committee, has served as class chairman, played a lead role in the school play last month, is a member of the Madrigals, a classical vocal group, and entertains at school social functions.

"I like folk singing better than anything else," she said. She is toying with the idea of a singing career, but hasn't fully decided. She has talked about it with singer Harry Belafonte, whose daughter is a classmate.

"Mainly," she said, "I'm concentrating on my studies. That has been necessary, because my past education was not so good."

Check Shows Rating

A check of teachers' reports on her shows a high rating. Some samples:

English and Social Studies: "Minnijean's interest and generally openminded participation in class are a delight." Science: "An eager, enthusiastic student . . ." French: "Shows growing strength."

"She's going to be prepared for college, despite some limitations in her past schooling," Brooks said. "Her potential is above average."

Minnijean resides in suburban Hastings, N. Y., with Kenneth B. Clark, a City College psychology professor, and his family. She was asked for a general comment about racial relationships in this country, and said:

"I believe the hope for the future is in the hands of students."

Little Rock Race Trouble Laid To Reds

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP)—An Arkansas legislative committee has declared that the racial trouble here was fostered by the Communist party.

It charged that the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People had become a tool of the party.

Mrs. L. C. Bates, president of the Arkansas branch of the NAACP, promptly denied the latter assertion. She said that the U.S. Department of Justice and J. Edgar Hoover, director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, have "given us a clean bill of health many times."

Judge Urges Segregation Showdown

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Feb. 11 (UPI) — A Little Rock traffic judge who is also a school board member urged Gov. Orval Faubus today to open Little Rock's four closed high schools on a segregated basis in a showdown with the federal government.

Judge Robert W. Laster said he will make the proposal the next time the school board meets Feb. 26 and demand the board take a stand "one way or another."

"We aren't getting anywhere in the course we are following," said Laster, one of three pro-Faubus members of the six-member school board.

Faubus closed the high schools Sept. 12 to block Supreme Court-ordered integration.

Laster said that if the schools should be opened segregated then it would be up to the federal government "to force integration."

"I believe that if we open the schools on a segregated basis the federal government would not send armed troops back to Little Rock," said Laster, "but if troops should come back, then I think the people of Arkansas and the entire nation would rebel."

FAUBUS SUPPORTED ON SEGREGATION BIDS

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Jan. 29 (AP)—Gov. Orval E. Faubus' new anti-integration proposals had clear-cut backing in the Arkansas Legislature today.

The House, without comment, approved 96—0 the Governor's bill to permit direct payment of public funds to students for use at schools of their choice.

The Senate gave 33-0 approval yesterday to the Governor's proposal that public school teachers be permitted to transfer to accredited private schools without losing their state retirement benefits.

The third bill in the Governor's package is a proposal to submit a constitutional amendment in the 1960 general election writing the student payment provision into the Constitution. This probably will not be acted upon until late in the session.

Racial Issue Labeled Road to Civil War

DENVER, Feb. 18 (AP)—Woodrow Wilson Mann, former mayor of Little Rock, Ark., today said the United States may be heading into another civil war over the segregation question.

Mann was revealed last week as the man whose appeal brought federal troops to Little Rock after rioting resulted from the admission of Negro students into Central High School. He moved here several months ago and operates an insurance firm.

Mann said in an address to the Kiwanis Club that "because of mishandling and exploitation of the Little Rock incident, we now have a nation as divided as it was in the days immediately preceding the Civil War."

"The people of this nation are in fact engaged in a cold war within this country," he said. "No apparent effort is being made by any segment of society to find a solution."

Calling desegregation of schools in the South "the most serious problem faced by this country in over 100 years," Mann said:

"We are headed toward civil war just as surely as there is a God above, unless something is done and done immediately.

"The use of federal troops, based solely on the determination of the federal government to change a way of life, born and bred into millions of people in this country, has proven one thing beyond doubt: Even in the United States force cannot and will not make people submit to a way of life that they are not willing to accept.

"The insincere and completely political actions on the part of the federal government in this situation offer final and conclusive proof that the rights, privileges and the freedoms granted us as citizens of this nation have been taken away from the people and placed in the hands of a few almighty men in Washington."

Mann said he did not agree with the U. S. Supreme Court decision of 1954 calling for desegregation in the public schools. He said he sent a telegram for federal troops in September 1957, after "I, as mayor of Little Rock, found myself trapped between the governor of Arkansas on one side and the federal government on the other."

"My differences with the governor of Arkansas were not based on personalities, nor did I question his authority to do as he did," Mann said. "I challenged the propriety and the manner in which he took control of the situation, thereby completely ignoring the legal responsibilities of Little Rock's city government.

"The necessity of calling upon the president of the United States for assistance was absolute and definte in order to restore law and order in Little Rock."

New High School To Be Dedicated

Ceremonies This Afternoon At Forrest City

Special to The Commercial Appeal

FORREST CITY, Ark., Feb. 21.—Dedication ceremonies for the new Lincoln Senior High School for Negroes will be held Sunday afternoon, beginning at 2 o'clock.

William P. Rock of Little Rock, executive director of the Arkansas Industrial Development Commission, will speak. He will be introduced by W. W. Campbell of Forrest City, banker and vice president of the AIDC.

Costing around $300,000, the new school for Negroes is one of the finest in the Mid South. It contains 16 classrooms, completely equipped laboratory, a large library and reading room, visual education room, teacher's lounge, office and two sick rooms.

In addition, a spacious hallway, similar to others now being constructed in other schools, is a feature. It has a capacity of around 2,400. C. T. Cobb, principal of the school, will be master of ceremonies.

Messages of appreciation from the students, faculty and patrons will be given by Vesther Adams, E. P. Shannon and the Rev. R. B. Bland.

M. S. Smith, superintendent of the Forrest City Special School District, will introduce special guests, and William Irving, assistant superintendent, will speak.

Among the state education officials who will attend will be Archie Ford, commissioner of education; Dr. Ed McCuiston, assistant commissioner of education; and others.

ALL-OUT BATTLE AGAINST ANY INTEGRATION SHAPING UP

Advertiser Montgomery, Ala. Wed. 7-15-59

Little Rock In Back-To-Wall Racial Fight

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP—An all-out battle against any school integration in Little Rock is shaping up.

The Segregationist Capital Citizens Council said it will do everything in its power to block racial-mixing in the public schools.

Amis Guthridge, an attorney for the council and one of its official spokesmen, said the people of Little Rock will never accept integration in any form.

COURT ORDER

The Little Rock School Board is under a federal court order to integrate. It plans to open public high schools in September.

Gov. Orval E. Faubus closed four high schools against integration last fall but recently a federal court threw out the state school-closing law he used.

Guthridge said the Citizens Council would not fight integration in the courts. He said the council would use "action," but declined to spell out what he meant.

He did say, in reply to a question, that the campaign might encompass public protest rallies.

SPEARHEAD DRIVE

Anything the council does will be legal, Guthridge said in an interview.

The Citizens Council spearheaded a drive against school integration for several months before the Central High School crisis erupted in September 1957. Guthridge, a charter member of the organization, was active in the segregationist movement at that time.

In criticizing the board's announced intention of using state pupil placement laws next fall, Guthridge declared: "The School Board, and all their cohorts, are trying to make these laws acceptable to the public so they will cease to resist."

VARIOUS SCHOOLS

Arkansas placement measures provide for assignment of pupils to various schools on the basis of several factors, but race is not included.

A delegation from the school board will leave Wednesday for Charlotte, N.C. and Norfolk, Va., to study operation of placement plans in these cities.

Guthridge said the Citizens Council had been "unusually quiet" since it suffered a rebuff in a board recall election May 25, but the time for renewed action was at hand.

44 TEACHERS

The council supported three ardent segregationist school board members who dismissed 44 teachers and administrators. A citizens' group demanded the recall of the three. The council and other segregationist groups countered with an appeal to oust three moderate board members. Voters retained the moderates, who are on the present six-man board.

Guthridge said the council, after this defeat, "decided to sit back and let the people of Little Rock see what they had done to themselves when they let the integrationists win."

He charged any use of pupil placement laws by the board would be a smoke-screen tactic in a drive for extensive integration.

PLACEMENT LAWS

Everett Tucker Jr., board president, declined comment on Guthridge's statement.

Another segregationist leader joined Guthridge in criticizing the planned use of state placement laws.

Margaret Jackson, president of the Mothers League of Central High, said her organizationn disapproved of a pupil placement procedure.

"We regard it as a form of integration and we do not approve of integration in any form," she said.

Gov. Faubus Reiterates Race Stand

Advertiser Montgomery Ala.

HOT SPRINGS, Ark. (AP)—Gov. Orval E. Faubus lashed out at the Eisenhower administration again Wednesday in reiterating his stand against compulsory racial integration.

Sun. 7-12-59

"If Negroes and whites want to go to school and church together and marry each other, that's all right," Faubus said. "But they should not be made to associate against their will."

p5-A

The governor told the national convention of the Forestry Conservation Communications Assn., that he had not come to talk about Little Rock's school integration problem but "I want to give my side of the story."

Faubus then assailed the Eisenhower administration for sending federal troops to Little Rock to enforce integration during the 1957-58 term.

Faubus sidestepped a challenge by the Little Rock School Board to come up with a legal plan if he had one to continue segregation. He also refused during an interview to comment on a statement by a spokesman for the Capital Citizens Council that it would resist all efforts to integrate public schools in Little Rock.

The Little Rock School Board has announced it would reopen in the fall four public high schools which Faubus closed under a state school closing law. The law recently was declared unconstitutional by a federal court.

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) — Little Rock, Ark., school officials indicated today they may use some features of Virginia, North Carolina and Alabama assignment plans in desegregating schools in September.

Tues. p. 1 7-14-59

Everett Tucker Jr., president of the Little Rock School Board, said here that he and other officials have been "tremendously reassured with the success and apparent ease with which this transition (to integrated schools) has been accepted in Norfolk and Charlotte."

LITTLE ROCK GROUP FIGHTS INTEGRATION

Times Newport

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., July 14 (AP)—A fight against any school integration in Little Rock took shape today. The Capital Citizens Council said it would do everything in its power to block racial mixing in the public schools. Amis Guthridge, an attorney for the council and one of its official spokesmen, said the people of Little Rock would never accept integration in any form.

Tues. p. 1 7-15-59

The Little Rock school board is under a Federal court order to integrate. It plans to open the four public high schools in September.

Gov. Orval E. Faubus closed the high schools against integration last fall but recently a Federal court invalidated the state school-closing law that he employed.

Mr. Guthridge said the Citizens Council would not fight integration in the courts. He said the council would use "action," but declined to spell out what he meant.

He did say, in reply to a question, that the campaign might encompass public protest rallies.

Anything the countil does will be legal, Mr. Guthridge said in an interview.

Entire board for opening schools in Little Rock

Baltimore Md.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark.—A sixth member appointed to the Little Rock School Board last week declared that "I believe in public education and I believe that our schools should be opened in spite of our feeling about integration and segregation."

Sat. 7-18-59

The new board member is W. C. McDonald, 44, who was appointed to fill a vacancy which was created when a former member, Henry L. Hubbard, was found ineligible for membership.

p. 3

Hubbard and two other new members were named to the board after three extreme segregationist members were voted out in a recall election held on May 25.

All six of the board's members have now expressed themselves in favor of opening the schools in September even though it means that some desegregation will be involved.

Dr. Blossom writes about Little Rock

Baltimore

PHILADELPHIA

The contention of many southerners that colored people do not want their children to attend school with white children was branded as "ridiculous" by Dr. Virgil T. Blossom (school superintendent at Little Rock, 1953-58) Tuesday.

"Most colored parents want their children accepted and want them to have better educational opportunities than they normally get under a segregated system," Blossom writes in the current issue of the Saturday Evening Post.

Sat. 7-30-59

Part II of his report, "The Untold Story of Little Rock," says that in many talks with colored parents and leaders, Blossom found them keenly aware of the dangers of immediate, complete integration.

"There were some who demanded speed," he says, "but most of them favored moderation for sound reasons — fear of economic retaliation, fear that the legislature would abolish public education or, in most instances, a sane desire to avoid a violent upheaval."

LITTLE ROCK SIGNS FIVE MORE NEGROES

Times p. 45M

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., July 22—Two Negroes registered today at all-white Hall High School in the heart of one of city's better residential sections. Three others enrolled at Central High.

Thurs. 7-23-59

At the end of the second day of pre-registration for the fall term at Little Rock's four public high schools a total of ten Negroes had enrolled for integrated classes.

There was no indication of trouble. However, the police continued their watch to avert any outbreak of the racial violence that marred Central's first desegregated term in 1957.

One of the Hall applicants was a 17-year-old boy, William Norwood. The other was a girl accompanied by her mother. They refused to identify themselves.

One of the three Negroes who registered at Central High today was Carlotta Walls, 17. She is the fifth member of the original ""Little Rock nine" to seek readmission to Central. Their entry in Sept., 1957 touched off rioting and brought Federal troops here to preserve the peace.

Setback for Faubus

In the twenty-one months since the Little Rock integration crisis began, Arkansas' Gov. Orval E. Faubus has had considerable popular support for his opposition to what he calls "forced integration" of the schools. In the Democratic primary last July (tantamount to election) he won a third term with 255,000 votes, twice as many as those of his two rivals combined. The State Legislature, in special session, then almost unanimously rushed through a series of Faubus anti-integration measures, and in September the Governor closed Little Rock's four high schools rather than obey Supreme Court orders to resume the school board's integration program. In October, in a referendum in Little Rock giving voters the choice of voting for or against "racial integration of all schools," the Faubus anti-integration forces won by 19,470 to 7,561.

Three Against Three

Last December, however, the Governor had a setback. In an election for a new six-member school board (the old one had resigned) the voters chose three moderates whom the Governor had opposed, and three segregationists. Then a bill designed to give the Governor power to break the deadlock by executive authority was defeated in the Legislature.

Last week, Governor Faubus suffered his third and worst defeat so far—a defeat stemming directly from the actions of the pro-Faubus members of the board. This was the background:

Last May 5, the school board took up the matter of teachers' contracts for the next school year. A dispute over individual teachers' qualifications followed, and the three moderates walked out. The three segregationists promptly fired forty-four of the 800 teachers in the system (all had been kept on the payroll), presumably on the ground they did not share the segregationists' views. A furor arose. More than 170 prominent businessmen formed STOP (for Stop This Outrageous Purge) and campaigned for an election to recall the three segregationists. A white mothers' club then formed CROSS (Committee to Retain Our Segregated Schools) and campaigned for the recall of the three moderates.

The campaign was bitter, marked by appeals to racial, religious and class bigotry. In the last days, Governor Faubus—who had said he intended to stay out of the matter—twice appeared on television to support the three segregationists. The row over the teachers' dismissals, he said, was nothing but a "smoke screen behind which the integrationists now can move forward."

'Reawakening'

In the election last Monday the three segregationists were voted out—by narrow margins—and the three moderates won. The moderates hailed the victory as a "reawakening" of the city. Governor Faubus said, "Little Rock has not voted for integration yet. The issue * * * was only the teachers' dismissals."

While the outcome was a clear defeat for the Governor, spokesmen for the moderates avoided over-optimistic predictions. They pointed out that there was no indication that he had lost his popularity elsewhere in the state. Furthermore, it was uncertain what position the school board would take. Under the law, replacements for the ousted members will be made by the Board of Education of Pulaski County, of which Little Rock is a part. The county board is a new body, created by the special session of the Legislature, and has not revealed its stand on integration.

Also awaited is a decision by a Federal court on the constitutionality of the school-closing laws. If these should be held invalid—as were similar laws in Virginia—the city board would then be under further compulsion to resume a limited integration program, probably next fall. The Governor at times has indicated that he would not attempt to block such a move if the responsibility for it were taken out of his hands by such a decision, but observers on the scene have found him unpredictable.

Gov. Faubus and the Courts

Arkansas Governor Faubus can hardly have been surprised by the latest decisions of the Federal court in Little Rock invalidating the state legislative acts which have kept that city's high schools closed for all too many months. Against the background of the legal and judicial history of the struggle over school integration in this country there could have been scarcely any doubt that the courts would rule invalid laws closing schools to prevent integration, as well as laws diverting state funds to private schools being attended by pupils whose public schools had been closed because of the effort to stop integration.

It may be too much to hope that Governor Faubus and those who share his views will bow to the inevitable and avoid further delay by appealing this latest decision to the Supreme Court. Nevertheless, the Little Rock school board has announced that it will proceed on the premise the schools in that city will be open this fall, and it is to be hoped that this will be true. The real losers, after all, have been the high school students of Little Rock. It is they who have had to pay the price for the battles their elders have been fighting. Every youngster in Little Rock deserves the best possible education that city can give him. We hope the schools will be reopened in September and attended by all eligible youngsters, regardless of color or other irrelevant considerations.

REGISTRATIONS PASS 50 MARK IN THREE OF LITTLE ROCK SCHOOLS

Last Day Activity Surge Passes Without Incident

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — (UPI) —Teenage Negroes registering Friday at the city's three formerly white high schools passed the 50 mark in a surge of last-day activity without any show of violence.

By registering at Central, Hall and Technical, the registrants obviously were indicating their desire to attend those schools when classes open next Sept. 8.

They had no assurance, however, that they would be permitted to integrate the previously all-white schools under the 1959 state pupil placement law.

Thirteen white girls registered at Horace Mann High School this morning. Their prank was discovered when assistant school superintendent Paul Fair checked their names and addresses. The names ficitious, and the addresses would have placed their homes in such places as the Arkansas River which runs through Little Rock, or in the middle of the Little Rock municipal airport.

integration - conscious city's only all - Negro school. But it turned out to be a hoax.

The girls, wearing shorts, drove up to the school in a car with the words "Horace Mann or Bust" written on the side.

As they came out, a newsman asked them if they were serious about signing up for classes at the Negro school.

"Hell yes, we're serious," one of them said.

They were asked if their parents knew about their trying to integrate a Negro school.

"Yes, they are in favor of integration," one answered.

Little Rock Board Plans Mixed Schools

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — The Little Rock school board, in the face of Gov. Orval E. Faubus' warning of possible violence, Thursday night officially announced plans to operate Little Rock's high schools on an integrated basis this fall.

Faubus said at a press conference less than 36 hours before that he felt integrated schools could not be operated here without the backing of federal force.

The governor was not available for comment on Thursday night's action.

The five-man board announced the unanimous decision in a terse statement after a brief executive decision. Apparently the matter had been settled before the meeting.

Details of opening were not announced, but the board promised "a further and more detailed announcement at the earliest possible date.

Unofficial plans to open the schools under a token program of integration were announced last Thursday after a three-judge federal court struck down a Faubus-sponsored school closing law and returned control of the schools to the board.

Faubus shut the four high schools last Sept. 12 after the U. S. Supreme Court rejected a bid for a delay in integration. Federal troops enforced integration of Central High School during the 1957-58 term and special federal marshals had been recruited to protect seven Negroes eligible to attend Central last fall.

There was no immediate indication of how many Negroes would be admitted to white schools when schools are opened. The board said it would operate under the Arkansas pupil placement law in assignng students.

Arkansas has two pupil assignment laws, one adopted in 1956 and the other passed this year. Each permits school boards to place pupils in certain schools for a number of reasons, but race is not mentioned.

Mrs. L. C. Bates, state president of the National Assn., for the Advancement of Colored People, said it was not known at this time how many Negro students would attempt to enroll in white schools.

Faubus, who blocked integration with National Guard troops in the fall of 1957, frequently has said he will not use his powers to enforce integration. And several times before he has said he feels violence will ensue if the schools are opened integrated.

Integration was accomplished at Central after a federal judge enjoined Faubus from using state troops to prevent entry of Negroes, a task Faubus assigned them, he said, to prevent violence.

A segregationist mob rioted before Central High when the Negroes tried to enter under city police protection.

Soldiers stayed through the 1957-58 term and watched over graduation ceremonies at which one Negro received a diploma.

Faubus Kills Rumor He'll Mix School

MARSHALL, Tex. (UPI)—Gov. Orval E. Faubus of Arkansas Thursday night spiked reports he might order strife-torn Central High School at Little Rock reopened this fall on a partially integrated basis.

"I shall never use the power of my office to force integration in the face of overwhelming popular opposition," Faubus told a banquet here.

Faubus ordered Central High closed last fall in the face of federal-enforced integration. The school and three other Little Rock high schools have remained closed ever since.

Public School Supporters Score Gains In Little Rock

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — Three segregationist supporters of Gov. Orval E. Faubus were replaced on the Little Rock School Board Thursday by men who have stayed out of the public school integration controversy.

The segregationists were ousted in a special recall election May 25 in which three other board members, with moderate views on integration, were given a vote of confidence.

Statements from two of the new board members indicated the three moderates may have picked up allies.

The new board members are State Rep. J. H. Cottrell Jr., an attorney and loan company executive; B. Frank Mackey, a retired police detective and presently an insurance company employe; and H. L. Hubbard, a building contractor.

Both Cottrell and Mackey expressed their faith today in the public school system. Hubbard was not available for comment.

The three replaced Ed I. McKinley Jr., an attorney and school board president; Robert W. Laster, Little Rock traffic judge; and Ben D. Rowland, also an attorney.

Clinical Report on Little Rock

The Saturday Evening Post series on what happened in Little Rock, Ark., by erstwhile superintendent of schools there from 1953 to 1958, Virgil T. Blossom, is a clinical report of the first importance on the anatomy of a Southern city.

Here we see where and how a tiny minority of racial segregationists, spurred on by Gov. Orval Faubus, an ambitious and conscienceless politician, and alumnus of the leftist Commonwealth College, promoted defiance of the U. S. Supreme Court and the Federal Government, and brought disgrace to the city, the state and the nation.

While the majority of Little Rock white people were opposed to public school integration, they were prepared to obey the law and adopt the policy of integration worked out by the School Board—until Faubus and the segregationist diehards intervened.

What is illuminating about the Blossom revelations is how a handful of students, carrying out the will of their parents and professional segregationists, were able to cause so much trouble at Central High School and throughout the city school system.

It seems to us that the lesson to be drawn from this sad experience is that whenever such situations occur, known troublemakers should be promptly arrested, jailed and held in high bail; and professional Negrophobes who rush to the troubled city to spark opposition should be jailed as vagrants, and later drummed out of town.

Had this been done in Little Rock and some other Southern cities, school integration would have gone off smoothly everywhere, and America's reputation in the world would not be so low.

In extraordinary times and under extraordinary circumstances, it is sometimes necessary to use extraordinary means.

Faubus' School Closing Killed by U.S. Court, Reopening Plans Sped

Power Loss Is Conceded By Governor

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — A three-judge federal court dealt Gov. Orval E. Faubus a telling blow Thursday in his fight against racial integration of Little Rock's public high schools.

It declared a state school-closing law unconstitutional and the Little Rock School Board moved quickly with plans for reopening the four schools in the fall.

Faubus, who closed the schools last fall with legislative and popular Little Rock backing, conceded it looked as if he had lost his authority to keep the schools closed.

'UNDER MANDATE'

The federal court reminded the school board it is under a "continuing mandate" to integrate the schools.

Thursday's court action enjoined Faubus, the board and other public officials from interfering with the "approved plan for the gradual integration" of all schools in the Little Rock district.

The Little Rock School Board, through its president, Everett Tucker Jr., announced it would proceed on the premise all schools here would be opened in the fall.

Tucker said the federal court decision placed the school board under an obligation to comply with previous federal court rulings calling for integration.

OKAYED IN 1956

An integration plan, submitted by a former school board, first was approved by the federal courts in 1956.

In September 1957, U.S. Dist. Judge Ronald N. Davies of Fargo, N.D., here on a temporary assignment, ordered Faubus to cease his interference with integration. Faubus withdrew National Guardsmen who had prevented nine Negro students from attending Central High School.

Mob violence erupted and integration of the nine finally was enforced by federal troops in the 1957-58 school year. It was to prevent continuation of integration that Faubus closed the schools.

NOT SURPRISED

Faubus said Thursday he was not surprised by the federal court decision. He hesitated to say whether he would appeal until after he had been given the chance to study it.

The governor refused to say, too, whether he would call a special legislative session to deal with his continuing fight against what he calls "forced integration."

Asked if he felt the decision meant the reopening of the four public high schools, Faubus replied, "That's up to the courts."

Tucker predicted the decision would be appealed but he added he felt the board was obligated to go ahead with plans immediately for the reopening of all Little Rock schools.

FUND ACT MULLED

In throwing out the Faubus-sponsored school closing law, the federal court also invalidated a companion act under which public school funds followed displaced pupils in their transfer to other schools.

The court held the school-closing law clearly violated the due process and equal protection clauses of the 14th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution. It held the companion act was dependent on the closing law and likewise was unconstitutional.

The school board only recently was reorganized. Three segregationists were recalled in an election. Tucker and two other board members were retained. They had been denounced by Faubus as "integrationists."

WILLING TO ACCEPT

Faubus supported the three segregationists in the recall election but later said the issue was not clear-cut on the integration question.

Tucker and the other two retained call themselves moderates, opposed in principle to integration but willing to accept it on a token basis to enable the schools to reopen.

The school board was asked by one member, Ted Lamb Jr., late in the day to appeal the decision to the U.S. Supreme Court for a quick final determination which would remove all question about the reopening of schools. Lamb was one of the moderates retained in the recall election.

The closing of the four public high schools affected 3,700 students. Some transferred to other school districts; some attended hastily organized white private schools here and others turned to correspondent courses. Some stopped their education completely.

Private School Maps Fall Plans

Assumption Of Integration Of Little Rock Classes Spurs Program

By The Associated Press

LITTLE ROCK, June 20.—Officials of Raney High School announced Saturday that the school is planning to operate this fall on the assumption that Hall and Central High schools will be open and integrated.

Dr. T. J. Raney, president of the Little Rock Private School Corp., said Raney High will charge $15 a month per student for tuition. The school did not charge tuition this year.

Dr. Raney was one of three private schools established last fall when Gov. Orval E. Faubus closed the public schools against integration. The others are Baptist High and Trinity Interim Academy.

Indecision Indicated

Baptist High officials have indicated indecision as to whether it will operate this fall because of financial difficulties. Trinity, sponsored by the Episcopal Church, handled only about 16 students last year.

A three-judge Federal Court this week threw out the law by which Faubus closed the schools and the Little Rock school board announced that it is making plans to open the schools this fall on an integrated basis.

Raney and Supt. W. C. Brashers said Saturday that sophomore and junior students who attended Raney this year and who wish to attend next year will be registered this week by their teachers. School is still in session.

Mr. Brashers added that if as many as 1,000 to 1,200 register for next fall's term, the board will go ahead with plans for construction of a school building on land near Little Rock's Boyle Park.

Classes were held this year in a building at 16th and Lewis Streets. About 560 students were in the 1958-59 sophomore and junior classes.

Sophomores meet in a Methodist church building this year, but Mr. Brashers said it will not be used in the fall.

Tuition $135 Yearly

The tuition will be $135 a year for each student if about 600 enroll. That will bring about $9,000 a month into the school's treasury and leave $12,000 a month to be raised by the board. The school has been operated so far by donations.

Brashears said foreign languages will be added to the school's curricula for next year and that Raney officials are looking for two teachers for Latin, French and Spanish.

Raney is a segregationist-backed institution. Dr. Malcolm G. Taylor, president of the Capitol Citizen's Council, is the treasurer of the board and Dr. Raney, for whom the school board is named, is Gov. Orval E. Faubus' private physician.

Appeal Is Likely On School Ruling

Faubus Indicates He Plans Action Against Upset Of Arkansas Law

By KENNETH JOHNSON

From The Commercial Appeal Little Rock Bureau

LITTLE ROCK, June 19.—Gov. Orval Faubus strongly indicated Friday he will order his attorneys to appeal Thursday's three-judge ruling against the state school-closing law Mr. Faubus sponsored in a 1958 special session of the Legislature.

"You can safely speculate it will be appealed," he said.

Board Won't Appeal

The Little Rock School Board announced it didn't plan to initiate appeal. Everett Tucker Jr. said following a board conference with its attorney that the board was a "nominal defendant" in the case and therefore would leave appeal up to someone else.

Mr. Tucker said the board took the position the Governor and the State Department of Education were the principal defendants.

The Education Department enters the picture since it was designated as the agent to administer Act 5 which the three-judge court ruled against. Act 5, a companion measure to the school-closing law, withholds school funds from districts where schools have been closed and transfers the money to districts which take in "displaced" students.

State Action Noted

Governor Faubus said he probably would confer with his attorneys next week on the appeal question. He noted that since the Arkansas Supreme Court had upheld both acts, the Supreme Court might take a different view than did the three-judge court. He made that comment when asked if he thought it would be "useless" to appeal the three-judge ruling.

The majority of the school board is in favor of the four high schools being reopened here next fall.

Hays to Discuss Peacemaker Role In School Emergency at Little Rock

His role as peacemaker in the Little Rock school integration crisis will be discussed by former Rep. Brooks Hays, of Arkansas, next Wednesday at The Washington Post Book and Author Luncheon in the Statler-Hilton Hotel.

Hays is among three headlined speakers at the 12:30 p. m. affair, third such luncheon in the current season. Appearing with Hays will be Pat Frank, of "Mr. Adam" fame, who will discuss his latest book, "Alas, Babylon," and Helga Sandburg, who will talk about her new novel, "Measure My Love.'

Hays will discuss 'A Southern Moderate Speaks," his account of his vain personal fight to soothe warring Little Rock factions—a fight which cost him the House seat he had held since 1942. An ardent churchman, the 60-year-old native Arkansan has been president of the Southern Baptist Convention since 1957.

Tickets for the luncheon are $3.50 each. They are obtainable at the front counter of The Washington Post and at the following bookstores:

Airport Bookshops (Chevy Chase and National Airport), Ballantyne's, Better Mouse Trap (Alexandria), Brentano's Center Book Shop (Bethesda), Cucumber (Bethesda), Francis Scott Key, Franz Bader, Hecht's, Kann's (Virginia and Washington), Pearlmans, Pockers, Pursells, Savile, Sidney Kramers, Woodward & Lothrop and World Affairs.

RACIAL SUIT JUDGES

Three Named for Arkansas Integration Hearing

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Feb. 19 (UPI)—Judge Archibald K. Gardner named three judges today to hear Arkansas' first integration suit in an area where the population of Negroes and whites is nearly the same.

Parents of three Negro children in the Dollarway School District at Pine Bluff, Ark., forty-two miles southeast of here, have asked a three-judge Federal court to enjoin the district from preventing students from attending the white schools.

Judge Gardner, chief of the United States Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals, named Judge John B. Sanborn of St. Paul, Minn., who is on the Appellate Court; District Judges John E. Miller of Fort Smith, Ark., and Axel J. Beck of El Point, S. D., to hear the case.

No date has been set for the hearing.

Anti-Faubus Forces Gain Majority Of Board Votes

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (UPI)—Anti-Faubus forces attained a majority on the Little Rock School Board Wednesday in a recount of school board election votes. The results will not be final, however, until a judge makes an important ruling, perhaps next week.

The forces opposed to Gov. Orval Faubus won their apparent victory when Mrs. Charles W. Stephens came out ahead of Little Rock Traffic Judge Robert W. Laster by 7,012 to 7,008 votes.

In the Dec. 4 election, Mrs. Stephens was declared lost to Laster by 111 votes. She filed suit claiming more than 600 votes were illegal.

But the actual count in the election will not be final until Pulaski County Little Rock Circuit Judge J. Mitchell Cockrill rules whether votes cast in the election outside proper wards are legal. He said he might rule on that next week.

Mrs. Stephens is a member of a panel of "moderates" on the racial question which opposed die-hard segregationists in the election. If she is declared winner, the "moderates," most of whom oppose Gov. Orval Faubus, will hold a 4-to-2 majority over the segregationists. The board is presently deadlocked at 3 and 3.

Negro Sought Segregation Idea Termed "Ridiculous"

The contention of many Southerners that Negroes do not want their children to attend school with white children was branded as "ridiculous" by Virgil T. Blossom, school superintendent at Little Rock, 1953-58.

"Most Negro parents want their children accepted and want them to have better educational opportunities than they normally get under a segregated system," Blossom writes in the current (May 30) issue of The Saturday Evening Post.

Part Two of his report, "The Untold Story of Little Rock," says in many talks with Negro parents and leaders Blossom found them keenly aware of the dangers of immediate, complete integration.

"There were some who demanded speed," he says, "but most of them favored moderation for sound reasons — fear of economic retaliation, fear that the legislature would abolish public education or, in most instances, a sane desire to avoid a violent upheaval.

"They wanted to co - operate with the school board."

Blossom reports that at a school board meeting after the Supreme Court decision the six members agreed that the board's official position was opposed to the principle of the Court ruling, but that "it was now the law of the land and the law should be respected."

He finds it significant that not a single member of the board expressed any idea of refusing to obey the law.

The Post article tells of mounting pressures and a growing atmosphere of hysteria after the reeelection of Governor Faubus in 1956.

"All that was needed was a single gesture of firm and courageous leadership in behalf of law and order — and the danger would be gone," Blossom comments. "Where that leadership would have to originate was now obvious. The integration of Central High School was no longer a local problem. The segregationist leaders had succeeded in their strategy of building it into a state problem, with repercussions throughout the nation.

"Governor Faubus had tried desperately to confine integration to a local issue and had promised to support whatever policy was adopted in each school district.

"But he had wavered and faltered under segregationist pressure and had been maneuvered into a political corner."

Faubus school closure law held invalid

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., June 18—(AP)—A three-judge federal court struck down Gov. Orval E. Faubus' school closing law today and may have cleared the way for reopening Little Rock's public high schools this Fall.

The court reminded the Little Rock School Board that it is under a "continuing mandate" to carry out a previously-approved plan of integration for schools here.

Board President Everett Tucker Jr. said that under the court's ruling his group would make its plans on the assumption that all Little Rock schools will open in September.

FAUBUS OVERRODE a former board and closed the four high schools last September to block the integration plan.

He acted then under a hastily-passed law which he sponsored to give him authority to shut schools against court-ordered integration.

The federal court today declared this law unconstitutional and said Faubus' proclamation closing the schools was void.

TODAY'S FEDERAL COURT ruling also invalidated a companion act to the school closing law. This act provided for transfer of public funds from the Little Rock schools to others to which displaced pupils transferred.

U.S. COURT TO SIFT LITTLE ROCK CASE

3 Judges to Hear Argument Tomorrow on Arkansas' School-Closing Law

Special to The New York Times.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., May 2—The Arkansas school-closing law, which was ruled valid this week by the state Supreme Court, will be considered here Monday by a three-judge Federal court.

If the Federal court overturns the law, it could bring about a reopening of Little Rock's public high schools next fall. The four schools have been closed throughout the current academic year on the orders of Gov. Orval E. Faubus.

The school-closing law (Act 4 of 1958) permits the Governor to close schools that are under court orders to desegregate if, among other things, he determines that violence is impending.

In addition to this law, the Federal court will consider two other pro-segregation measures.

One Forbids State Aid

One, Act 5 of 1958, requires the withholding of state aid from closed schools and permits this money to be transferred to other schools attended by the displaced students.

The third, Act 151 of 1959, permits students who do not want to attend racially integrated schools to transfer their share of state aid to other schools.

Under Act 5, state aid has been denied to the Little Rock School District all year. About $200,000 of it was transferred to other schools, including a pro-segregation private school at Little Rock, before a Federal court ordered the payments stopped March 7 pending a final decision on the law's validity.

Law Invoked Last September

The Little Rock School District has said it will have a deficit at the end of the school year unless it gets the state-aid money that it was allocated.

Ordinarily, it would receive about $550,000 in state aid in a school year.

The school-closing law was enacted last August at an emergency session of the Arkansas Legislature.

On Sept. 12, 1958, the day the United States Supreme Court ordered integration to proceed at Little Rock Central High School, Governor Faubus closed Central and the city's three other public high schools. He said he had determined that there would be violence if Central opened on an integrated basis.

The Arkansas Supreme Court ruled last Monday that the law was a valid exercise of the state's police power if used as a temporary measure to keep the peace.

It was a 4-3 decision. The three justices who opposed the majority view contended that the law violated a provision of the state constitution that guarantees a free public education to all citizens between 6 and 21 years of age.

Equal Protection Cited

In the Federal court case, the United States Justice Department has argued in a brief that the school-closing law denies to residents of Little Rock the equal protection of the laws. It notes that in all other areas of Arkansas the state provides a free high-school education.

The Justice Department also maintains that the law represents an "evasive scheme" to avoid the United States Supreme Court's desegregation decree and that the threat of violence cannot be used to justify the denial of constitutional rights.

The challenge of the Arkansas laws was filed by attorneys for the Negro children who are the plaintiffs in the Little Rock school-integration case. The original suit was filed in 1956 and resulted in the integration of Central High under armed guard in the 1957-58 school year.

The judges who will hear the case are John E. Miller of Fort Smith, Axel J. Beck of Elk Point, S. D., and John B. Sanborn of St. Paul, Minn.

Graduation Rites Set Tonight For Private Segregated School

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP)—The T. J. Raney High School— a practical experiment in resistance to integration — graduates its first senior class tonight.

The 196 seniors will hear a commencement address by Gov. Orval E. Faubus who paved the way for creation of the all-white private school by shutting Little Rock's public high schools against integration.

Raney enrolled about 850 of the 3,700 Little Rock students displaced by school closing. Its doors opened Oct. 20 and its students had a full 180-day term.

Diplomas will be awarded by the man for whom the school was named, Dr. T. J. Raney, president of the Little Rock Private School Corp., which operates Raney High.

1,000 REGISTERED

Even as plans for commencement were completed, Raney planned for next year by registering about 1,000 students for 1959-60 classes. The number includes most of the 10th and 11th graders who attended this year and some 300 ninth graders from five junior high schools.

Some of those who registered probably will not attend Raney next year if the public schools are open. A three-judge federal court recently struck down Faubus' school closing law and the Little Rock school board Thursday night officially announced it would open the public schools this fall under a court-approved plan of token integration.

Raney students had little criticism to offer of their school, which was organized from scratch and operating within 40 days after the public schools were closed.

Most said they preferred the smaller school, that students seemed more friendly than they had at Central High and Hall High, that school spirit was better and the teaching staff competent.

And many said their grades had improved. Some attributed this to increased personal interest in studies, others said frankly that Raney was "easier" than Central or Hall.

Raney offered all the basic high school courses. It had a student newspaper, an annual, a basketball team and a track team. There was no band, but Supt. W. C. Brashears said one would be organized next year.

The school opened too late to field a football team, but a coach has been hired for next season. And college preparatory courses—such as Latin, French and Spanish—will be added to the curriculum.

Brashears, who has been a school-man for 35 years, said Raney would have to be classed as "a first rate high school." He said it compared favorably with high schools he had administered in Texas. He said Raney's 11th graders ranked above the national norm on a series of standardized tests.

Linda Beth Davis, editor of the Raney Rebel, called her year at Raney "the best of my high school career."

Nicky Avants, a junior, said he planned to return to Raney next year.

"The facilities weren't new and modern like at Hall," Avants said. "But I think they (Raney officials) did a marvelous job with what they had."

The $15 monthly tuition Raney proposes to charge next year apparently was not deterring students from registering. Raney charged no tuition this year.

There seems little doubt at this point that Raney will be open next year, whether the public schools are or not. Faubus had indicated often that he will not interfere with the public schools if a 1959 law, which would permit disbursement of state funds to schools such as Raney, is permitted to stand.

Expelled Little Rock Girl Happy

Minniejean Brown Says 'Those People Have Decided to Wake Up'

By Terry Ferrer
Education Editor

Minniejean Brown, the Little Rock junior who was expelled from Central High School fifteen months ago for answering back to a white student's taunts, said yesterday that the Monday recall election ousting three segregationist school board members in Little Rock was "a great victory." "I'm very glad those people have decided to wake up," she said. "I'm surprised they haven't before."

Minnijean, now seventeen, will be graduated from the New Lincoln School, 31 W. 110th St., a private integrated school, on June 5 with twenty-four classmates. Four of them are Negroes. In an interview yesterday in the school building, Minnijean said:

"Tomorrow would be the day I would have graduated from Central High—if it were open. The closed schools haven't been much help to the kids planning to go to college.

"It seems the people in Little Rock needed an excuse to get mad—over those forty-four ousted teachers. Actually they should have been mad enough to do something about the teachers before. If I was a parent, I'd be furious if my child wasn't in school. The people should have spoken up. Little Rock is bad for America and bad for democracy. People are talking about it all over the world."

Minnijean said that she will return to Little Rock after commencement with her mother, Mrs. W. B. Brown, who arrives here Sunday for her daughter's graduation. She said she was "just dying" to go home and see her friends and her two brothers, Bobbie, eleven, and Dwight, four, and her sister Phyllis, ten. "I love Arkansas," she added, "But live there?—I don't know."

Next fall, Minnijean will enter Mount Sinai Hospital School of Nursing here to study for three years to be a registered nurse (her mother is a practical nurse). "I was accepted at Michigan State and Upsala (in East Orange, N. J.), but I decided on Mount Sinai and nursing."

Unfortunately, Minnijean said, "I'll have to spend the summer tutoring—I'm not very good in math and I've conditioned it. Mrs. (Daisy) Bates (chairman of the Arkansas branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People) said she is trying to arrange for me to be tutored by one of the ousted teachers. I'd also like to get a job, maybe as a saleslady. But then they don't have Negro salesladies in Little Rock. I wouldn't dare be an elevator operator—I might run into some of my old Central classmates."

Minnijean was one of the nine Negroes admitted to Central in September 1957. After several incidents, she was expelled after a white student called her "nigger, nigger" and other names, and she retaliated with "white trash." Central High did not open last fall. At a press conference in Little Rock yesterday, Gov. Orval E. Faubus said he saw no mandate to reopen the four closed high schools in Monday's election returns.

Yesterday afternoon, Minnijean, dressed in a red shirt, gray shantung skirt, stockings and red T-strap flat sandals, was enthusiastic about the school play in which she appeared last night as one of the principals. "I have two songs," she said, "and I'm man crazy—in the play. The play has a moral: wherever you go in the world you have to work for what you want."

Rewarding N. Y. Years

Turning serious, Minnijean said that "these have been very rewarding years in New York." She entered New Lincoln at mid-term last year on a $600 scholarship. This year, she said, her scholarship was $525, and her mother made up the rest of the $1,050 tuition in instalment payments.

Minnijean has been living at the home of Dr. and Mrs. Kenneth B. Clark, of 17 Pinecrest Lane, Hastings - on - Hudson, N. Y.. Dr. Clark is associate professor of psychology at City College and a member of the New York State Youth Commission. Mamie Clark, his wife, is head of the Northside Center for Child Development, a rehabilitation center for underprivileged children at the same address as New Lincoln.

The young girl is also serious when she spoke of her father, Willie Bob Brown, fifty-seven, who on Feb. 19 was found guilty of voluntary manslaughter in the fatal shooting June 22 of Elmer Issaac in Little Rock. He was sentenced to five years' imprisonment, but is appealing. Dr. Clark said Minnijean "could have collapsed over that, but she just buckled down and studied harder."

On the subject of integration, Minnijean said: "I have been in New Lincoln and I see how we get along. Why can't the South do it? I can't see the reasons—they're not valid."

Negro Girl in Little Rock Crisis Gets High School Diploma Here

By ROBERT ALDEN

Minnijean Brown, standing tall and proud in a white dress with a corsage of red roses in her hand, was graduated yesterday from New Lincoln High School in Manhattan.

The commencement exercises marked a happy ending to a bitter chapter in the dispute over racial integration at Central High School in Little Rock. Minnijean had been one of the nine Negro children permitted to enter the Arkansas school in September, 1957.

Minnijean, 16 years old at the time, was picked out as a special target by a small group of white students. She was kicked twice, had hot soup poured on her back in the school cafeteria, was struck on the head by a girl wielding a handbag and was called "nigger, nigger" many times.

Finally Minnijean turned on one of her tormentors and called her "white trash." As a result, she was suspended from school in February 1958. She was immediately offered a scholarship by the New Lincoln High School, a private institution at 31 West 110th Street.

Yesterday she participated in the commencement exercises with her twenty-seven fellow graduates, Negro and white. She was treated the same as the rest of the graduates except for a flurry of picture-taking before the ceremonies began.

Minnijean stood up well through most of the picture-posing. But when she was asked to stand next to her mother, Mrs. Willie Brown, who had come from Little Rock for the occasion, Minnijean broke down and started to cry.

"I need some water," she said. "Please let me get some water."

Once the photographers had cleared away, however, she was happy again as she exchanged congratulations with fellow graduates. She told them that she planned to spend the summer in Little Rock and then enter the Mount Sinai Hospital School of Nursing here in the fall.

As Minnijean was handed her diploma, John J. Brooks, director of the school, pointed to the tassels attached to it and said that they represented "the love and understanding that I hope will always bind us together."

Minnijean Brown Graduates In N.Y.

NEW YORK (ANPA)—Minnijean Brown, 18, who was expelled last year from Central High School in Little Rock, Ark, for "talking back to a white girl," was one of 28 graduates at the New Lincoln School here.

She received her diploma from Dr John J Brooks, director of the private, interracial school, who said Minnijean was "one of the most popular kids around here."

Minnijean, whose class included three other colored children, plans to enter Mt. Sinai Hospital's School of Nursing here for three years of training to become a nurse.

In the fall of 1957, she was one of nine colored students to enter Central High School in Little Rock after President Eisenhower sent troops there to enforce a Federal court order for desegregation of the school But on Feb. 17 she was expelled for an altercation with a white student at the school. She came to New Lincoln on a $1,050 scholarship.

"It's been the best school I've ever been to or even imagined," she said Friday

Girl Expelled At Little Rock A Graduate Here

Minnijean Brown, eighteen, who was expelled last year from the Little Rock, Ark., school system for "talking back to a white girl," was one of twenty-eight graduates of the New Lincoln School, 31 W. 110th St., yesterday.

She received her diploma from Dr. John J. Brooks, director of the private, interracial school, who said Minnijean was "one of the most popular kids around here." Minnijean, whose class included three other Negro children, plans to enter Mt. Sinai Hospital's School of Nursing here for three years' training to become a registered nurse.

In the autumn of 1957, she was one of nine Negroes to enter Little Rock Central High School after President Eisenhower sent in troops to prevent rioting over integrataion. But on Feb. 17, 1958, Minnijean was expelled for arguing with white students at the school. She came to New Lincoln on a $1,050 scholarship. "It's been the best school I've ever been to or even imagined," she said yesterday.

Minnijean Graduates

Virgil T. Blossom, former superintendent of schools at Little Rock, in a full length book just published, has given his version of just what happened in that unhappy city.

He has seen fit to blame a lot of people, and organizations including Govs. Orval Faubus and Marvin Griffin, President Eisenhower, then Attorney General Herbert Brownell, Mrs. Daisy Bates, Thurgood Marshall, the White Citizens Council, the NAACP, segregationists and integrationists.

But nowhere does, he deal with the unexplained expulsion from Central High School in February, 1958 of Minniejean Brown. It would appear he muffed a splendid opportunity to let the world know why this kicked, tripped, harassed and maligned girl had to pay for the abuse to which she was subjected by hostile schoolmates.

We think an explanation of his side of the story is due.

As far as we are concerned, Minnijean has vindicated herself. She did that when, with the same poise and self-assurance she displayed in Little Rock, she graduated with honors last week from the private New Lincoln High School in New York City.

Minniejean's mom sees her graduate

NEW YORK — Spirited little Minniejean Brown had one of the proudest mothers in the entire audience last week when she was graduated from the New Lincoln School here, 16 months after being expelled from Central High School in Little Rock.

Mrs. Imogene Brown evinced great joy when she saw her daughter take her diploma at the school which offered her a after she was ousted from Central High School for talking back to a white pupil who heckled her with racial epithets.

Minniejean, one of the nine colored pupils who desegregated Central under Federal court orders in 1957, was expelled from th hool for calling a girl "trash" after being called, "n—er."

* * *

"YOU WOULDNT think that something that started out under such unfortunate circumstances could end so wonderfully," Mrs. Brown smiled.

She travelled all the way from Little Rock to witness her eldest child's graduation here, an event many Little Rock parents won't see this semester —for all four of the city's high schoos hve been shut down to avoid integration.

"It's not the ending, it's merely the beginning for Minniejean," Mrs. Brown injected happily. Minniejean herself furthered the statement by saying:

"I plan to return to Little Rock this summer before beginning a three-year course at the Mount Sinai School of Nursing next year.

* * *

"I HOPE all the kids come home for the summer because we've got so much to tell each other."

She was referring to the eight other pupils who attended Central before it was shut down by Gov. Orval Faubus.

Mrs. Brown said only five of the children are still in Little Rock. She named Thelma Mothershed, Melba Patillo, Elizabeth Eckford, Carlotta Walls and Jefferson Thomas.

She said they all took extension courses from the University of Arkansas, just as the white children did, since schools have been closed.

ERNEST GREEN, the only member of his race to be graduated from Central, has just completed first year studies at Michigan State University.

Terrance Roberts attended high school in Los Angeles and Gloria Ray enrolled in a Kansas City, Mo. school, Mrs. Brown said.

NEW FIGHT BREWS NEAR LITTLE ROCK

Parents Lose First Move to Delay Integration but Plan Appeal to Faubus

Special to The New York Times.

LITTLE ROCK, Aug. 17—Students at Little Rock's public high schools began their second week of integrated classes today virtually without incident.

The city seemed to be settling into an atmosphere of calm after nearly two years of strife over racial integration in the schools.

While the Little Rock scene was peaceful, there was growing sign of trouble at the Dollarway School District near Pine Bluff.

A spokesman for a group of residents of the Dollarway School District said that a petition was being prepared to asked Gov. Orval E. Faubus to stop the beginning of court-ordered integration there on Sept. 8.

Federal Judge Axel J. Beck, sitting in Little Rock, denied today the Dollarway Board's request for a delay of an injunction requiring school authorities to enroll three Negroes in the previously all-white Dollarway School.

Citizens Council Formed

A branch of the Citizens Council was organized last week at Dollarway. A rally protesting integration has been scheduled for Friday night.

The petition addressed to Mr. Faubus asked the Governor to use "all of the forces at your command" to prevent integration. A spokesman said it had contained 500 signatures.

The Little Rock, Ark., school superintendent, Terrell E. Powell, said that so far only two white students — both at Hall High School — had requested that they be assigned to classes separate from those attended by Negroes.

This issue was raised yesterday by the father of a white girl attending Hall High. He cited a state law, Act 7 of 1958,

NO DIFFICULTY: Jefferson Thomas, 16, arriving at Central High School in Little Rock, Ark. There was little disturbance as only Negro student began first full week of classes.

which prohibits school officials from forcing students to attend integrated classes.

The School Board has said that it will abide by the law so long as it is on the statute books but has expressed hope that there will be few requests for separate classes.

All four Negroes enrolled in Hall and Central High Schools were in classes today with their white schoolmates.

Negro Student Is Jeered

At Central High a few white students jeered at Jefferson Thomas—the lone Negro registered there—at the end of the school day, but nothing came of the catcalls.

The three Negro girls enrolled at Hall came and went to school today without any sign of resentment from the white students.

Meanwhile Mrs. L. C. Bates of Little Rock Arkansas, president of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, said that the Federal Government was giving her "the nice runaround" on her request for personal protection.

She said that she had received a telegram from Gerald D. Morgan, Deputy Assistant to President Eisenhower, saying that her appeal for protection had been forwarded to the Justice Department.

Mrs. Bates said that last month she had written to the Justice Department to ask for protection but had been told that Federal authorities could not intervene.

Last Thursday, she sent a telegram to President Eisenhower asking the Federal Government to provide her personal protection. Someone fired a bullet at her house early last week. Two days later plainclothesmen of the State Police arrested her house guards for carrying a concealed weapon.

PARENTS ASK FAUBUS BLOCK INTEGRATION

LITTLE ROCK, Ark, Aug. 20 (URI)—White residents of the Dollarway School District near Pine Bluff formally petitioned Gov. Oral E. Faubus today to prevent integration of their white school by three Negro students.

A petition bearing 1,202 signatures, said to represent 90 per cent of the whie residents of the district, was delivered to the Governor by L. D. Poynter, president of the Arkansas Citizens Council.

Governor Faubus would not say what action he would take to prevent integration of the school as ordered by a Federal court. The Dollarway school is scheduled to open Sept. 8.

The Governor said he would give the request "the most careful consideration.

Federal Judge Axel J. Beck of Elk Point, S. D., ordered the school integrated and then refused to delay his order at the request of Dollarway school board attorneys.

The school board then appealed his order to the United States Court of Appeals in the Eighth Circuit, St. Louis. The appearl is pending.

Governor Faubus is under a Federal injunction not to interfere with integration in Little Rock, but the order does not apply elsewhere.

Segregationists planned a state-wide rally tomorrow at a public stadium in Pine Bluff, not far from the Dollarway school.

NEGRO STUDENT HAPPY

Boy Tells Little Rock School Aides 'Everything Is Fine'

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Aug. 19 (UPI) — Jefferson Thomas, 16 years old, the only Negro attending Central High School here, told his principal and two school board members today that he had "no complaints" and "everything is fine."

The principal, Jess Matthews, and the school board members, Russell H. Matson Jr. and Ted L. Lamb, called young Thomas into Mr. Matthews' office today. They asked him how things had been going in classes with white students.

The school board members said their talk had not necessarily resulted from charges by segregationists that young Thomas had been fighting with white students. Mr. Matthews said teachers at Central had reported no trouble.

Jefferson Thomas and three Negro girls at Hall High School attended their sixth day of integrated classes today without incident.

LITTLE ROCK MAPS PUPIL SEPARATION

Head of Board Backs Law for Segregated Classes in Integrated Schools

By United Press International.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 16—Everett Tucker Jr., president of the school board at Little Rock, Ark., said here today that it would honor a 1958 Arkansas law permitting segregated classes within integrated schools.

The law has been invoked by a Little Rock attorney on behalf of his 15-year old daughter.

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People plans to fight the law in court if Little Rock tries to use it.

Appearing on a television program of the Columbia Broadcasting System "Face the Nation," Mr. Tucker said of the law:

"As long as it is on the books we'll abide by it."

Ready to "Go Along"

Asked what would happen if parents of all the white children in the integrated schools sought segregated classes, he responded:

"I assume we'd have to go along."

Mr. Tucker, who described himself as a segregationist, declined to say whether he would "welcome" a test of the law. He commented, however, that he was "confident" that it would be tested.

He said that, while he favored separation of the races, he believed that the legal choice now has some degree of desegregation or no public school at all.

He declared that he felt it was possible for Little Rock to open schools on an integrated basis this year because of a "complete change in City Hall," A new police chief, new police uniforms and higher paychecks. It all had "worked wonders" and improved morale, he added.

One suggestion rejected by Mr. Tucker was that the schools be segregated by sexes rather than by races.

"Little Rock doesn't led itself to that arrangement," he asserted, "because we have three high schools, but only two sexes.

Asked about the comment of Gov. Orval E. Faubus of Arkansas that the Little Rock School Board had "betrayed" the people, he said that Governor Faubus, up for re-election, had asked the people to remedy the situation at the polls.

Challenge is Offered

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Aug. 16 (UPI)—A representative of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People announced today plans to fight any attempt to segregate Negro students in integrated schools.

Wiley Branton, Arkansas attorney for the organization, said that if the Little Rock School Board tried to conduct segregated classes under provisions of a 1958 state law he would take it into court.

The announcement followed a statement by John A. McLeod Jr., a white attorney, that he had invoked the law to keep his 15-year-old daughter from studying in the same classes with Negroes. The girl attends Hall High School, to which three Negro girls are assigned.

The law provides that no student be forced to attend classes with members of another race.

Supreme Court Is Cited

In his announcement Mr. Branton asserted:

"It's no different from a ruling by the United States Supreme Court in the case of McLaurin v. the Oklahoma Board of Regents. The court ruled that a Negro once admitted to an integrated school could not be segregated within the school."

Little Rock Schools Quiet as Integration Succeeds on 2d Day

By CLAUDE SITTON

Special to The New York Times.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Aug. 13—The second day of desegregated classes passed today at the city's newly reopened high schools with no attempt at disruption.

The police continued their heavy guard at Central and Hall High Schools. They are the only schools here with white and Negro students. But the police relaxed security measures by permitting free access to streets adjoining the schools.

Four youths were picked up in a car at Central. Officers said they had found a mock, snub-nosed pistod in the vehicle. Another youth was arrested when a group of thirty onlookers were dispersed there earlier. Other arrests were made elsewhere for minor infractions.

However, segregationists made no attempt to repeat their efforts yesterday to storm Central High.

The Little Rock School Board reported that no disciplinary problem had arisen inside the schools because of desegregation. And a rumored walkout of white students at Central failed to materialize.

The jailing of three Negroes by the Arkansas State Police drew an accusation of harassment from Mrs. Daisy Bates, Arkansas president of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Harassment Denied

Mrs. Bates said the men had been guarding her home, a target of bombing attempts in the past. The police denied the charge. Two of the men were charged with possessing concealed weapons.

At a news conference, Mrs. Bates released the contents of a plea to President Eisenhower for protection. She contended local and Federal authorities had refused to provide any.

One of the three arrested men is Ellis Thomas, the father of a Negro student at Central High. His 16-year-old son, Jefferson, entered and left the school unmolested. White students had yelled taunts at him and another Negro student, Elizabeth Eckford, 17, on the streets yesterday. They seemed to take little notice of him this afternoon.

Miss Eckford had come to the school yesterday for conferences with student advisers. She did not return today. She has enough credits to enter college.

Carlotta Walls is the other Negro admitted to Central by the Little Rock School Board under Pupil Placement Regulations. She is attending summer school outside the city.

No Incidents at Hall

The three Negro girls enrolled at Hall High returned there this morning. There were no incidents at the school, which is in one of the city's best residential sections.

Hall is holding two-and-a-half-hour sessions in the morning this week. Central is conducting its abbreviated classroom work in the afternoon. This is done so that the police can concentrate their forces at one school.

Education officials have said all four high schools will resume regular schedules next week. The two other high schools are Technical, an all-white institution, and Horance Mann, limited to Negroes.

Gov. Orval E. Faubus indicated that he had no immediate plans for attempting to halt the resumption of desegregation here. He told a gathering last night at near-by Mount Mebo that he did not know if there was anything more he could do.

"If there is, I'll do it," he commented.

The Governor kept the four senior high schools shut throughout last year. He did that rather than to allow Central to admit any of the nine Negroes who had attended Little Rock's first desegregated classes in 1957 under the surveillance of Federal troops.

The law that empowered him to take this step was recently held unconstitutional by a three-judge Federal panel here.

Governor Accuses Chief

The Governor, in his speech, accused Police Chief Eugene G. Smith of "blackjacking" a woman yesterday in breaking up an attempt by a mob of segregationists to breach police lines and reach Central High.

Chief Smith, who won high praise from the city's moderate faction for his efforts, dismissed Mr. Faubus' criticism with a shdug.

Apparently discouraged by the stern stand taken by the police, the white supremacists turned to other means today in pressing their cause.

Amis Guthridge, attorney for the Capital Citizens Council, and the segregationist organization's formerpresident, the Rev. Wesley Pruden, called in newsmen to denounce what they termed 'the Hungarian gestapo tactics of our city directors and the police department.'

Jailing of 27 Protested

They argued that twenty-seven persons, only three of whom were adults, had been hauled to jail for "attempting to assemble peacefully at Central High School."

Mr. Pruden announced the establishment of a "freedom fund" to provide money for their defense. He said that he would be treasurer.

A cameraman asked if money from the fund "could be used to repair my camera that one of your 'goons' smashed yesterday." Mr. Pruden expressed shock and Mr. Guthridge said he was "sorry to hear about that."

The Negroes arrested by the State Police last night with Mr. Thomas were Isaac Mullen, a tire recapper and deputy sheriff, and Dr. G. P. Freeman, a dentist.

Mr. Mullen was not charged with anything. But Lieut. Paul R. McDonald, officer in charge of the criminal investigation division of the State Police, said the Pulaski (Little Rock) County sheriff's office had told him to hold the man's badge and credentials. Both Mr. Thomas and Dr. Freeman were released in $200 bond.

Lieut. McDonald said officers found a revolver in a car driven by Mr. Thomas shortly after he had left Mrs. Bates' home. He said a rifle and a pistol were discovered in the automobile in which the deputy and Dr. Freeman were riding.

FAUBUS HAD PLAN FOR USING TROOPS

He Was Ready to Repeat '57 Little Rock Intervention If Mob Had Triumphed

by CLAUDE SITTON

Special to The New York Times.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Aug. 14—Gov. Orval E. Faubus said today that he had been prepared to use the state police and the National Guard if demonstration at Central High School Wednesday had "gotten out of hand."

He declined to say whether he would have prevented two Negro students from entering the school as it resumed classes on a desegregated basis.

Four Negroes, one at Central and three at Hall High attended the third day of desegregated classes today without incident. The city's four senior high schools were reopened Wednesday, after having remained closed for a year.

Everett Tucker Jr., chairman of the Little Rock school board, said all signs pointed to a "return to complete normalcy."

Faubus Leaving Capital

The Governor apparently agreed. He told a news conference that the reports he had received from the State Police "indicated that things are relatively quiet."

He said he was leaving the capital and would not return until some time next week.

Mr. Faubus accused Police Chief Eugene G. Smith of Little Rock of dealing with a mob at Central on Wednesday "the same way that the Russians handled it in Hungary."

After demonstrators had sought to breach police lines in an apparent effort to storm the school, they were dispersed by firemen's hoses and policemen swinging nightsticks.

A number of the city's leaders have praised the chief's actions.

"I can tell you now," Mr. Faubus told a news conference, "that if the situation had gotten out of hand, I was prepared to take over by using the state police and the National Guard if necessary."

Enjoined By Court

He declared that he would not have been "at all concerned" by a Federal court injunction that forbids him from interfering with desegregation.

He called out National Guardsmen in 1957. They turned away nine Negro students at Central. The injunction forced him to withdraw the troops.

The Governor said that "certainly, there is no harassment" of Mrs. Daisy Bates, Arkansas president of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Mr. Bates appealed to President Eisenhower yesterday for protection after the state police arrested three men who had been guarding her home. Two of them were charged with possessing concealed weapons.

Mr. Bates Threatened

The Bates house has been the target of numerous bombing attempts, according to the N. A. A. C. P. official. She said that Federal and local officials had refused to provide protection.

"I think perhaps it's a grandstand play," commented Mr. Faubus, "but she's a better judge of that than I am."

The Governor made an implied denial of his critics' frequent contention that he had become a captive of the militant segregationist faction.

A newsman quoted a Chinese proverb that says he who rides a tiger dare not dismount, and asked Mr. Faubus if he felt he was on a tiger.

"I don't know how it would be to ride a tiger," he answered, "but I used to ride a bucking mule in the Ozarks and I never saw the time when I couldn't get off if I wanted to."

Separate Classroom Law's Use Urged in Little Rock

Constitution Atlanta Ga
Mon. 8-17

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP)—The [illegible] Sunday of segregated classes operating within Little Rock's integrated high schools.

John A. McLeod Jr., an attorney who invoked rarely mentioned segregationist legislation in behalf of his daughter, Ann, said School Supt. Terrell Powell had assured him the school board would abide by the provision which said no student can be forced to sit in the same classroom with a person of another race.

Miss McLeod is one of more than 700 white students at Hall High where three Negro girls are enrolled. One of them is a junior, in the same grade as Miss McLeod. Central High has one Negro boy and more than 1,400 white students. The other public high schools in operation are the all-white Tech and the all-Negro Horace Mann.

McLeod said he had invited other parents to take advantage of the law. He also suggested that if other states confronted with integration problems would enact similar laws, it might reduce tension because white students who so desired could have all-white classes.

The sparate classroom law—so far untested in court—was passed in August 1958, during a special legislative session called by Gov. Orval E. Faubus to enact segregationist measures.

There has been no tension within the two integrated high schools, but in the area of Central High a brief melee took place last Wednesday. About 200 persons refused police orders to disperse after marching from a segregationist rally at the State Capitol. Police used nightsticks and fire-hoses spurted water on the crowd to break up the demonstration. Twenty-four persons were arrested.

Extra Time Given Board In Little Rock

Advertiser Montgomery Ala.
P. 1 June 18-22-57

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP)—The Little Rock School Board was granted extra time Saturday in which to file a brief defending its use of pupil assignment policies under an integration order.

The previous deadline for filing was Friday.

U.S. Dist. Judge John E. Miller gave the board until Sept. 1 to answer two motions filed by attorneys for the National Assn., for the Advancement of Colored People. These seek to restrain the board from using a state pupil placement law to assign students, and force it to make assignments solely on the basis of the attendance area in which a student lives. The board has used this law to keep desegregation to a minimum.

Seventeen Negro children, placed at all-Negro Horace Mann High School after they had applied for admission to white Central and Hall Highs, have stayed out of school in protest. Four Negroes attend Central and Hall. Except for one brief incident no trouble has ocurred.

Stubborn white resistance boiled up meanwhile at Arkansas' newest integration trouble spot, the Dollarway School District near Pine Bluff, 42 miles southeast of here. More than 1,000 persons attended a rally of the segregationist Dollarway Citizens Council Friday night.

Delay Asked School Mixing In Arkansas

Advertiser Montgomery Ala.
Sun. 8-30-57

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — Arkansas Atty. General Bruce Bennett moved Saturday to avert immediate race-mixing at the Dollarway School near Pine Bluff, where segregationist resistance is mounting steadily to scheduled integration. The school is set to open Sept. 8.

Bennett filed a friend of the court brief with the eighth U.S. circuit court of appeals in St. Louis, which Monday will hear a Dollarway School Board motion to stay the Dollarway integration order.

Federal district Judge Axel J. Beck has directed the Dollarway School Board to admit three Negroes.

Segregationists have been massing support and threaten to block integration at all costs. They appealed to Gov. Orval E. Faubus to use all his forces to keep the Negroes out. Faubus has said only that he is watching the situation closely and won't shirk his responsibilities to put down any disorder.

"My interests in this case are in averting trouble at Dollarway and keeping the Arkansas pupil placement laws from being torpedoed," Bennett said in a press conference.

Bennett said Judge Beck ignored pupil placement law provisions in ordering three Negroes into the formerly all-white school. In the same action, however, Beck upheld the placement laws, but said Dollarway School Board was misusing them.

The attorney general charged that if Beck's action is allowed to stand, pupil placement laws will hold no value.

"And they've already been held constitutional by the United States Supreme Court," Bennett said emphatically.

The placement laws allow school boards to assign students to schools for various reasons, not including race.

The U.S. Supreme Court upheld Alabama pupil placement laws, after which the Arkansas laws were patterned.

Tension Subsides At Central High

Constitution P. 1
Atlanta, Ga,
Sat. 9-15-57

By MARION GAINES
Constitution Staff Writer

LITTLE ROCK—Negro student Jefferson Thomas said Friday that "conditions are better" inside Central High School and thus far he has encountered no organized effort to "embarrass or harass me" as he did in 1957.

"It hasn't been too bad at all," the 16-year-old Thomas told The Constitution from his home after Central and Hall High Schools had finished their third day of integration without incident.

Earlier Friday, Gov. Faubus revealed he had state police and Arkansas National Guardsmen primed "to take over" at Central High had Little Rock police been unable to cope with the desegregation crisis there.

"All arrangements were made," said Faubus.

At the same time Faubus branded as a "grandstand play" the appeal by Mrs. Daisy Bates, Arkansas head of the NAACP, to President Eisenhower for "protection" from state police.

Faubus said state troopers have engaged in "no harassment" of anybody. Mrs. Bates' charge stemmed from the arrest by state police of three Negroes, one of them Ellis Thomas Sr., father of the lone Negro at Central.

The younger Thomas and eight other Negroes became known the world over as the "Little Rock nine" two years ago when they desegregated Central under the protection of U.S. paratroopers.

After attending Central alone for the past two days, Thomas said integrated classes have been free of the racial clashes that occurred in 1957.

Asked if he found it "lonely" as the only Negro among more than 1,000 white students, Thomas quickly replied:

'No, you don't go to school for social life—to socialize—anyway. You go to school to study and learn something."

The Negro senior said his "homeroom" classmates "seemed to be very friendly." But he added that none of the white students has made any effort to be "especially friendly."

In another development Friday, Supt. Terrell Powell confirmed that 15 to 18 Negroes have refused to show up for classes at all-Negro Horace Mann High. The Negroes on "strike" were assigned to Mann High by the school board under a pupil placement law that has enabled integration thus far to be held to one Negro at Central and three Negro girls at Hall.

A spokesman for the Negro students said they are prepared to "stay out of school the whole year" if the school board refuses to approve their requests for reassignment to Central.

The tension that has fairly crackled for two days among city police guarding Central and Hall was visibly diminishing Friday.

After Thomas, again unmolested, entered Central Friday afternoon, city policemen stood around laughing and joking with each other and with newsmen—an event that would have been unheard of in the two tension-packed preceding days.

The police at Central swung into action only once, and that was simply to chase from the area a pickup truck that cruised through bearing the sign: "We're for Faubus."

The People of Little Rock Are Due Commendation

Constitution Atlanta Ga.
P 4 7 M 8-21-57

The story of school desegregation at Little Rock, Ark., is not ended yet. It may not be, fully, for another generation. But at least it can be said that city and school authorities showed admirable determination to maintain order in the first few hours after the reopening of Little Rock high schools with token desegregation.

And if this determination continues and is upheld, as it has been to the time this is written, much of the credit must go to the people of Little Rock—all but a few diehards and hotheads who put on the street demonstration. It is sickening to see men having their heads bloodied with police clubs, and to see fire hoses turned on women and youngsters in a public street. But we have to remember why the necessity arose, who provoked it, for what reason and what might have happened if the outnumbered police had not finally resorted to some rough tactics.

The warnings from the school board and city authorities reflected laudable resolve that Little Rock would handle its own lawless element and bow to the authority of the courts, however reluctantly, without offering necessity or excuse for the return of federal troops. And this, in turn, appears to reflect some considerable change in many minds, not about school segregation, perhaps, but about the importance of public schooling and good community spirit and the necessity of orderly compliance with the law of the land rooted deeply in the principles of our American democracy.

Even Gov. Faubus has changed his tune radically, at least for the moment. Both he and his methods of trying to defy and frustrate federal authority have failed conspicuously.

The people of Little Rock have been through a very trying period. Common sense and concern for the welfare of their children and community seem to have gained the upper hand. They will, if all goes well now, win admiration and new respect from the American people. They will undo the great harm that the Little Rock episode of 1957 did us all in the eyes of the world.

Harass Lone Negro At Central High

Defender Chicago Ill
Sat 8-29-59 p. 9

By BRYCE MILLER

LITTLE ROCK, Ark.—(UPI)—White students jeered at Jefferson Thomas as he walked out of Central High school Monday. It was the first open harassment of Negro students who have integrated two Little Rock high schools.

The three Negro girls who are attending Hall High school walked out undisturbed at noon. The high schools are on a half-day schedule because the school board thinks it is still too hot to hold full day classes.

About 20 or 25 students clustered across the street at Central as Thomas walked outside and stood waiting for a car to taek him home.

YELL INSULTS

"What's the matter, Blackie, isn't your bus going to come," one girl shouted. Another shouted "Daisy's Boy."

Mrs. Daisy Bates is the Negro integration leader in Little Rock.

Police stood by directing traffic as the white students jeered at Thomas. They watched the group closely, but made no attempt to run them off.

WARNING GLANCE

Thomas showed no reaction until a girl who identified herself as Elizabeth Doland walked across the street and yelled back to her girl friends: "I don't like it on this side." At the same time a blond boy with a duck-tailed haircut walked up to Thomas and said something to the Negro through cupped hands so newsmen couldn't hear.

Thomas threw a warning glance at the boy and the boy retreated.

A few minutes later, a car arrived for Thomas and he drove off.

LATEST TACTIC

Meanwhile, school officials reported students were apparently ignoring the opportunity to use a state law providing for segregated classes inside the schools.

It is the latest tactic in the integration battle. . . A "sleeper" law on the Arkansas Statute books that provides no student shall be forced to attend classes with a member of another race.

The harassment came as President Eisenhower telegramed Mrs. Daisy Bates he has turned her request for protection from violence over to the justice department.

WIRES PRESIDENT

Mrs. Bates, Arkansas president of the NAACP, wired the President last Thursday that local and state authorities have refused to protect her home from fire bombs and bullets and have left her "defenseless before the mob."

State police picked up three Negroes and charged two of them with carrying concealed weapons. The third was a guard at the Bates' home. He carried an honorary deputy sheriff's card, so authorities didn't charge him. But the card was lifted.

Mrs. Bates said the President was her last hope for protection.

CONTENTS OF REPLY

The telegram in reply to Mrs. Bates' appeal was signed by Gerald D. Morgan, deputy assistant to the President.

It said:

"Although the matter seems to be one within the exclusive jurisdiction of local autnorities, the President has referred your telegram to the Department of Justice, from which I am sure it will receive prompt and appropriate consideration."

FAUBUS SEES TROUBLE

School Fund Curb Warning Is Given

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., April 7 (AP)—Gov. Orval E. Faubus said today there will be trouble and plenty of it" if the courts prohibit use of state funds to finance attendance at segregated schools of students opposed to integration.

"But if our laws to provide for education of these students are permitted to stand, there is no question but what a dual system of schools would work," Faubus said.

Until recently state funds were being alloted to other schools, including one private institution, as tuition for pupils displaced by shutdown of the Little Rock public high schools.

The practice has been temporarily enjoined by a federal court order.

At Faubus' direction, the Arkansas Legislature recently passed a law and proposed a similar state constitutional amendment which would permit payment of educational funds directly to students under a local option system.

Challenges Pending

Challenges of the state law under which Faubus closed the high schools against integration are pending in the Arkansas Supreme Court and in federal court.

The federal suit also involves the companion law under which school funds were diverted.

Faubus said he had no doubt the federal government could force opening of the Little Rock schools on an integrated basis.

"But if they do, there is likely to be all sorts of hell, and it will be up to the federal government to handle it," he said.

Asked if he would stand by while anti-integrationists rioted, Faubus merely repeated a statement he had made previously that he would not use state police powers to enforce integration.

Called Unfair

The Governor said it would be unfair for segregationists parents to be required to pay both school taxes and tuition for education of their children.

"If the NAACP (National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People) thinks the people are going to stand still for that, they're mistaken," the Governor said.

Faubus made the remarks at a news conference during which reporters pressed him for elaboration on comments yesterday when he said "token integration" was possible in Little Rock. He indicated then he would be willing to accept a compromise if such were agreeable to both sides in the school situation.

Faubus said today he would be willing to meet with NAACP representatives to hear their side "but I doubt if any good would come of that at this time," he added.

Trouble Is Predicted By Faubus

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — Gov. Orval E. Faubus said Tuesday there will be trouble and plenty of it" if the courts prohibit use of state funds to finance attendance at segregated schools of students opposed to integration.

"But if our laws to provide for education of these students are permitted to stand, there is no question but what a dual system of schools would work," Faubus said.

Until recently state funds were being alloted to other schools, including one private institution, as tuition for pupils displaced by shutdown of the Little Rock public high schools.

The practice has been temporarily enjoined by a federal court order.

Law Passed.

At Faubus' direction, the Arkansas Legislature recently passed a law and proposed a similar state constitutional amendment which would permit payment of educational funds directly to students under a local option system.

Challenges of the state law under which Faubus closed the high schools against integration are pending in the Arkansas Supreme Court and in federal court.

Faubus Says U. S., NAACP Join In Integration Offensive

LITTLE ROCK (AP) — Gov. Orval E. Faubus charged Wednesday that the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People and the federal government are trying to pick off Southern states one by one in an integration offensive.

Faubus said the NAACP and the government were not likely to push their efforts in several states at the same time.

Faubus said that if the federal government ran into a "Little Rock" integration crisis in other Southern states, it would have to occupy the South.

"I don't think they would do that," the governor said.

Federal troops enforced court ordered integration at Little Rock Central High School during the 1957-58 term after Faubus blocked the entry of nine Negro students with a cordon of state guardsmen.

Faubus told a news conference he expected the NAACP and the federal government to avoid the situation that ocourred in Little Rock "if they can, in order to pick us off one by one."

Asked what he expected other Southern states to do, Faubus said "If the states would decline to use state forces to do the dirty work of the federal government they (the government) would have to do it themselves and I don't think they would do it."

He singled out Mississippi, Louisiana, Alabama, Georgia, and South Carolina as states which "feel stronger about this question than we do here in Arkansas."

2 COURTS TO TEST LITTLE ROCK CASE

State and Federal Rulings Due in May on Closing of High Schools by Faubus

Special to The New York Times.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., April 11 — In the next month two courts will pass judgment of the state law under which Gov. Orval E. Faubus halted public high school education here.

The law is Act 4 of 1958—the chief product of the special legislative session that Mr. Faubus called last August to deal with the integration dispute at Little Rock Central High School.

The two houses gave virtually unanimous approval of the legislation. Mr. Faubus kept it on his desk, unsigned until Sept. 12. On that date the United States Supreme Court ruled that integration must proceed at Central High. The Governor promptly signed the bill and used it to close Little Rock's fur public high schools.

Suits Filed Immediately

Almost immediately suits challenging the law's validity were filed in Federal and state courts. While the legal preliminaries for a decision were slowly being cleared away, the high schools and their teachers were made idle for what will apparently extend into a full school year.

Now both the Arkansas Court and a three-judge panel of the Federal District Court at Little Rock stand ready to render decisions on the law.

A decision by the state court can be expected on any Monday — the customary day for announcing decisions—during the remainder of this month. Chief Justice Carlton Harris has said that the state court will announce its ruling before the Federal Court considers the law in May.

The Federal court, in its hearing May 4, will also rule on the validity of a companion law, Act 5, under which state money has been withheld from the Little Rock school district and diverted to other schools attended by the city's high school students.

Provisions of Act 4

Act 4 empowered the Governor to close any school when he deemed it necessary to prevent domestic violence in the school district, when Federal marshals or troops were ordered stationed at the school, or when an "efficient educational system cannot be maintained because of integration." It also provived for a special election to be held in the school district at which taxpayers would vote for or against "integration of all schools" in the district.

The election in the Little Rock School District, held Sept. 27, resulted in a 3-1 vote against integration. Mr. Faubus has said this vote showed the residents of the district approved his closing of the schools.

A brief filed in the state court by the Women's Emergency Committee to Open Our Schools challenged Act 4 on the ground that it violated the State Constitution provision that the state should ever maintain a free public school system.

Unequal Treatment Seen

"It is apparent that unequal treatment exists where the children of high school age in the City of Little Rock are denied access to free public schools while all other children of the same age, or similarly situated in different communities, are provided with free public schools," the brief said.

Attorneys for Mr. Faubus said in their brief that it was "not within the spirit" of the Arkansas Constitution to force the operation of schools under conditions such as existed at Little Rock.

They said the enactment of the school-closing law was a valid exercise of the Legislature's police power to preserve the "public peace, safety and good order" of the Little Rock School District.

They maintained that the persons who drafted the State Constitution in 1875 would never have insisted that public schools be operated in a place where "violence and bloodshed did occur and Federal troops were sent to occupy the schoolroom."

Faubus Points to N.A.A.C.P.

Mr. Faubus said at a news conference this week that he would like to see a compromise in the dispute but that this was impossible until the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People had suffered a defeat in court.

If the courts uphold the school-closing law, he said, the N.A.A.C.P will have suffered such a defeat and the state's effort to resist integration will have been strengthened.

Three of the six members of the Little Rock School Board have said they expect one or both courts to throw out Act 4. They said that in this event the Little Rock public high schools would be open this fall with limited integration.

3 Little Rock Schools Quit Regional Association

CHICAGO, April 22 (AP)— Three closed Little Rock, Ark., high schools have requested withdrawal from membership in the North Central Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools, the Association announced today.

The schools are Central, Hall and Horace Mann. They have been closed throughout the school year under legislation passed by the Arkansas Legislature during the heat of the school desegregation issue in Little Rock.

An Association spokesman said he expects the request to be granted by the Association currently holding its annual meeting in Chicago. It is an accrediting agency for approximately 3500 high schools and 401 colleges and universities in a 19-state area.

Accreditation of a high school often helps its students gain admission to college, the spokesman said. If a school terminates Association membership and later seeks readmission, it must proceed as if it were a new school seeking membership.

Three Little Rock Schools Drop From Accredited List

CHICAGO (UPI) — Three Little Rock, Ark., high schools closed since last fall to preserve their all-white enrollment, dropped out of the accredited list Friday.

The Convention of North Central Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools NCA voted to allow Little Rock's Central, Hall and Horace Mann high schools to withdraw from membership.

The NCA is the accrediting agency for 3,500 high schools and 401 colleges and universities in a 19 - state area, including Arkansas.

Withdrawal of the three Little Rock schools meant its students may have a harder time than normal getting into colleges. Most universities and colleges require students from non - accredited schools to take entrance examinations.

The request to withdraw the Little Rock schools was made by Ed McCuistion, assistant Arkansas education commissioner for instruction and Arkansas NCA chairman.

Arkansas' Gov. Orval Faubus has kept the three Little Rock high schools closed since Sept. 12, following the U. S. Supreme Court's order of racial integration at Central High School.

Faubus attempted to reopen the schools as private, unsegregated institutions, but the Supreme Court ruled this move unconstitutional on Sept. 30.

Central High in 1957 are now eligible to re-enter this fall.

A number of others, who have since finished junior high are certain to apply for admission, not only to Central, but the city's three other previously all-white schools, it was said.

* * *

PRESIDENT Everett Tucker Jr., elected president of the board, since three Faubus-backed segregationists were voted out, indicated that the board was now ready to comply with court orders.

WHILE LITTLE ROCK was moving to get in step with the Supreme Court's 1954 decision, continued defiance was the attitude of the school board at Pine Bluff.

An attorney for the Dollarway School District, bluntly told U.S. District Judge Axel J. Beck Wednesday that the district had no plan for desegregating its schools and was not going to have one.

He insisted that the Supreme Court's 1954 decision did not call for desegregation, but merely prohibited discrimination against colored students because of their race.

Since the schools to which all colored students are now assigned are "superior" to those attended by whites, the lawyer said, the board does not feel that it is violating the 1954 decision.

THIS ARGUMENT was poohpoohed by Robert L. Carter, NAACP counsel of New York representing Ernestine Dove, 15, James Edwards Warfield, 15, and Corliss Smith, 12.

He asked Judge Beck to order the Dollarway school board to end segregation without further delay.

In Atlanta, U.S. District Judge Frank Hooper ordered the school board to submit a desegregation plan "within a reasonable time."

This was interpreted by most observers to mean by the opening of schools for the 1950-61 term.

Continued operation of the schools "with discrimination as in the past will not permitted," Judge Hooper ruled.

UNDER LAWS hastily passed by the Georgia legislature to prevent integration, any school district which integrates loses all state funds and thus would be forced to close.

Judge Hooper's action in granting the Atlanta board an additional year was seen as a suggestion to the legislature to amend this law.

Federal courts have already held that if any school district is forced to close its schools, tax-supported schools must also close.

The court's final decree followed a June 5 trial based on the complaint of 10 parents that their children, because of race, were not permitted to attend the schools nearest their homes.

* * *

E.E. MOORE, chief counsel for the parents, told newsmen he saw no reason why the Atlanta board needed additional time to submit a desegregation plan. The board has been studying plans for four years, he said.

The decree, ordered by the judge, will be written by Moore, with the assistance of D. L. Hollowell and Austin T. Walden, who were associate attorneys in the case.

A. C. Latimer, Atlanta school board president, expressed the belief the board would make no effort to defy the federal court order.

THE 6TH U.S. Court of Appeals, sitting at Cincinnati, Wednesday upheld the 12-year gradual integration plan of the Nashville school board.

The NAACP has appealed the grade-a-year plans as "obvious circumvention of the U.S. Supreme Court desegregation decision."

"One may disagree with the gradual process, but we cannot say that such a plan is so unreasonable that the judgment of the District Court approving the plan, in the light of the evidence before it, should be reversed as clearly erroneous," the appellate court held.

A few first and second grade classes in Nashville were desegregated in Nashville in September, 1957, followed in 1958 by the desegregation of more second grade classes and the addition of third graders.

The fourth grader is scheduled to be integrated in September of this year, under the plan.

IN A LAST minute effort to head off court-ordered integration of 11 colored pupils in Charlottesville schools, the Virginia Pupil Placement Board Wednesday warned the Charlottesville school board it was violating state law by ending segregation.

The board has been directed by Federal Judge John Paul to admit the colored youngsters to formerly all-white schools. They were assigned under the city's new non-racial assignment plan which has met a court test.

A total of 26 colored pupils are seeking admission to all-white Fairfax County schools in Alexandria, Va., near Washington.

* * *

THE FAIRFAX County Board is to reach a decision on the applications at its next meeting on June 30. The board rejected the application of a 5-year-old child to enter the Flint Hill Elementary School, which has no colored pupils. He was sent instead to the all-colored Louise E. Archer elementary school.

Four of the 23 colored pupils, who sought to transfer to white schools in Norfolk have been rejected, the school board announced.

The remaining 19 are undergoing tests as required by the Norfolk pupil assignment plan. Twelve of those who are to be tested were turned down last summer when they sought transfer.

* * *

MURRELL W. Thornhill III, who sought enrollment during the summer in Lynchburg, Virginia's all-white John W. Wyatt school, was sent instead to Dunbar High school last week.

The rejection was ordered by the Virginia Pupil Placement Board, which is yet to approve the transfer of a single colored pupil to an all - white school.

Thornhill had asked to study sixth grade arithmetic at Wyatt school since the course was not being offered at Dunbar.

Central High's doors to reopen

LITTLE ROCK—With the announcement of the revamped school board that the decision of the three-judge court would not be appealed, the path was opened Friday for the reopening of Central High and the city's three other high schools.

The schools were closed in September, 1958 by Gov. Orval Faubus to prevent integration. It was the state law under which the governor acted which has now been ruled unconstitutional.

The ruling returned operation of the schools to the local school board, which promptly began making plans for reopening them in September.

GOV. FAUBUS, stripped of his school-closing powers, announced that he would not come to the board's aid in the case trouble develops.

Boycott of Little Rock Stores Slated In War Against School Integration

Jacksonville Ala.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Aug. 10 (AP)—Main street, Little Rock, was hit by an economic war today over school integration. A boycott was declared by the Capital Citizens Council, pledged to fight racial mixing in public schools.

Its spokesman and attorney, Amis Guthridge, accused downtown merchants of backing a school board decision to reopen public high schools Wednesday to token integration.

Guthridge, in a hastily called news conference in a parking lot, charged the merchants had formed a coalition with the Negroes.

"Little Rock is being run politically by Main street merchants and the Negroes," he said, adding that it was time the Negroes shared in the "suffering."

What effect, if any, the boycott would have remains to be seen. Business seemed to be going on as usual. Shoppers were coming and going with no outward appearance they were aware of the segregationists' economic war.

Houston Buford, president of Downtown Little Rock Unlimited, Inc., ignored Guthridge's declaration. So did the president of the Chamber of Commerce, E. Grainger Williams.

On the student front, 50 teenagers waving Confederate flags gathered on the campus of the now - closed, all-white private Raney High School.

Some carried white banners lettered in red. They were aimed at parents and other grown-ups. One read, "Should your children call you daddy or coward?" Another: "Have cowards, will integrate.

One girl, Sandra Jackson, called on the former students of Raney High to mass at the state capitol Wedneday for another anti-integration rally. Sandra is the daughter of Mrs. Margaret Jackson, president of the segregationist Mother's League of Central High.

Integration came to Little Rock in 1957-58 at Central High School. It exploded into mob violence and federal troops were called out to police integrated attendance for the remainder of the term.

Twenty to 30 adults watched the demonstration at Raney from their cars parked across the street. A police car cruised by but did not stop.

"We are being forced to attend integrated schools simply because grown-ups don't care," one of the students, 16-year-old Johnnie Eskew, said.

The school board moved to tighten its controls over public high school discipline. It warned any infraction of rules would be dealt with firmly. Identification cards were being issued to students and teachers to keep down traffic around the schools.

Police Chief Gene Smith has ordered all available patrolmen to be on duty Wednesday. He has kept his own counsel on his plans but he said whatever measures necessary to enforce the law would be taken.

Six Negroes have been assigned to two once-white high schools, Central and Hall, under a state pupil placement law which the board is using to limit integration.

The National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People has challenged the law in a new federal court move. It contends all Negroes in a school's attendance area are eligible for admission. Sixty Negroes in all applied for admission to white high schools.

Boycott of stores reported in effect

Birmingham Ala. News

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Aug. 10—(AP)—Diehard segregationists declared an economic war on Little Rock's Main Street today over school integration.

A spokesman for the Capital Citizens Council declared its boycott of downtown merchants was on "right now."

Amis Guthridge, council attorney, called a news conference in a parking lot near his office to hand out a list of stores, professional people and others who should be boycotted.

P. 1

THE COUNCIL announced Saturday a "buyer's strike" against Man Street merchants and employers of Negroes.

Houston Buford, president of Downtown Little Rock Unlimited, Inc., had no comment on Guthridge's declaration of economic war. The Little Rock Chamber of Commerce president, E. Grainger Williams, said "additional comment would be in poor taste."

Guthridge charged business men on his list had been instrumental in pushing for reopening of the four public high schools to token integration.

The schools are scheduled to open Wednesday under a state pupil placement law. Six Negroes have been assigned to former all-white schools.

Guthridge has refused to say how many members the council has. He said that was a secret, but he insisted membership was growing.

GUTHRIDGE charged that desegregation of the high schools was a "Communist-inspired determination to destroy our white civilization in Little Rock."

At one point, Guthridge called for letting the Negroes, "who up to now have been immune, share in the suffering."

Guthridge charged white persons had repeatedly been insulted by Negro employes in downtown stores. He charged, too, the council's office had been spied on, probably by a "federal agent."

Guthridge accused Main Street merchants of "secretly financing"

EVEN AS Guthridge was firing away at Main Street, Mrs. Bates reported only one of the three Negroes assigned to Central High School was likely to attend opening day Wednesday.

P. 6

She said Jefferson Thomas, 16, would start but that one of the other Negro pupils, Carlotta Walls, was in Summer School in Chicago and the third, Elizabeth Eckford, appeared to have enough credits for graduation.

Through the new segregationist blast, Gov. Orval E. Faubus remained silent. He closed the four high schools last year to block integration. The state law he used has since been thrown out by the federal court.

Three Negroes are expected to attend classes at Hall High School in an upper-income area. The school has not been integrated before.

CENTRAL WAS integrated with nine Negroes in 1957-58, but only after mob violence was put down by federal troops.

Fifty Confederate flag-waving teen-agers gathered this morning on the campus of private, all-white Raney High School.

They carried signs which read:

"Wanted men, not cowards."

"Have cowards, will integrate."

Twenty to 30 adults watched the demonstration from cars across the street.

One 16-year-old high school boy, Johnnie Eskew, said, "We are being forced to attend integrated schools simply because the grown-ups don't care."

RANEY RECENTLY was closed because of lack of money to start the new school year. It was one of three private all-white high schools started after Faubus closed the public ones. The other two also have folded.

STUDENTS AT LITTLE ROCK'S CLOSED PRIVATE SCHOOL DEMONSTRATE
. . . Seek funds, blame "cowards" for letting Raney High School fold

Nothing is sure—

Little Rock quiet on eve of opening

BY JAMES E. JACOBSON, News staff writer

LITTLE ROCK, Aug. 11—The only thing sure in this Arkansas City today is that nothing is sure.

One year and eleven months ago Gov. Orval Faubus ordered the Arkansas National Guard to patrol Central High School, "not as segregationists or integrationists, but as soldiers called to active duty to carry out their assigned tasks."

Those tasks, he added, were to maintain order and protect the lives and property of citizens in the face of what he believed to be impending violence.

Nine turbulent months later one Negro boy received a diploma from Central High School.

LESS THAN A YEAR AGO Faubus ordered the city's four public high schools closed rather than allow them to continue on an integrated basis. They were replaced by three privately operated schools for white students.

EIGHT MONTHS ago a Gallup poll placed Faubus 10th among the most admired men in the world. If Gallup had also conducted a poll to determine the 10 least admired men, chances are good that this controversial man would have ranked high in it as well.

He has had little to say publicly as Little Rock approaches its third major school showdown. The legislation under which he closed the schools last year has been knocked out by a federal court, and the private schools which filled the void have all folded.

The school board has used Arkansas' pupil placement law to assign six of 60 Negro applicants for admission to previously white high schools—three to strife-torn Central and three to Hall High in the well-to-do Pulaski Heights section — although only one of those assigned to Central will be on hand opening day.

THAT'S THE SITUATION as it stands now, and one one is sure just what will happen when the schools open Wednesday. The most commonly expressed sentiment is that while the majority of parents still are definitely opposed to integration of the schools, economic factors have resigned many of them to its acceptance on a token basis if that is what it will take to get the public schools reopened.

The economic pinch was felt in a number of ways. Most direct was the prospect of having to pay a monthly tuition this year for students enrolled in Raney High School, a private school which had been financed previously by donations. Registrations fell below the number Raney officials felt were needed to finance the operation, and so the project collapsed.

LESS OBVIOUS were financial losses such as are hinted at by the fact that for the Little Rock industrial district—which saw 10 new industries locate during the two years immediately preceding September 1957—not one commitment has been signed since Gov. Faubus ordered out his National Guard troops. This is the sort of thing which has led such organizations as the Chamber of Commerce to push for "peaceful reopening of the schools in compliance with the law"—with token integration, if necessary.

Reopening, apparently, they will get, although how peaceful it will be remains to be seen.

MOST CITIZENS apparently think that all will go off quietly, although many amend their statements to add that the police are the key to the whole situation. If they are firm, the opinion seems to be, they will keep everything in control; if they are lax, anything could happen.

Police Chief Gene Smith says that he will keep the peace, and every policeman on the Little Rock force will be on duty to carry out his orders.

There have been no solid indications that attempts will be made to breach the peace. But segregationists still maintain that they will fight integration of the schools "by lawful means." No one has defined exactly just what they have in mind, although one plan calls for a boycott of all Main-st merchants and firms which employ Negroes.

When Amis Guthridge, attorney for the Capital Citizens Council, was reminded that such action would mean cutting off telephones, gas and electricity, he replied that all the details "haven't been worked out yet." Guthridge was also asked if the boycott means that the council will move its office from its present location, since the building employs a Negro elevator operator. He said that the matter "will be discussed," and hinted that the office might be moved anyway since it was suspected that it had been "bugged" by a "federal agent."

WHILE GUTHRIDGE was discussing the proposed boycott, 40 former students at Raney High School held a rally today to protest being "forced to attend integrated schools." They waved Confederate flags and banners inscribed with slogans such as "Should your children call you daddy or coward" and "Have cowards, will integrate," in order, a spokesman said, "to wake up the parents and make them stand up for what they believe in."

The rally was conducted in an orderly manner, and when a reporter and a movie cameraman urged the students to "give us a few cheers, liven this up," the youths refused, saying they did not want to cause a disturbance.

BUT THE MAN most looked to for an indication of what might happen had little to say. Gov. Faubus hinted that he has plans concerned with school desegregation but refused to say what they are.

The schools are still scheduled to open Wednesday. Meanwhile we wait.

Little Rock Again Enrolls Negroes for High School

(Herald Tribune) 7-22-59

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., July 21 (AP).—Only a few Negroes—one a girl on crutches—registered today in the first test at student level to reopen Little Rock public high schools to limited integration.

Students came and went, some in little clusters, under the eye of police without incident. Registration will go on through Friday.

It was mid-morning before the first Negroes appeared at Central High School where violence erupted in the fall of 1957 over the integration of nine Negro pupils.

Elizabeth Eckford, sixteen, and Thelma Mothershed, seventeen, who were among the nine who attended Central in 1957, were enrolled today by their fathers.

"Customers" Greeted

The first twenty white students to register at Central were greeted by principal Jess Matthews who told them: "I'm gklad to see you. It's good to have some customers again."

The four public high schools were closed throughout the last school year by Gov. Orval Faubus in his fight against integration. The law he used to close them only recently was declared unconstitutional by a Federal court and a new school board moved to reopen the the schools this fall. Federal troops were called out by President Eisenhower to enforce integration in the 1957-'58 term.

Today only seniors registered. Juniors register tomorrow and sophomores Thursday. Open registration for all classes will be held Friday.

Girl Hobbles In

Gloria Gant, a Negro girl on crutches, hobbled into Central High in the afternoon. She was driven to the school by a Negro youth. She was a student at the all-negro Horace Mann High before it was closed.

School officials emphasized that a student would not necessarily be assigned to the school at which he registered. The board plans token integration under a state pupil placement law. It will make student assignments late in August. School is scheduled to open Sept. 8.

Some 3,700 students were affected by the closing of the schools last fall.

Students Register For Classes In Four Little Rock Schools

Faubus Forces Remain In Background; Facing Defeat

Tulsa, Oklahoma

By Albert Anderson

LITTLE ROCK (ANP) Peaceful integration at long last came to Little Rock, as the city's new school board reopened the four public high schools closed by Gov. Orval Faubus last fall.

Negro and white students registered for classes at Central, Hall, Tech, and Horace Mann high schools under a new placement plan authorized by the board. The move followed closely a smashing victory by board members over segregationists led by Faubus in a special recall election. The election actually tested community reaction toward reopening of the schools.

Meanwhile, fears stirred to fever pitch by segregationists in 1957 seemed to have subsided and sanity returned to the community. This was evident in the formation of a group called the Committee for Peaceful Operation of Free Public Schools. The committee is working to prevent violence and other shameful acts, such as those perpetrated by segregationists at Central high last fall, from being repeated.

27 Negroes at White Schools

In the first three days of registration, a total of 27 Negro students signed up at the four schools, all of which were previously all-white. Included in the number were five of the original nine who integrated Central High in '57 under the protection of federal troops. So far, a total of 1,631 students have enrolled.

The five original Negro students are Elizabeth Eckford, 16; Thelma Mothershed, A. Carlotta Walls, 17; Melba Pattillo, 17; and Jefferson Thomas, 17. They did not appear in person, but were registered by their parents at Central.

Meanwhile, white students, anxious to resume their education, also registered at the schools. The first 20 to register at Central received a welcome from the principal who told them: "I'm glad to see you. It's good to have some customers again."

Reshuffle School Areas

The white students accustomed by tradition to accept segregation, said they did not like integration, but preferred it to no school at all. One of them remarked calmly, ". . . . I don't think there will be any trouble. However, police were on the alert at the schools for any possible violence."

The new placement law under which the schools were reopened is designed to minimize integration. It altered the attendance area to include some 25-30 Negro pupils. Under the plan, Negroes may now attend Hall high, located in the most fashionable part of Little Rock.

The plan also divides the city into three attendance areas for registration. But white students living in the Horace Mann (all-Negro school) area may register at Central, and Negro pupils living in either the Central or Hall areas may register at Horace Mann. Tech High is a vocational school with a city-wide attendance area.

Meantime, the Faubus forces were obviously staying in the background, still smarting from the defeat at the polls. It is likely, also, that Faubus himself is glad to be let off the political hook. The dour-faced governor had gone so far bucking integration that he obviously cannot retreat without losing favor with segregationists.

Leading up to the reopening of the schools was a federal court ruling knocking out the state law under which Faubus closed them. Federal courts had also restrained public school teachers from teaching in segregated schools.

Integration Developments Elsewhere

The Little Rock board had not moved hastily. Board members studied integration plans in Virginia and North Carolina before arriving at a decision. Said Everett Tucker, Jr., board president:

"We were tremendously reassured with the success and apparent ease with which this transition (integrated schools) has been accepted in Norfolk and Charlotte."

Seek To Overturn Placement Law

Charleston, S.C.
News & Courier Sun. 8-9-59

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — Attorneys for the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People sought Saturday to knock out Little Rock's screen against integration — a pupil-placement law. The attorneys filed a motion in U. S. District Court asking that the Little Rock School Board be required to admit all Negro students to public high schools according to "prescribed school zones" — the school district in which they live.

If granted, this would mean that 60 Negroes would attend formerly white high schools—Central, Hall and Technical. Forty-eight enrolled at Central, five at Hall and one at Tech.

The school board — using the placement law — cut to six the number of students assigned to white schools, three to Central and three too Hall. The rest were assigned to Horace Mann High School for Negroes.

TUCKER SURPRISED

Everett Tucker Jr., president of the school board, said the NAACP action surprised him. He said board attorneys had advised the body that the "course being followed is proper under the existing situation." Tucker also said it seemed to him "the Negroes, who were the principal victims of the school closings, should be gratified that the school board is making it possible for Negro children to resume their interrupted education. However, they elect to attack us in court."

Asked if the board would fight the motion, he replied: "I don't guess we have any choice."

Tucker said any pupil not satisfied with an assignment could request reassignment and the board "will give full and prompt consideration to all such requests in the manner specified in the regulations."

U.S. Dist. Judge Axel J. Beck of Elk Point, S.D., ruled here last week that the pupil-placement law was constitutional on its face.

TO OPEN WEDNESDAY

The high schools are to open Wednesday — a month ahead of schedule. They were closed all last year by Gov. Orval E. Faubus to stop integration. But Faubus' school-closing law since has been declared unconstitutional by a federal court.

The motion filed Saturday carried the names of two Negroes who attended Central in the violence-ridden fall of 1957—Thelma Mothershed and Melba Patillo, and also that of William J. Massie Jr. All three applied for admission to white schools but were sent to Horace Mann.

No date was set for court action on the motion, filed by Thurgood Marshall of New York and Wiley Branton of Pine Bluff, Ark.

Hours before the motion was received by mail at the federal courthouse, a segregationist leader voiced a new threat against the impending integration.

Amis Guthridge, attorney for the Capital Citizens Council, vowed that a "buyer's strike" would be called "if one Negro even attempts to attend a white high school."

CHARGES MERCHANTS

Guthridge directed his ire at merchants, whom he charged "are working as a team to make the parents of Little Rock submit—to integration—regardless of their own or their children's feelings."

The Little Rock Chamber of Commerce, which last winter officially went on record in favor of reopening the high schools, refused to comment on Guthridge's statement.

Meanwhile, Faubus remained silent on his aims in the situation. Rumors still persisted that he planned to call a special legislative session, perhaps to arm himself with a new package of school-closing laws.

Faubus' No-Mixing Plan Kept Secret

Integration Due Wednesday;
Quick Special Session 'Out'

Daily News

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., (AP) — Gov. Orval E. Faubus has apparently squelched persistent reports that he would take a hand against approaching school integration via a quick special legislative session.

The governor said he still had tentative plans to call a special session "within the next one to six months." But he said it would deal primarily "with industrial financing and perhaps some other minor problems."

He indicated he had plans connected with desegregation—scheduled to start in two Little Rock high schools Wednesday — but wouldn't say what they were. He said he had "no concrete reports at this time" about impending trouble over the integration.

Faubus closed the four public high schools last fall to block integration but the law he used has been struck down by federal court. Violence accompanied the initial integration of Central High School by nine Negroes in 1957. Three of the nine who went to Central then have been assigned there again by the school board. Three Negroes also have been assigned to Hall High.

The board used a pupil-placement law in holding down integration. Some 55 other Negroes who applied to enter white schools were assigned to Horace Mann High for Negroes.

Meanwhile, a "buyer's strike" against downtown merchants was scheduled to begin today. It was called by the segregationist Capital Citizens Council. Amis Guthridge, council attorney, charged the merchants with aiding the integration movement.

Reports circulated that a mass rally would be held Wednesday morning to ask Faubus to do something about stopping integration, but segregation leaders denied knowledge of it.

Faubus Sunday had no comment on new court action aimed at making the school board admit to white high schools any Negroes living in attendance area of those schools.

CHALLENGES LAW

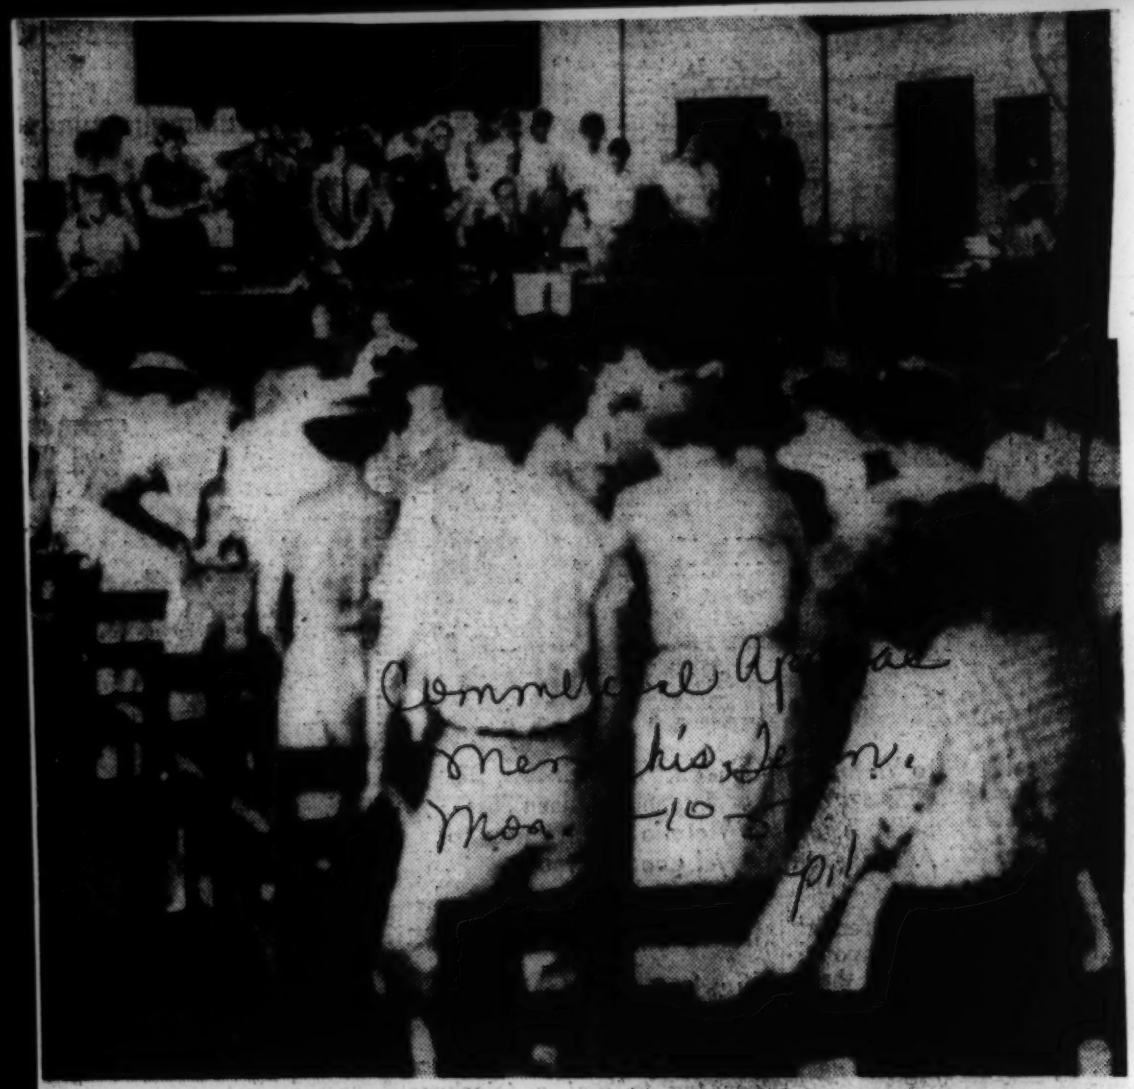
Attorneys for the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People filed the action of U.S. District Court Saturday. They asked for an order restraining the board from using the pupil - placement law, on grounds that it denied the Negro students benefits of previous court decrees in connection with the court-approved plan of integration here.

No date was set for action on the motion.

Meanwhile, anti - integration posters apepared in the Dollarway district near Pine Bluff, 40 miles southeast of here. The district recently was ordered by a federal court to admit three Negroes to a white high school.

The posters announced a meeting to be held Friday night.

And recruiting posters for the Ku Klux Klan were found tacked on telephone poles and posts south of Little Rock.



PRAYER FOR PEACE—The Rev. M. L. Moser, pro-segregation pastor of the Central Baptist Church in Little Rock, yesterday led his congregation in a prayer that a peaceful solution will be found to Little Rock's troubled school problem. Two high schools are scheduled to open Wednesday on an integrated basis.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — Attorneys for the NAACP Saturday asked U.S. District Court here to require the Little Rock School Board to admit Negro students to public high schools under a "prescribed school zones" basis.

The motion also asks, in effect, an order restraining the board from using the 1959 pupil placement law to assign Negro students to various schools. It was under this law that the board hoped to keep integration to a minimum when the high schools open next Wednesday. Although 60 Negroes applied for admission to white schools, only six were assigned to attend them and the rest slated for Horace Mann High for Negroes.

School board members declined comment on the court action until they have had a chance to study it.

P.F.

The motion contends that the board's denying entrance to the Negroes to schools "in their appropriate school zones" deprived the students of th benefit of prior desegregation decrees from federal courts.

Five Little Rock Negro Students Register

Limited Integration Gets 1st Test

Little Rock, Ark., July 21 (AP)—Five Negroes—one a girl on crutches—registered Tuesday in the first step at the student level toward reopening Little Rock public schools to limited integration.

Four of them were among the nine Negro pupils whose integration into Central High School in the fall of 1957 brought mob violence and finally federal troops to restore order.

Registration Slow, Quiet

None of the four came themselves. They were represented by their parents.

The first day of registration—it runs all week—moved along slowly and quietly. Students came and went under the stern eye of police.

No Negroes showed up at Hall High School in the fashionable part of Little Rock. It only recently was redistricted to include 25 or 30 Negro pupils.

A 19-year-old Negro girl, Gloria Gant, hobbled into Central High School in the afternoon. She was not one of the original nine, but was a student at all-Negro Horace Mann High School before it was closed.

Principal Greets Students

The first 20 white students to register at Central High School were greeted by Principal Jess Matthews, who told them:

"I'm glad to see you. It's good to have some customers again."

The four public high schools were closed throughout the last school year by Governor Orval E. Faubus in his fight against integration. The law he used to close them was declared unconstitutional recently by a federal court and a new School Board moved to reopen the schools this fall.

Only seniors registered Tuesday. Juniors register Wednesday and sophomores Thursday. Open registration for all classes will be Friday.

Police patrolled streets for several blocks around the schools. They had orders from their chief, Gene Smith to arrest and jail any disturbers. Smith himself ordered newsmen off school grounds, saying the School Board didn't want them there. Newsmen were given a trip through the registration centers later.

Assignments Due Later

School officials emphasized that a student would not necessarily be assigned to the school at wich he registered. The board plans token integration under a State pupil-placement law. It plans to make student assignments late in August. School is scheduled to open September 8.

White pupils, questioned by newsmen, indicated they don't like the idea of token integration, but preferred it to no school at all. John Thom, 18, said:

"I have no objections to Negroes but I prefer that they didn't go to school here. I don't think there will be any trouble."

Some 3,700 students were affected by the closing of the schools last fall. Some of them attended three private schools which grew out of the integration battle. Others attended nearby high schools and still others took correspondence courses.

REGISTRANTS WELCOMED . . . Central High School Principal Jess Matthews greets students arriving at the Little Rock school yesterday to register for the next term. The school has been closed by orders of Governor Orval Faubus since last September to avoid integration, but the School Board plans to reopen it and other Little Rock high schools under Federal Court orders to integrate.

Little Rock Sets School Registration

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — Little Rock takes the first step this week toward re-establishing public high schools.

Prospective students will be registered for Central, Hall, Tech and Horace Mann high schools, all of which remained closed last year under order of Gov. Orval E. Faubus who shut them against integration.

School officials said they had no way of estimating how many students would register. The system had about 3,700 high school students during the 1957-58 school year.

Seniors will sign up Tuesday, juniors Wednesday and sophomores Thursday.

PLACEMENT LAW

The Little Rock School Board is opening the schools under a pupil placement law designed to minimize the effects of court-ordered integration. Placement procedures will not begin until all students have registered, a board spokesman said.

The city is divided into three attendance areas for registration, but white students living in the attendance area of the Horace Mann school may register at Central and Negro students living in either the Central or Hall areas may register at Horance Mann Tech, a vocational school, has a citywide attendance area.

The attendance area scheme itself minimizes the threat of integration, since a majority of the city's Negroes live in the area served by Horance Mann, which has been Little Rock's Negro high school.

STRONG STATEMENT

City officials last week issued a strong statement against possible violence when the schools are opened and a group called the Committee for Peaceful Operation of Free Public Schools was formed Friday.

Violence, which brought federal troops to maintain order, accompanied integration of nine Negroes into Central High in 1957. Eight of the Negroes attended Central through the 1957-58 school year and one was graduated. Seven were eligible to return when Faubus shut the schools.

There has been no estimate of how many Negroes will be admitted to previously all-white schools under the pupil assignment law, which permits the board to assign students to certain schools for a number of factors, although race is not mentioned.

An undetermined number of white students probably will elect to attend Raney High, a private, segregated school formed last year after public schools were closed.

Police on duty as Little Rock pupils register

News
Mon. 7-21-57

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., July 21—(AP)—White and Negro high school seniors register today at Little Rock's four public high schools and police have been alerted for any disturbance.

A segregationist leader denounced a warning by city authorities that protest groups at the schools would be arrested.

The Little Rock School Board plans to open the high schools—closed for a year against integration—under a plan of minimum desegregation by using a state pupil placement law. This allows students to be assigned to certain school for several factors.

Birmingham

POLICE CHIEF Gene Smith cautioned that officers would patrol the school areas and "if any gathering occurs which looks as if it might have trouble as its object, disturbers will be arrested and jailed."

Dr. Malcolm G. Taylor, president of the Capital Citizens Council which spearheads segregationist forces, last night issued a reply to what he called a "heavy-fisted threat," and said it "appears to be a useless show of strength."

"I have been told that a move is on to remove certain policemen from the force who can't be counted on to be tough against their own neighbors who might resist integration come September," Taylor said. "Impossible arrest quotas assigned to the officers to be weeded out is one of the gimmicks to be used."

Little Rock Seeks Segregated School Opening

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Jan. 21 (AP) — The Little Rock School Board today asked U. S. District Court here for permission to reopen the city's closed public high schools on a segregated basis, at least temporarily.

This was the Board's answer to a court order to take immediate steps to implement desegregation in the schools under a court-approved plan. [The plan met immediate opposition by Negro leaders, United Press International reported.]

The Board said reopening of the schools would remove an air of tension in the community and would make it possible for the Board to complete a study of problems confronting it.

The Board said it would attempt to develop a desegregation plan acceptable to the Federal court and the people of the district, and report to the court no later than Aug. 15.

U. S. District Judge John E. Miller on Jan. 10 gave the Board 30 days to develop a desegregation plan.

The petition said the present Board has not had jurisdiction over the four closed high schools. Gov. Orval E. Faubus took over the schools and shut them down last Sept. 12 to prevent desegregation. The present Board was elected Dec. 6.

If the request is granted, the Board said, it will petition Faubus to return the schools to its jurisdiction and will open all of them, including the Horace Mann high school for Negroes, on a segregated basis.

Bus Segregation Ended in Atlanta

ATLANTA, Jan 21. (UPI) Enforced racial segregation ended quietly today on the metropolitan transit system in Atlanta, one of the last major Southern cities where separate seating of Negroes and whites had been required.

Although the enforced segregation was dead, the practice was continued by many—out of habit, preference or individual choice. A great majority of Negro passengers took seats as usual in the rear of buses and trolleys. No incidents were reported.

Leaders of Atlanta's Negro community gave the signal at a mass meeting last night to begin "peaceful" desegregation today. Negroes were told to be courteous and remain calm.

LITTLE ROCK ISSUE PUT TO U. S. COURT

N.A.A.C.P. Moves to Upset School Closings—Faubus Doubts Opening Soon

Special to The New York Times.

LITTLE ROCK, Jan. 12—The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People asked Federal District Court today to nullify the Arkansas law under which Gov. Orval E. Faubus closed Little Rock's four public high schools.

Governor Faubus, meanwhile, told a news conference at the State Capitol that he did not think the schools would reopen in the "foreseeable future."

The N.A.A.C.P. seeks to have a three-judge Federal court pass on the validity of the Arkansas anti-integration acts and then order the schools reopened. Wiley A. Branton, Pine Bluff lawyer who filed the association's motion, also asked that state fiscal and education officers be made parties to the original Little Rock suit.

This move was obviously aimed to head off the payment of state money for a high school for white students operated by the Little Rock Private School Corporation. The school is not getting state money now, but it would be eligible for the payments if it is accredited by the state.

Federal Judge John E. Miller will hear the N.A.A.C.P.'s motion at 9:30 A.M., Central Standard Time, Saturday.

Mr. Faubus told his news conference, just before the formal opening of the sixty-second session of the State Legislature, that he believed "the people of Little Rock are not going to accept integrated schools at the present time."

He said a state law provided for the removal of school board members who operated schools on an integrated basis after the majority of school district patrons vote for segregated schools.

Little Rock voters balloted overwhelmingly for segregation after the Governor closed the schools in September, 1958.

Mr. Faubus said that the "people of Arkansas are not going to accept integrated schools at the present time, despite the hullabaloo created by such integrationist groups as the Women's Emergency Committee to Open Our Schools."

He referred to an organization of about 850 Little Rock women who advocate accepting integration to save the city's public school system.

Mr. Faubus said that if public sentiment toward integration shifted at Little Rock, he would not object to the integration of the schools.

He said he planned to offer three anti-integration proposals in the current legislative session to supplement those now in the books.

TEACHERS ATTEND LITTLE ROCK CLASS

Central High Staff Remains Active While Ex-Students Learn Elsewhere

Special to The New York Times.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Jan. 10—Students filed into a classroom one day this week at Central High School and sat to listen attentively while an instructor explained Spanish verbs.

Although Central and the city's three other high schools have been shut since last September because of the desegregation controversy, the class has been held regularly for weeks.

There is no defiance of Gov. Orval E. Faubus' closure order in this activity because all of the students are on the school's teaching staff.

Bored and restless over their enforced inactivity, teachers of Spanish and German, ceramics, music and sewing organized classes for their colleagues to help pass the time.

This is only one of the many adjustments growing out of the Governor's refusal to allow Central to readmit six Negro students in compliance with the orders of the United States Supreme Court.

The students displaced by his closure order probably face the most difficult problem.

Terrell E. Powell, Superintendent of Little Rock schools, said this week that of an average of 3,345 students who attended the three white schools and one Negro institution last year, 2,873 had found a way to continue their education.

A total of 391 Negroes and eighty-one whites were not known to be enrolled in any form of educational activity. However, Mr. Powell based these statistics on the number requesting transcriptions. Some of the latter group have entered schools without them, he said.

More than 400 students are taking correspondence courses from the University of Arkansas, while about 350 are attending public and private schools outside the state.

2,132 Have Transferred

Students transferring to other schools in Arkansas, both accredited and unaccredited, numbered 2,132. Rainey High School, established by the Little Rock Private School Corporation reported an enrollment of 840, although Mr. Powell's figures showed that only 691 of them had applied for transfers. The Baptis High School, recently established here, has 363 students.

Education officials said they believed that virtually all of the white students displaced by the closings were obtaining schooling of some kind. Some have taken jobs while others have joined the armed forces. No provisions have been made, however, for a substantial number of the Negroes.

A random check of parents drew widely varying opinions as to the quality of instruction being dispensed by the makeshift private schools and the correspondence courses. With few exceptions, the stanch segregationists considered it fully adequate and even superior to that of the public schools. The person who was willing to accept token integration if necessary to get the public schools opened was generally critical.

Mrs. G. N. Wilson said her tenth-grade daughter's correspondence work had been "satisfactory," but that it did not replace public school education by any means. "We just hope hopelessly that the schools will be opened," she said.

Mrs. Bob O. Cook was "extremely happy" over her daughter's school at Rainey—referred to by the moderates here as "Defiance High" because it was established by pro-Faubus factions in answer to the courts' desegregation orders.

"All the frills and rig-marole are gone, leaving the basic courses," declared Mrs. Cook. "There is no limit to what I would do to keep that school in operation. The private schools are putting education back into the hands of the parents."

Asked if she would like to see the public schools reopened, she replied, "For heavens sake, no! I don't care if they sit there and fall down brick by brick."

Many students are attending public schools in the Pulaski [Little Rock] County system. Mrs. Norman Siegel said her son, a senior, drove fifty miles each day to Jacksonville and back with four other students. "It's dangerous to have teenagers driving that far and it's also very expensive," she said. "I'm fit to be tied."

Official's Girl in School

Ed I. McKinley, recently elected president of the Little Rock School Board, is sending his tenth-grade daughter to a private school here. He would like to see the public schools reopened but not at the sacrifice of permitting desegregation.

Mr. and Mrs. Gus Lasker have a daughter at a private school in Wisconsin and must decide what to do about their son, who will finish junior high this year.

"We are in a quandary over what to do with him," said Mrs. Lasker. "If this situation isn't settled, we might move away from Little Rock." She knows others who are considering the same course of action.

The city also faces the possible loss of many of its high school teachers, whose contracts come up for renewal in April.

A school official, who asked that her name not be used, said that morale was low. Many of the younger teachers have applied for jobs eleswhere and the older ones are concerned over the possibility that they may lose their retirement benefits.

"What is worse," declared the official, "are the attitudes being picked up by the younger children."

LITTLE ROCK BOARD PRODDED BY COURT

U.S. Judge Orders a Report Within 30 Days on Plan to Integrate City Schools

Special to The New York Times.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Jan. 10—The Little Rock school board was ordered by a Federal judge today to move forward "within its official powers" to carry out the integration plan for the city's public schools.

District Judge John E. Miller directed the board to give him within thirty days a "specific and detailed report" of the affirmative steps taken and proposed to carry out the order.

Judge Miller, in issuing his order, acted on the direction of the Federal Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals. The higher court had instructed him to enjoin the school board from leasing its facilities for segregated use and to order the board to proceed with integration on its own initiative.

Not 'Clearly' Required

Judge Miller in his opinion today noted that the mandate from the Eighth Circuit Court "clearly" did not require him to order the schools opened. But he said, "Implicit in the order is the requirement that when and if the high schools are opened, they must be opened as a desegregated system."

From the six members of the school board, there was divided reaction today as to what the board could do to reopen the city's four public high schools that have been closed by the state since September.

Ed I. McKinley, board president, said he did not know just yet how the board might try to comply with the order. He said he was going out of town for the week-end and did not expect any board action right away.

Robert W. Laster, who with

Mr. McKinley was among three segregationists elected to the board last month, said he thought the board was powerless to act because of the state law under which the schools had been closed.

But Ted L. Lamb, one of three racial "moderates" elected to the board, said he would try to get the schools open "by the end of January—midterm."

The order by Judge Miller today forbids the board to lease the property or to engage in "any other acts, whether independently or in participation with anyone else, which are capable of serving to impede, thwart or frustrate the execution of the integration plan."

Judge Miller did not specify whether he expected the board to reopen the schools or whether he would be satisfied if it simply prepared an integration plan and had it ready when and if the schools were reopened.

Under the state law by which Gov. Orval E. Faubus ordered the high schools closed, the board would commit a misdemeanor by opening the schools without the Governor's approval.

The judge observed in the twenty-page opinion that his court was "not unmindful of the profound effect of the decisions" on the mores and traditions of the nation.

"However, this court is one of limited jurisdiction and is bound by the decisions of Appellate Courts," he said. "It is not for this court to reason why nor make reply. Its duty in this case is clearly defined, and its action is commanded and restricted by the former adjudication."

The original suit was filed early in 1956 after several Negro children had been turned away in an attempt to register at white public schools at Little Rock.

Retained Jurisdiction

Judge Miller ruled in August, 1956, that the Little Rock school board's integration plan was acceptable. He retained jurisdiction for the Federal District Court then to assure that the plan was carried out.

The school district's plan called for limited integration of the public schools in three phases, starting with the high schools in September, 1957. The junior high schools and elementary schools were to be integrated by September, 1963.

Delay Ruling Reversed

The school board asked for a two-and-one-half-year delay in integration last summer. Federal Judge Harry J. Lemley granted the request but his decision was reversed by the Eighth Circuit Court. The United States Supreme Court later affirmed the reversal.

THE NATION

Moves on Integration

As the first half of the 1958-59 school year draws to a close, Little Rock's 3,600 high school students still have not yet attended one class this term in any of the city's four high schools. Most of them have been enrolled either in a segregated school operated by a private corporation or in the county system. The issue that forced them into this situation—the Federal vs. state battle over school integration—has been moving through the courts.

Last week the Federal District Court issued yet another order in the controversy. This one dealt specifically with the private-school system and with the public school board's immediate course.

This is the background: After Gov. Orval E. Faubus closed the four high schools last Sept. 12 rather than comply with a Supreme Court order to resume the integration program, he urged the board to lease the schools to a private corporation for operation on a segregated basis with public funds. Both the board and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People—backed by the Justice Department—challenged the legality of the proposal and the case reached the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals. Last December the Circuit Court enjoined the board from changing the public schools' integrated status, ordered the school board to take action toward resuming the integration program, and directed the District Court at Little Rock to decide what the "affirmative steps" should be.

Miller Rules

Yesterday District Judge John E. Miller ordered the board members to "move forward" with the integration program and to report to the court, within thirty days, what "affirmative steps" they have taken. He also enjoined the board from leasing the public schools to any private group for segregated operation. He said the Circuit Court's order did not require him to direct that the schools be closed, "but it was implicit in the order that when and if the high schools are opened they must be operated as a non-segregated system."

In another major Federal court ruling in the South last week, Atlanta District Judge Boyd Sloan struck down racial bars to the admission of qualified Negroes to the Georgia State College of Business Administration. The ruling will have sweeping implications throughout the state university system, which under state law is required to close if integrated.

The Press' Ignorance Of The Little Rock Story

The Arkansas Gazette

THE EFFORT of propagandists to rewrite the early history of Little Rock's school tragedy has been so effective that even the wire services no longer seem to be able to keep the record straight.

This was apparent in a remarkable series of dispatches moved by the Associated Press from Washington Feb. 11 after the Department of Justice released the official text of former Attorney General Brownell's memorandum to President Eisenhower upholding the President's authority to order troops here to restore and maintain order at Central High School.

Included, and offered as a startling revelation, was the text of a telegram from then Mayor Woodrow Mann informing the President that the situation was beyond the control of his local police and requesting federal intervention. Throughout the day the Associated Press stated:

"Until now, for all the general public could tell, the bitterly controversial decision was the Eisenhower Administration's own idea."

WITH apparent reluctance to admit its own error, the AP only slightly modified its report after being reminded by its Little Rock bureau that the text of the Mann telegram had been carried on its own wires more than a year ago.

If the general public did not know that Mayor Mann requested aid from Washington, it was only because the general public did not read the reports published at the time—or more likely because a portion of the general public has been deluded by an unrelenting propaganda campaign intended to convince the people that President Eisenhower arbitrarily usurped local authority when he called out his troops at Central High School.

More than a year ago the mayor published in the New York Herald-Tribune and other newspapers subscribing to its syndicate a detailed account of his negotiations with the White House during the critical period. The account contained the text of the telegram released last Wednesday in Washington.

This confusion would be bad enough if it were simply the product of faulty research. In this instance the report stands as a major, if innocent, contribution to the effort of some Southern political leaders and some Southern newspapers to re-cast the Little Rock story to obscure salient points of great embarrassment to Gov. Faubus, and of great significance in any fair appraisal of what happened here:

1. The fact that Orval Faubus was the first to use armed force in the Little Rock situation, and that he did so without notice, and before there was violence.

2. That he seized Central High School, before it opened, by force of arms, not upon the request of responsible local officials, but over their repeated protests.

3. That he used his troops solely to bar the entry of Negro students under federal court order, and never to disperse the mob that was allowed to gather without interference day after day.

4. That the National Guard was federalized, and regular troops sent here to restore order, only after the Governor had refused to use his police powers in support of local authorities who were attempting to enforce the law and preserve the peace.

There is, of course, room for a variety of judgments on the correctness of President Eisenhower's course. But the President's decision can be understood only in the context of Orval Faubus' prior actions—and it is a major aspect of the Little Rock tragedy that so many people, here and elsewhere, have allowed their own strong feeling, and the deliberate distortions of the propagandists, to blur the record.

Too late now to do any good—

Most Little Rock students resigned to finish year without public schools

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Jan. 22—(AP)—Most Little Rock high school students and their parents apparently are resigned to finishing this year without public schools, despite recent efforts who first looked on the school closing as a temporary measure but who now are prepared to extend emergency educational provisions indefinitely, certainly through this school year.

Caught in a massive battle between federal and state governments on the school integration question, 2000 Little Rock students this week finished first semester work in schools in other communities. Another 1100 are nearing midterm at newly organized private schools here.

About 700 students, including 450 Negroes, remain out of classes altogether.

Community sentiment is divided on the school issue. Many prefer that the schools remain closed if integration is the only alternative.

The Little Rock school board has asked U. S. District Court here to permit reopening of the schools on a segregated basis until it can develop a plan for operating them in a manner acceptable both to the court and residents of the district.

PRESUMABLY, such a plan would have to provide for some degree of integration under standing court orders.

On the other hand, the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People has asked the court to overturn a state law under which Faubus closed the schools and to order immediate reopening under the original Little Rock integration plan, which would make Negroes immediately eligible to attend any high school.

Neither the school board's request nor the NAACP motion has been set for a hearing.

Students apparently continue to take the situation in good spirits. The novelty of attending new schools, even at great inconvenience, has not worn off. Many said they prefer the new schools to the federal court moves to reopen the facilities immediately.

"It's too late to do any good this year," said one mother. "My Billy is settled at a private school and he'll probably stay there because we couldn't be sure the public schools would stay open if they are reopened."

UNMIXED SCHOOL OPENING SOUGHT

Little Rock Board Promises Integration Plan

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP)—The Little Rock school board Wednesday asked federal court permission to reopen Little Rock's four closed public high schools on a segregated basis while it works out a plan for compliance with court orders to integrate.

The board promised a plan acceptable to both the court and residents of the school district by Aug. 15.

Board president Ed I. McKinley Jr. said the schools could be opened by next Monday if the court approves the request and Gov. Orval E. Faubus will return control of the schools to the board.

FAUBUS REACTION

Faubus, reached at Foreman, Ark., where he was attending a plant dedication, said he would be glad to discuss reopening of the schools under the board's proposal.

"However, I cannot comment at length on the plan until I have studied the actual petition," he said.

The board's request was filed for consideration of U. S. District Judge John E. Miller who on Jan. 10 ordered the board to show it was taking positive steps toward implementing a plan of integration in the closed schools and called for a report within 30 days. Wednesday's petition serves as this report.

Judge Miller said he would set a hearing on the petition as soon as possible.

"But I don't see how I'll be able to get to it before the week of Feb. 2 because of the press of other court business," he said.

'Old Plan Rejected'

The board, elected Dec. 6 after the previous board resigned en masse, said that it had never had jurisdiction over the high schools, which Faubus closed Sept. 12 to forestall integration.

"This board is acting in good faith and with all possible speed," McKinley said. "We simply do not feel it is possible at this time to operate the high schools under the old plan of integration which has been rejected by the people."

He referred to an election late in September, when Little Rock residents voted overwhelmingly to keep the schools closed rather than reopen them integrated."

The "old plan," submitted by the former board and upheld in a long series of federal court decisions, calls for gradual integration beginning at the high school level.

It has been stymied by the school closings.

Little Rock Pleads For Time

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. —(AP)— The Little Rock School Board Wednesday asked U.S. District Court here for permission to reopen the city's closed public high schools on a segregated basis, at least temporarily.

This was the board's answer to a court order to take immediate steps to implement integration in the schools under a court-approved plan.

The board said reopening of the schools would remove an air of tension in the community and would make it possible for the board to complete a study of problems confronting it.

The board said it will attempt to develop an integration plan acceptable to the Federal Court and the people of the district, and report to the court no later than Aug. 15.

U.S. District Judge John E. Miller on Jan. 10 gave the board 30 days to develop an integration plan.

LITTLE ROCK:

It Hurt Business, Too

When the Little Rock integration crisis broke a year and a half ago, many people wondered: Will it hurt local business? Last week, after polling 85 professional and business men, the Little Rock branch of the American Association of University Women finally came up with an answer. It hurt most local businesses plenty.

"It has very definitely hurt the real-estate business," said a broker. "Just about killed it, as a matter of fact."

"General unrest is never good for business," said a construction-firm owner. "This year we hoped to double our volume. This hasn't happened."

"Not only are our clients not in a buying mood," groaned one life-insurance agent, "but some of our agents are too emotionally disturbed to be effective salesmen. They waste valuable working hours arguing among themselves."

"Anyone who doesn't think the school situation will affect local business has rocks in his head," said a merchandising executive.

All told, 44 of the businessmen polled said business had suffered; 35 Little Rockers said there had been no change. "It depends on the kind of clientele the person has," noted an attorney.

A slim sample (six) actually grew more prosperous but they admitted to ironical circumstances. "It has increased our business," reported a filling-station manager. "Many times's stop here and ask directions to Central High School and also buy gas."

A moving-company official had his own bonanza: "We are moving families away from Little Rock faster than ever before."

ARKANSANS REJECT SCHOOL RECALL BID

Special to The New York Times.

LITTLE ROCK, Feb. 1—In a record turnout, residents of the northeast Arkansas town of Hoxie voted yesterday not to remove from office five school board members who were on the board when integration came to Hoxie in 1955.

Residents voted against recalling Guy Floyd, 69 years old, and Leo Roberts, 50.

The unofficial returns showed: for recall of Mr. Floyd, 341;

Little Rock congressman fails again

WASHINGTON, D. C. (NNPA)—Representative Dale Alford, s[illegible] Rock segregationist, was defeated Tuesday in his move to have the House deny the Justice Department an appropriation of $390,000 to cover the costs of recruiting and sending 110 deputy marshals to Little Rock last fall.

The second supplemental appropriation bill carried an item of $2,032,000 for salaries and expenses of United States attorneys and marshals. The Justice Department originally requested $900,000 to meet emergency situations, such an enforcement of Federal court orders in school desegregation cases, and to pay salaries and expenses of the 110 deputy marshals recruited and sent to Little Rock.

The House Appropriations Committee denied the Justice Department $510,000 of its request, which was to be a contingency fund, and approved the $390,000 for obligations already incurred.

MR. ALFORD moved to strike the $390,000 from the bill. He called the item "an insult to a wonderful peace-loving community."

against, 385. For recall of Mr. Roberts, 333; against, 392.

Petitions for the election were filed by Herbert Brewer, an outspoken segregationist who is on the school board. Eamon Nichols, another board member, was among the 299 signers.

Hoxie integrated its public schools in July, 1955, the third Arkansas community to do so. The transition was accompanied by protests and demonstrations by pro-segregation groups. A Federal court later enjoined these groups from interfering with the integration program. About twelve Negroes are enrolled with about 850 white students.

LITTLE ROCK FINDS BUSINESS HARMED

Decline Since School Crisis Reported by Majority Polled in a Survey

Special to The New York Times.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Jan. 31—How has the school integration dispute affected business at Little Rock?

The Little Rock branch of the American Association of University Women asked that question of eighty-five business men here during the last three months.

The answers: Forty-four said their businesses had been hurt by the school dispute; thirty-five said they noticed no effect; six said their businesses had improved.

The association concluded that Little Rock's "present prosperity" was due to expansion before the start of the school crisis in September, 1957.

No Business Moves In

"Since the school crisis," the association summed up, "no new business has moved into Little Rock, which bodes ill for the future. As one prominent company president said: 'Anyone who doesn't think the school situation will affect his business adversely has rocks in his head.'" Seven of the eight real estate dealers interviewed said their businesses had been hurt. They said many persons were moving out of the city and few were buying houses because of the uncertain school situation.

"I have some desirable residential property near school that used to sell before you could run an ad," said one real estate salesman. "Now I don't even get any bites."

Others who said business had declined were pharmacists, manufacturers and variety store owners. The business men who reported "no effect" were mainly retail store owners, insurance men and bankers.

Moving Families Away

Two of the three moving van owners questioned said their business had improved since the school dispute began. "We are moving families away from Little Rock faster than ever before," said an executive of a long-distance moving company. "Incoming moves are predominantly government personnel rather than large corporations."

Gov. Orval E. Faubus, who has closed the four public high schools at Little Rock to avert integration, challenged the association's findings the day after they were announced.

He said he disputed the survey results because retail store sales over the last few months had shown an increase. "That doesn't seem to coincide with the survey," he said.

Department store sales, as reported by the Federal Reserve Bank of St. Louis, have continued higher than a year ago and above the 1947-1949 average. For the four weeks ended at mid-January Little Rock sales were 16 per cent higher than a year ago.

LITTLE ROCK FAILS IN BID ON SCHOOLS

U.S. Court Denies Board's Request for Reopening on Segregated Basis

Special to The New York Times.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Feb. 3—A Federal judge refused today to permit the Little Rock School Board to reopen temporarily its four high schools on a segregated basis.

District Judge John E. Miller of Fort Smith, Ark., said his court did not have the right to suspend the school district's plan of integration unless the board provided a substitute plan at the same time.

The board had asked permission to reopen the high school's while it drafted a new integration plan to start next fall.

Judge Miller said he knew of no way that the school board could reopen the high schools so long as the state law under which they were closed remains in effect.

A court test of this law appears to be the next step in the complicated school integration case.

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People has challenged the law and a three-judge panel to consider it has been appointed by the Federal Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals. A date for the hearing has not been set.

Test in State Court

A suit testing the validity of the school-closing law also is pending in the Arkansas Supreme Court. It was filed in the state courts on Sept. 12, 1958, the same day that Gov. Orval E. Faubus used the law to close the public high schools at Little Rock.

Judge Miller in the hearing today criticized the Justice Department for its "friend of the court" brief that had attacked the school board's motion as having been offered "in bad faith."

He said the department's brief appeared "entirely arbitrary and utterly unmindful of the problems" that confronted the school board. He said he was gratified that Donald McGuineas of Washington, who represented the department, took a different attitude in his oral argument.

But the judge took no action on a school board motion that the Justice Department be denied further participation in the Little Rock case.

Faubus Offers School Hopes For This Fall

Hints Possible Reopening Of Four On Limited Integration Basis

COMPROMISES NEEDED

Neither Side Has Given Any Yielding Sign—Comment By Arkansas Governor Could Be Trial Balloon

By KENNETH JOHNSON

From The Commercial Appeal Little Rock Bureau

LITTLE ROCK, April 6.—Gov. Orval Faubus cautiously qualifying his statements, Monday declared there is a possibility Little Rock's closed high schools can be reopened this fall on a limited integration basis.

"Personally, I'd like to see them reopened right now," the Governor told newsmen. And he added if opposing groups could get together on compromises "something might be worked out."

The Governor's statements represented a marked departure from his previous utterances on the school question. They could have been a trial balloon on his part, aimed at getting reaction to a reopen-the-schools movement backed here by certain groups which seemingly has been gaining strength.

No Softening Seen Yet

The Governor said he has seen nothing definite to indicate any softening of the unyielding attitudes displayed both by segregationist groups and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored people. He inferred—but didn't specify exactly what would be required—that some compromises would be necessary before he would reopen the schools.

Under state law, and barring court orders to the contrary, the Governor holds exclusive authority to reopen the schools or to keep them closed. Last week he vetoed a legislative proposal which would have provided for automatic reopening of the schools in September. Some of his remarks Monday came when newsmen brought up the veto.

"If Acts 4 and 5 should be upheld, we would be in a very strong position to get something worked out," observed Governor Faubus.

Did that mean he was implying there was a possibility of the schools being reopened on a limited integration basis? When he was asked that, he replied in the affirmative.

Acts Under Challenge

Acts 4 and 5, now under challenge in both Arkansas and Federal courts, were adopted during the special session of the Legislature the Governor called last August to deal with the integration crisis.

Act 4 gives him school-closing authority, which he invoked last fall in closing the city's four high schools. Act 5 transfers state funds to districts which provide schooling for students whose schools have been closed. Further transfer of such funds has been temporarily enjoined by a three-judge Federal court, with next hearing set for May 4.

The state's school-closing act now is before the Arkansas Supreme Court, which conceivably could rule on it next Monday.

Doubt Is Cast On School Vote

Little Rock Ballot Recount Indicates Moderates In Control Of Board

By KENNETH JOHNSON

From The Commercial Appeal Little Rock Bureau

LITTLE ROCK, April 8.—A recount of votes completed Wednesday indicated Mrs. Charles W. Stephens may have defeated Judge R. W. Laster in the Dec. 6 school board election. However, there's further litigation impending.

Re-examination of 425 disputed votes in the race showed Mrs. Stephens the apparent winner by four votes. Judge Laster had been certified the winner by 11.

Votes May Be Illegal

Circuit Judge J. Mitchell Cockrill, who ruled there was a prima facie showing that 292 votes cast for Judge Laster were illegal, said there would be further proceedings Monday. He held that the 292 votes apparently were cast by persons not owning poll tax receipts, which is a prerequisite for voting in Arkansas.

He also held that 133 votes may have been cast in the wrong precincts, which also would invalidate them. If the prima facie showing holds up under closer examination, Mrs. Stephens evidently will be declared winner.

However, Judge Cockrill said there was still extensive investigation to be made before he could make a final ruling. "It looks as if we're just getting started," he said.

If Mrs. Stephens should be seated, it would give "moderates" a four-two voice on the board. Judge Laster is numbered among the three segregationists on the six-member agency. Mrs. Stephens was among a slate of self-described moderates on the racial question who have taken a stand for reopening the closed Little Rock high schools on a "limited integration" basis.

New Law Enforced

Meanwhile, one member of the board predicted Wednesday that the city's four closed high schools would be open on an integrated basis next fall.

"I think the high schools will be open next fall and I don't think the courts will let them open without at least a minimum of integration," said Ted Lamb, one of three moderate members.

Governor Faubus closed the schools last Sept. 12 to block Supreme Court-ordered integration.

Ed I. McKinley Jr. is president of the board. The other segregationist member is Ben Rowland Jr. Everett Tucker Jr. and Russell Matson Jr. are the other "moderate" members.

Meanwhile, the board is putting into operation a new state law which requires teachers to sign affidavits listing all organizations to which they have belonged for the past five years. Refusal to sign or to give the information will subject them to loss of contracts.

The measure—passed by the special session in August — is aimed at weeding out members of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. A later law adopted in the regular session early this year forbids any public agency from hiring members of the NAACP.

Reveals He Tried To Dissuade Faubus Acts

ST. LOUIS — (NNPA) A Winthrop Rockefeller appealed for "unity, patience and understanding" of the problems of racial integration in an address here Wednesday night.

Mr. Rockefeller, who is chairman of the Arkansas Industrial Development Commission, spoke at the forthieth anniversary meeting of the St. Louis Urban League at Hotel Statler Hilton.

He said it is easy for notherners to critize southern integration policies but that "it is just as easy for southerners to lose confidence in the North because of the apparent lack of understanding of racial problems as the South sees them."

In a press conference earlier, Mr. Rockefeller told of trying to dissuade Gov. Orval Faubus of Arkansas from interfering in the orderly desegregation of Little Rock public schools.

INDUSTRY KEEPS OUT

leading proponent of industrial development in Arkansas, Mr. Rockefeller pointed out that no new industry has moved into Little Rock since the beginning of the desegregation troubles there.

He said, however, there were as many prospects for new industry moving into other parts of the state as ever before.

A trustee of the National Urban League, Mr. Rockefeller expressed the belief that the voice of moderation in the South was beginning to be heard and would soon assume leadership in integration problems.

He predicted that breakdown of massive resistance in Virginia and Gov. J. Lindsay Almond's acceptance of reality" would serve to break the integaration deadlock in Arkansas and elsewhere in the South. He declined to predict, however, what course Faubus would take.

Annual achievement awards were given to Mrs. Nannie Mitchell Turner, president of the St. Louis Argus Publishing Co.; Local 88, Manufacturers Union, and the Government Employees Mart.

Mrs. Mitchell was cited for her "unqualfied support of movements to promote democracy and justice." The Local 88 award was for establishing a health institute and for integrated membership policies. The Employees' Mart award was for a "democratic policy of employment.

Senate Backs School Opening For Little Rock

Enrollment Next Fall Would Be By Regular Process—Closing Is Possible

GOVERNOR KEEPS RIGHT

Pulaski House Delegation Is Split Over Addition To Education Board — Call For Hearing Expected

By KENNETH JOHNSON

From The Commercial Appeal Little Rock Bureau

LITTLE ROCK, Feb. 27. — A proposal to reopen Little Rock's closed high schools next school year cleared the Arkansas Senate Friday by a vote of 29-0, without debate.

A provision in the bill says the Governor's authority to close the schools again would not be affected. An act adopted during August's special legislative session gives the Governor school-closing powers during an integration dispute.

The proposal adopted Friday and sent to the House was introduced by three members of the Little Rock delegation, Senators Ellis Fagan, Max Howell and Artie Gregory.

Automatic Reopening

The bill says any closed school shall automatically be reopened at the start of the next school year and pupils enrolled "according to regular procedures established for pupil assignment. Start of the next school year will be Sept. 1.

But the Governor could step in and close the schools again if in his judgment such an order was warranted. He ordered the four schools here closed last fall when Federal courts reaffirmed integration.

Governor Faubus reportedly had endorsed the measure, which accounted for no Senate opposition. The bill is viewed as a first step toward getting the school situation back to normal before another school term.

Board Now Divided

Meanwhile, the Pulaski House delegation split over a proposal introduced Thursday by one of its members to give the Governor authority to add three more members to the six-member Little Rock School Board. The board now is divided three-three on the segregation question.

Representative T. E. Tyler of Little Rock, who introduced the bill, said Friday he thought the bill was necessary to provide a workable board during the integration dispute. But he conceded not all of the seven-member Pulaski delegation agreed with him.

They met Friday to discuss the proposal and probably will ask for a public hearing on the bill next week.

School Group Meets

The board, which is headed by Ed I. McKinley, Little Rock attorney who is on friendly terms with the Governor, met Thursday night and heard a discussion of plans pointing to future schooling here but no action was taken.

One proposal came from board member R. W. Laster, local municipal judge, who advocated the board open the closed high schools immediately as segregated institutions in outright defiance of Federal Court orders. Mr. McKinley earlier had criticized that plan or any school-opening step as playing into the hands of integrationists.

The board chairman contended that regardless of how schools might be reopened, to open them at all would "place them in reach" of Federal courts again. That places him on record as preferring a continuation of the closed-school status.

BLOSSOM GETS INTEGRATION IN NEW JOB

SAN ANTONIO, Tex. (UPI)—Virgil Blossom, who as superintendent of Little Rock public schools was credited with authorship of the gradual integration plan at Central High School, has taken a job as superintendent of an integrated school system in San Antonio.

M. V. Stob'e, a board member of the Northeast Independent School District, announced yesterday that Blossom had accepted a three-year contract that will pay him $17,000 the first year, $18,000 the second and $19,000 the third year.

LITTLE ROCK SHIFT OF FUNDS BARRED

U. S. Court Blocks Diversion of State Education Aid to Segregated Schools

By CLAUDIE SIMONS

Special to The New York Times.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., March 7—The Federal District Court here today barred further diversion of state funds from this city's four closed high schools to other public and private institutions.

A three-judge panel issued a temporary injunction barring state officials from control of the money. The action had been requested by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

The order will stand until the panel decides whether the two laws under which Gov. Orval E. Faubus had closed the schools and cut off their allocations violated the United States Constitution.

His action last September followed a Supreme Court direction to the Little Rock School Board to proceed with its plan of gradual desegregation.

Lawyers for the Governor and the board asked the court to delay consideration of the laws until the State Supreme Court had ruled on two suits challenging their constitutionality.

But the court ordered the filing of pleadings in the case within ten days and scheduled a hearing for May 4.

Judge John B. Sanborn of the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals, who presided over the panel here, declared that the issue "will be tried and decided regardless of what is before the Supreme Court of Arkansas."

The N. A. A. C. P., with the support of the Justice Department, contends that the laws contravene the "equal protection" clause of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Federal Constitution.

Precedent in Norfolk

In a similar case, a three-judge district panel in Norfolk, Va., recently held that a state could not provide education for one group while denying it to another.

The laws in question here are Acts 4 and 5, passed at the Governor's request by an emergency session of the Legislature last August.

Act 4 permits the Governor to close schools ordered to desegregate. Act 5 provides that students from these schools may use part of their school district's state aid to pay for their education at other public or private institutions.

Today's hearing brought out that $500,000 had been withheld by state officials since last September from the Little Rock district. Of this amount, $187,768 has already been disbursed to segregated institutions that have accepted Little Rock students.

Thurgood Marshall, chief counsel for the N. A. A. C. P., told the court that this had caused "irreparable harm" to the rights of Negro students because the funds could not be recovered.

But a review of the laws' constitutionality was the chief issue in contention before the panel, which, besides Judge Sanborn, included Judges John E. Miller of Arkansas and George Axel J. Beck of South Dakota, temporarily assigned to Little Rock.

Tom Harper Jr., representing Governor Faubus, requested the court to await the State Supreme Court's decision. He said he thought it would act shortly.

Mr. Harper also contended that the question of both the state and Federal constitutionality of the laws was before the Arkansas court.

Mr. Marshall, however, introduced a copy of the brief filed in the Act 4 suit and pointed out that the argument made no reference to the Federal Constitution.

Donald B. MacGuineas, who represented the Justice Department in the case, supported Mr. Marshall's contention. He said that if a delay were granted, there would be "serious doubt that the matter would be resolved before next September."

In another matter, the court extended until May 1 the date for the Dollarway School District of Pine Bluff, Ark., to reply to a suit seeking to desegregate the district.

VOTE IN LITTLE ROCK BACKS OPEN SCHOOLS

Special to The New York Times.

LITTLE ROCK, March 2—A poll of Little Rock Chamber of Commerce members revealed today a decisive majority in favor of re-opening the city's public high schools under a plan of "controlled minimum" integration.

The chamber's board of directors adopted a resolution calling on the Arkansas Supreme Court to render a prompt ruling on the validity of the state laws under which the schools were closed.

E. Grainger Williams, president of the chamber, said that 819 members voted in favor of re-opening the schools and 243 voted against.

The chamber did not explain what was meant by "controlled minimum" integration. The phrase is understood here to mean a plan similar to the old Little Rock School Board plan that provided for integration over a seven-year period with liberal transfer provisions. These would permit students to transfer across attendance area boundaries to go to schools preponderantly of their own race.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., March 2 (UPI)—The Arkansas House of Representatives today overwhelmingly voted Gov. Orval E. Faubus the power to appoint three new members to the deadlocked Little Rock School Board.

The resolution was tabled, however, in the Senate.

The six-member school board is deadlocked because three members are pro-Faubus and the rest are opposed to his policies. The split occurred in a regular school election last Dec. 6.

Arkansas Still Defies U. S. Supreme Court School Order

Little Rock Struggles While Oklahoma, Other States Integrate Peacefully

LITTLE ROCK — (ANP) — Gov. Orval Faubus of Arkansas suffered a jolting setback in his latest anti-integration move Thursday, when the Senate rejected his proposal for a special election to add three new members to the embattled Little Rock school board. The defeat came as the Arkansas General Assembly ended its session here.

In Oklahoma, for example, the situation is encouraging. There integration, with support from local officials, has progressed so smoothly that Gov. Raymond Gary was able to announce recently that the state saves $1 million a year as a result of the integrated schools. The morale of the students is high, he added.

In general, according to Atty. Gen. C. Ferdinand Sybert, the people in Maryland "have accepted that integration is here to stay, and school officials have proceeded to integrate the schools, noticeably in Baltimore.

Even in Virginia, where a hard core "massive resistance" was put up by forces led by Sen. Harry Byrd, integration is now forging ahead, without the traditionally predicted [illegible]

Little Rock Suffers

But in Arkansas, where the state government, led by Gov. Orval Faubus, has elected to defy the federal courts, it's a different story In Little Rock, focal point of the integration struggle, the four public high schools have been closed by state edict to prevent federally ordered integration. As a result, the bulk of the 3,600 students have been shut out, and the rest are attending makeshift schools under trying circumstances.

Two jim crow schools have been set up to take care of "white students only" from the closed schools Both of these are makeshift institutions. Not only are their teaching faculty and facilities far below the standards at the closed schools, but in many instances there are none.

For instance at Raney High school, founded by the arch segregationist Dr. Thomas J. Raney, [illegible] students are split up into two groups in different buildings because of the lack of adequate facilities. The teaching staff, for the most part, consists of old retired teachers.

At Baptist High school, the other jimcrow setup, the 367 enrollees really have a trying time. Many of them have to go to neighboring buildings and facilities to obtain the training lack at the school The classes are too large, there is no gymnasium, no facilities for business training, and once a month students must commute 66 miles for laboratory work in science courses.

Both schools are supposed to be financed by donations, but the state has granted $72 000 in pupil-aid to Raney. This, however, has been ordered stopped by a three-judge federal court in Little Rock, March 7.

And while all this is going on, Central High, the $5 million dollar institution, which nine Negro pupils integrated under federal troops during the 1957-58 school year, remains deserted, attended only by the 77 highly trained teachers which the state must pay for showing up daily at the school. Other teachers under the Little Rock school board's jurisdiction are forbidden by federal edict from teaching in the jim crow schools. Neither can the facilities and equipment of the closed schools be used for segregatd schools.

One of the students at Raney is Sammy Dean Parker, the 17-year-old girl expelled last year from Central High as a ringleader of the white students who harrassed the nine Negroes. She, of course, said she was "very happy at Raney."

Different in Arlington

In contrast to the hardships at Little Rock high, integrated high schools in Virginia are operating on adequate, efficient basis. There is no trouble, as predicted by racists.

Stratford Junior High, is an example. Four Negroes are enrolled there. All have gained acceptance and some white students have gone out of their way to be nice to them. In fact, the situation at the school is so favorable that one official remarked that the students (Negro and white) — seem to have forgotten that there was ever a problem about this." School authorities credit the stability to firmness on the part of administrators. White students were told: You have a good school. Let's keep it that way."

The same firmness was adopted by school officials in Oklahoma to obtain stability and respect for the law. According to Gov. Gary, the Oklahoma Crime Bureau, including one Negro agent, went to work immediately warning trouble makers what to expect if they resorted to violence to defy the law. They usually quieted down, he said.

No Solid Southern Bloc

Our study shows also that there is no such thing as a unified Southern block pledged to fighting integration. In fact even some deep South states are wavering.

At the recent Southern Regional Conference of Attorneys General Atty. Gens. Wilson of Texas and Jo. M. Ferguson of Kentusky would go no further than to say that integration was a problem of local school boards.

On the other hand, Atty. Gen. Mac Donald Gallion of Alabama said any attempt to integrate Alabama schools would be met with violence. He did not elaborate.

FILIBUSTER KILLS FAUBUS SCHOOL BILL

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., March 12 (UPI)—Senator Sam Levine, a Pine Bluff, Ark., attorney, filibustered almost a half-hour Thursday to kill Gov. Orval E. Faubus' bill to add three new members to the Little Rock school board.

The bill, a revised version of an earlier one, would have authorized a special election to provide three new members. An earlier measure would have allowed Governor Faubus personally to appoint the new members.

The Governor got the measure introduced in the Arkansas Legislature because half the board is against him and the rest of the six-man board is for him. Governor Faubus closed the four Little Rock high schools last Sept. 12 to block integration. They are still empty.

The bill passed the House yesterday. The Senate had just time enough before adjournment to pass either the board bill or an appropriation bill, but not both.

Senator Levine, who has consistently voted against Faubus-sponsored bills, kept up a running chatter about his wife, geographical longitude and latitude and even read the bill. With one minute left to adjournment, he yielded the floor to Senator Tom Allen of Brinkley, Ark., and the appropriation bill was passed.

a hotly contested school board race last December.

McKinley and the remaining two board members are considered staunch advocates of the attitude taken by Faubus, who prohibited the schools from opening last fall in a maneuver aimed at averting court-ordered integration.

Tucker skirted a direct answer to a question about whether McKinley, Rowland and Laster had been asked to attend the meetings.

He said, however, "The other members would have been welcome to come if they wished to."

Tucker emphasized that the meetings were informal and "completely unofficial."

He estimated the trio visited eight or 10 schools. Lamb's estimate was 12 or 13 schools.

Tucker indicated other visits to schools might be made by the three board members.

According to Lamb, the visits included Central and Hall high schools, two of those closed in the integration controversy.

Lamb said he thought some form of "redistricting" might help solve the integration deadlock but did not elaborate.

He said the members told teachers, "We believe the high schools will be operating this September and that we do not believe the court will permit them to operate without a minimum of integration.

"We have not tried to sell them (the teachers) integration or segregation," he added.

Faubus' Foes Think Schools May Re-open As Integrated

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — Three Little Rock school board members think the city's four closed public high schools will be operating in September with some degree of integration.

Ted L. Lamb, a member of the six-man board, Wednesday confirmed reports that he, Everett Tucker Jr. and Russell Matson Jr. had predicted this in a series of informal meetings with principals and teachers at various schools here during the past two weeks.

Ed I. McKinley Jr., president of the board, and members Ben Rowland Sr. and traffic Judge Robert Laster did not accompany the others to the meetings.

Lamb, Tucker and Matson are considered foes of Gov. Orval Faubus' stand in the integration dispute. The governor attacked them as "integrationists" during

Faubus Says Little Rock Police Use Tactics Like Reds In Hungary

Believes Quiet Is Temporary

Little Rock Aug. 14 (UP)—Governor Orval E. Faubus accused Little Rock police Friday of breaking up an anti-integration demonstration at Central High School Wednesday the same way the Russians suppressed the Hungarian revolt.

Nevertheless, Faubus said at a news conference, if the Little Rock police had failed to handle the demonstration, he would have ordered the State police and the National Guard to take over.

Four Negroes attended integrated classes at Central and Hall high schools Friday in complete peace.

24 Were Arrested

Police and firemen broke up the demonstration Faubus was talking about with night sticks and high-pressure hoses and arrested 24 demonstrators. There hasn't been any trouble since.

Faubus said the director of State police told him it looked "relatively quiet" and he was leaving Little Rock for three or four days to go fishing.

Faubus denounced as a "grandstand play" a plea of Mrs. L. C. Bates to President Eisenhower for protection. Mrs. Bates is the Arkansas president of The National Association for Advancement of Colored People and leads the integration drive in Little Rock.

Telegraphed President

She telegraphed the President late Thursday after State police had arrested, for carrying concealed weapons, three Negroes who, she said, were "volunteer guards" of her home.

As to the situation at the integrated schools, Faubus said:

"Of course, it's quiet now. It's quiet in Hungary. The burdens of (police chief) Gene Smith have just begun. So have the burdens of those who give Gene Smith his orders.

"It is not likely to be peaceful here for a long, long time. By that, I mean without incidents or force."

Virginia School Quietly Registers Negro Students

Front Royal, Va., Aug. 14 (UP)—Warren County High School, boycotted by its entire white student body last February to avoid integration, Friday quietly began registering white and Negro students for the new term.

It marked the first time both Negroes and whites had entered the huge school, the only white public high school in the county. It was closed last fall to avoid a Federal Court desegregation order, but reopened in February with 21 Negroes as its entire student body.

Thirty-five whites and two Negroes had registered by mid-day. Registration continues through Monday.

Faubus Flays Police Chief

DARDANELLE, Ark. (UPI) — Gov. Orval Faubus said Wednesday night that anti-integration demonstrators at Little Rock's Central High School were "blackjacked by police because they stood up for what they believed."

Faubus, who referred to the forceful method through which Little Rock police put down a near-riot, spoke at a chicken fry at Mt. Nebo.

Faubus criticized as "integrationists, puppets and hypocrites" Little Rock Police Chief Eugene G. Smith and School Board President Everett Tucker.

About 600 persons heard the speech.

"I don't know what I can do about it," said Faubus, "but if there is, anything, I'll do it."

He held up a newspaper carrying photos of police in action at Central High. The governor said Chief Smith "personally blackjacked a woman."

He accused police of tearing up an American flag being waved by one of the integration protesters.

FAUBUS OFFERS OPTIONAL PLAN OF INTEGRATION

Half of Willing Pupils Would Be Mixed

Little Rock, Ark., July 28 (UPI)—Gov. Orval E. Faubus offered a plan Tuesday for what he called "peaceful integration" of the troubled Little Rock public schools.

He suggested the voluntary integration of Horace Mann [Negro] High school, and Hall High, in the elite residential section of the city.

Central High school, integrated with the assistance of federal troops in 1957, and kept closed last year by the governor, would remain segregated for white students.

Faubus said he had offered his plan to the Little Rock school board for its consideration.

The governor said at a news conference that parents of white and Negro students would indicate whether they had objections to their children's attending integrated schools.

Would Separate Sexes

Then the school board would assign half of the willing white students to Horace Mann and half of the willing Negro students to Hall.

"There would then exist two integrated schools, leaving Central High school available for those students whose parents are unwilling to accept integration," Faubus said.

Faubus said that under his plan, boys would attend one school and girls the other. "This would take care of any moral problems which might arise," he said.

He said the plan would be legal under the Arkansas constitution. The 44th amendment to the state constitution authorizes the state to take "appropriate action and pass laws opposing in every constitutional way" the effectuation of the United States Supreme court's decisions of May 17, 1954, and May 31, 1955.

No Attack on Law

Faubus also quoted a state law saying no person shall be required to attend a school with students of "another or different" race. He said neither the amendment nor the law had been attacked in the courts by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Faubus said his plan could be substituted for the pupil placement law, which the school board plans to use to open Little Rock's four public high schools this fall.

Under the pupil placement law, school officials will screen students for placement in various schools on the basis of a number of criteria other than race.

Signup Figures Told

The schools have just completed formal registration of white and Negro high school students to find out how many Negroes want to attend white schools when classes open on Sept. 8.

Thru Monday, 55 Negroes had signed up at Central, Hall, and Little Rock Tech, the city's three white schools. Of the total, 49 had signed at Central.

The school board has said it would announce in the near future the machinery it would use to screen the pupils for assignment to specific schools, and then announce the actual assignments.

Faubus Hints No Plan To Call Legislature

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Aug. 1 (AP).—Gov. Orval E. Faubus apparently has squelched persistent reports that he would take a hand against approaching school integration via a quick special legislative session.

The Governor said he still had tentative plans to call a special session "within the next one to six months." But he said it would deal primarily "with industrial financing and perhaps other minor problems."

He indicated he had plans connected with desegregation, scheduled to start in two Little Rock high schools Wednesday, but wouldn't say what they were. He said he had "no concrete reports at this time" about impending troubles over the integration.

Meanwhile, a "buyer's strike" against downtown merchants was scheduled to begin today. It was called by the Capital Citizens Council. Amis Guthridge, council attorney, charged the merchants with aiding the integration movement.

Rally Plans Denied

Reports circulated that a mass rally would be held Wednesday morning to ask Gov. Faubus to do something about stopping integration, but segregation leaders denied knowledge of it.

Gov. Faubus yesterday had no comment on new court action aimed at making the school board admit to white high schools any Negroes living in attendance areas of those schools.

Attorneys for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People filed the action in United States District Court Saturday. They asked for an order restraining the board from using the State pupil-placement law, on grounds that it denied the Negro students benefits of previous court decrees in connection with the court-approved plan of integration here.

No date was set for action on the motion.

Posters Appear

Anti-integration posters appeared in the Dollarway district near Pine Bluff, 40 miles southeast of here. The district recently was ordered by a Federal court to admit three Negroes to a white high school. The posters announced a meeting to be held Friday night.

L. D. Pointer, president of the Arkansas Association of Citizens Councils, said the posters were put out by the Dollarway Citizens Council. However, Dick Ryburn, Dollarway council president, denied knowledge of them. He said he ahd not called the meeting, but would attend as a school patron interested in retaining segregation.

Faubus Says Board Action No Surprise

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — Segregationists and Negro leaders alike were quick Wednesday to use a move for the early reopening of Little Rock's public high schools to blast anew at limited integration.

The showdown in the long squabble was almost at hand. The School Board, in a surprise move Tuesday night, advanced the starting date for the fall term from Sept. 8 to next Wednesday.

Gov. Orval E. Faubus looked out across his desk at a news conference, shook his head and said: "It looks like they're trying to get the Negroes in."

Six Negroes are assigned to attend two formerly all-white schools. Fifty-four others registered for all-white schools but were assigned to the all-Negro Horace Mann High School under a state pupil placement law.

Faubus said the board's action came as no surprise to him. He said he had no present plans to call a special legislative session. First, he said, someone had to come up with a proposal of how to stop intergation.

Last fall, Faubus stopped integration by a quickly enacted state law under which he closed the high schools. Recently he was stripped of this power in a federal court decision holding the law unconstitutional.

There have been rumors current for weeks that Faubus would call a special session. Everett Tucker Jr., the board president, said he had heard them but he denied the board was trying to beat Faubus to the punch.

One segregationist leader charged the school board move was to "force integration" in the face of a polio epidemic which grips the state. Arkansas has had 104 polio cases this year compared to eight at this time last year.

Dr. Malcolm G. Taylor, president of the Capitol Citizens Council, gave no indication what plans, if any, the segregationist group had to resist integration.

Dr. Mason G. Lawson, city health officer, said the polio rate was not serious enough to delay opening of the high schools.

A state legislator seized on the polio angle as a possible means of thwarting the opening.

State Rep. N. B. (Nap) Murphy, of Hamburg, Ark., suggested that Faubus could keep the high schools from opening, using his emergency powers and declaring the polio outbreak to be an epidemic. Murphy also appeared in favor of a special session.

Amis Gutheridge, Citizens Council attorney, called the early opening a maneuver "to evade the authority of the Arkansas Legislature." He said he thought a special session still was possible.

Gutheridge said he knew of "several types of legislation that could be enacted that would prevent race mixing in our schools."

Faubus Requested To Fight Mixing

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (UPI)—Gov. Orval Faubus was under pressure today to use "all of the forces at your command" to oppose a federal court order for desegregation of a school district 42 miles south of Little Rock.

A petition was being circulated in the Dollarway School District, situated outside of Pine Bluff, asking Faubus for "relief from the illegal federal court orders and injunctions" ordering the desegregation Sept. 8. A spokesman for the group behind the petition said it would be presented to the governor next week.

Firm Police Action Blocks Parade Of Segregationists at Opening

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Aug. 13 (AP).—Four Negro children headed back to school with their white classmates today, with police standing by to crush any further mass protests from segregationists.

Police used clubs and fire hoses to break up a parade of some 200 men, women and children near Central High when integrated classes opened today.

The paraders, coming from two schools yesterday, but peace apparently was in sight a rally at the State Capitol where Gov. Orval Faubus addressed them, shouted "Cowards!" at the policemen and 21 of them were arrested. Three teen-agers were arrested at the rally.

In the schools officials said everything was normal.

No Plans for Rallies

One segregationist said he knew of no plans for any rallies today. He is the Rev. Wesley Pruden, past president of the Captial Citizens Council, which spearheads segregation forces here.

Other segregation leaders could not be contacted.

Gov. Faubus, who advised the rally yesterday to avoid violence, remained at his mansion. He said he would keep in touch with his "people" for developments.

Two Negroes went to Central yesterday, but only one will go back today, said Mrs. L. C. Bates, Arkansas president of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Consulted Counselor

She said Elizabeth Eckford went the first day of school only to consult with her counselor. Elizabeth, one of nine Negroes enrolled at Central in 1957, has been taking correspondence courses and may have gained enough credits to enter college.

That leaves Jefferson Thomas, 16, another who attended Central in 1957, is the only Negro now at Central. He is a senior.

Young Thomas said the students at Central "didn't do anything or say anything." He said he believed their attitude is changing.

"They seem to understand that integration is not so bad and even if they don't approve it, violence is not the way to solve it," he said.

At Hall High School, situated in the fashionable Pulaski Heights area, three Negro girls planned to return to classes today. They are Effie Jones, 17, and Estelle Thompson and Elsie Robinson, both 16.

"Everything was okay," Elsie said of first day classes.

Moved In With Clubs

The violence at Central broke out after the crowd marched from the capitol rally to within a block of Central. Police Chief Gene Smith shouted for them to disperse.

When they didn't the police moved in on them with clubs. Several men were struck over the head. A fire truck stood by and Chief Smith ordered a hose turned on the crowd. The crowd broke and reformed later, but this time it only jeered and held back.

The three teen-age boys arrested at the rally were picked up after Chief Smith said he found nine tear gas bombs in their car. Since they were on State property, they were turned over to State police.

Evening Star

Lt. Paul McDonald of the State police said no charges had been filed and the youths were turned over to their parents. He said an investigation is continuing.

Released on Bail

The 21 arrested near Central were released on bail after being charged with offenses including loitering, disturbing the peace, resisting arrest and assaulting an officer. All were ordered to appear in Municipal Court next Wednesday.

The school board said six identity cards—issued to students and faculty members so they can pass police lines—were taken up from pupils. But Everett Tucker, jr., school board president, said the disciplinary measures had nothing to do with desegregation.

Gov. Faubus, in his brief speech to the Capitol rally, called it "a dark day," but said nothing could be gained by being "beaten on the head." He urged the massed throng—many waving United States, Arkansas and Confederate flags—to continue the struggle against integration in the political arena.

In a television speech the night before, Gov. Faubus had denounced the school board and officials and said the people should elect officials "who will not betray you."

60 Applied to Attend

The four Negroes enrolled at Central and Hall were among 60 who applied to attend. The others were referred to all-Negro Horace Mann High by the school board, which used a State pupil-placement law.

The NAACP attacked this law in Federal Court, and seeks an order to make the board assign students solely on the basis of attendance areas.

Integration first began at Central in September, 1957. Gov. Faubus sent National Guardsmen to the school to keep Negroes out that year, but the guard was Federalized and removed. Then crowds formed at the school and paratroopers were sent in to restore order.

Gov. Faubus closed the schools last fall to stop integration. But the law he used to do so has been declared unconstitutional by a Federal court.

At Central—Four Florida Youths Held For Having 'Fake Gun'

By KENNETH JOHNSON

From The Commercial Appeal Little Rock Bureau

LITTLE ROCK, Aug. 13.—The Little Rock school scene Thursday calmed down to only scattered incidents as Negro students and whites attended classes in two high schools for the second day.

The school board, at end of the day, said conditions were peaceful and that enrollment had increased by 117 over Wednesday's opening.

Only a handful of spectators turned up at Central High, which was the scene Wednesday of an angry clash betwen about 200 segregationist demonstrators and policemen who blocked their path.

Negroes Dwindle

The number of Negro students entering Central and Hall had dwindled from five to four. Elizabeth Eckford, who had entered Central Wednesday, didn't appear Thursday, leaving Jefferson Thomas the only Negro student in Central High.

Three Negro girls again showed up for classes at Hall High. They are Ethel Jones, Elsie Robinson and Estella Thompson.

Police, at the end of Central High classes Thursday afternoon, arrested four youths driving a Florida licensed car. Police said they hadn't been booked, but had been questioned about a "fake" gun found in their car.

Prior to Central's opening at 1 p.m., three North Little Rock youths were arrested for the second day in a row. Police Wednesday had arrested them for hurling a bottle at a Negro near Central High. Police indicated the latest charge probably would be carrying weapons.

The three, released on bond, were listed as Jim Fugatt, Edward Faulkner and William D. Bruce.

Mrs. Daisy Bates, official of the NAACP in Arkansas, Thursday sent a telegram to President Eisenhower asking protection. She charged that "State Police have begun to arrest and harrass the upstanding citizens who have provided us with volunteer protection."

Thomas' Father Arrested

This followed the disclosure of Arkansas State Police that they had arrested the father of Jefferson Thomas early Thursday.

Lt. Paul McDonald, head of the criminal investigation division of State Police, said Ellis Thomas, as well as Isaac Mullen and Negro dentist G. P. Freeman, were arrested. Mullen was identified as a guard at the home of L. C. Bates, Negro publisher and husband of Mrs. Bates.

Lieutenant McDonald said a State Police patrol car had spotted a taxi whose driver appeared to be drunk and started following it, and that Thomas later started trailing the police car. State Police then questioned Thomas, found a gun in his possession, and later also arrested Mullen and Freeman when they drove up and started asking questions.

Mullen was released, and both Freeman and Thomas charged with carrying concealed weapons.

Little Rock Stands In A Storm

GOV. ORVAL FAUBUS told the mob which gathered on the Capitol lawn at Little Rock Wednesday to "act so posterity will be justly proud."

These were good and brave words, but in Little Rock for the last two years words have meant different things. The crowd interpreted Governor Faubus exactly as he intended. Accordingly it marched away, flags flying in a display of perverted patriotism, to demonstrate against the opening of integrated high schools.

The mob did not act so that posterity will be justly proud. Instead it did the community of Little Rock and the nation a sad disservice.

But both Little Rock, through its law-abiding citizens, and the nation, can applaud the decisive action of the police under Chief Gene Smith.

Smith and his men blocked the path of the demonstrators and ordered them firmly to disperse. When some defied law and order, the police cracked a few heads, arrested 24 persons — including women and children — and routed the disorderly crowd with streams of water from fire hose.

THE DETERMINATION of the police kept the crowds away from the schools, which went peacefully about the business of starting a new term. It was a happy event in Little Rock, where some schools have been closed for a year.

"The situation (in the schools) . . . was entirely normal and I say that without qualification of any kind," said the president of the school board.

Little Rock demonstrated that mobs cannot operate in the face of police firmness. Had the police acted two years ago as they did Wednesday, federal troops need never have been called on to preserve order, and a disgraceful chapter in our history need never have been written.

The situation Wednesday also demonstrated that the vast majority of the people of Little Rock want public schools where their children can be educated in dignity. That is more important than the screaming demonstrators, the cracked heads and the desecrated flags.

Little Rock Calm -- But Police Are Prepared

L.R. Showdown Is Seen Today

Negroes Again Enter Hall High Peacefully

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — (UPI) — Little Rock was quiet Tuesday on the eve of "voluntary" integration of two high schools, but 150 police were prepared to squelch instantly any attempts at violence.

At least four and perhaps more Negroes will integrate Hall High School and Central High School today.

Central was the scene of bloody fighting in September 1957, and President Eisenhower ordered 1,000 troops of the 101st Airborne Division to Little Rock to protect nine Negroes.

None of Little Rock's four high schools opened last year because of special laws passed by the Legislature for Gov. Orval E. Faubus. Federal courts have since declared the laws unconstitutional.

Integration today will be under a plan put into action by the Little Rock School Board, purged of rockbound segregationists in a recall election.

Police Chief Gene Smith ordered all patrolmen on his force — a total of 150 men — out on integration duty today.

The Committee for the Peaceful Operation of Our Public Schools instructed 18 lawyers on its staff to take any person who interferes with the integration of Little Rock's high schools to "the appropriate court."

The lawyers can proceed, under Federal Court mandates, against any person, from Faubus on down, who tries to stir up trouble.

The Rev. Wesley Pruden, former president of the segregationist Capital Citizens Council, said a "freedom fund" will be used to fight the expulsion of any white students from integrated schools. He meant students who protest integration.

"The freedom fund was not organized to encourage violence, but to give legal assistance to worthy persons in need of assistance," Pruden said.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (UPI) — Three Negro girls returned to Hall High School today for their second day of integrated classes, almost ignored by 700 white students.

There were no surface indications of new violence today at Central High School, where firemen and police broke up an unruly crowd Wednesday with high-pressure fire hoses and nightsticks. Police arrested 24 persons.

One Negro was scheduled to attend Central when it opened early in the afternoon.

Daisy Bates, president of the Arkansas chapter of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, said that if the integration attempt can get through today, "We've got it licked."

There was no trouble Wednesday at Hall, although a heavy police guard was prepared for it. Police still guarded a four-block perimeter about Hall today, but there was a noticeable air of relaxation.

The three Negroes — Effie Jones, Elsie Robinson and Estella Thompson — got out of an automobile four minutes before school opened at 9:30 a. m. They walked slowly up the driveway to the entrance. A white girl and white boy walked behind them but paid no attention to them.

Two Negroes attended Central High Wednesday but one of them, Elizabeth Eckford, did not plan to return today. An NAACP spokesman said she completed school through correspondence, and went there only to consult her counsellor.

Hall High operates today from 10:30 a.m. to 1 p.m. (EST); Central, from 2 p.m. to 4:30 p.m. They won't go on a full day's schedule until next week.

There were these other developments:

—The Little Rock Committee for Peaceful Operation fo Free Public Schools charged that many of the demonstrators who clashed with police Wednesday "were not citizens of this school district."

—A source close to Gov. Orval E. Faubus said he still could close the schools, as he did in 1958 to preserve segregation, through use of his executive powers since the school board is no longer using a federal court-approved integration plan.

LEADERS FURIOUS

—Segregationist leaders, who said they were furious about use of police billies and fire hoses Wednesday to break up a protest demonstration, met secretly Wednesday night, perhaps to decide on their moves today.

Firemen turned high pressure hoses on demonstrators at Central High Wednesday. Police whacked three men with their clubs and arrested a total of 24—including four women and girls—and put them in jail.

All 24 got out on bond of $15.50 each and were ordered to appear Aug. 19 for trial on charges ranging from assaulting an officer to loitering.

Segregationist leader Amos Guthridge, lawyer for the Capital Citizens Council, said he was "too angered even to make a statement" on police action in breaking up the demonstration. He said other segregationist leaders were as angry as he.

There were numerous reports of plans for new demonstrations today but none could be confirmed.

The Committee of Peaceful Operation of Free Public Schools, which made the charge of outside interference, is a group that sprang up in recent months to get Little Rock's high schools open. The committee said many of the estimated 500 persons involved in the demonstration came from well outside the school district.

Newsmen counted many cars bearing license plates from Tennessee, Louisiana and Mississippi.

The crowd that formed near Central, battleground of the 1957 integration wars, had marched from the state capitol where Gov. Faubus told them that there was no need for them to get "beaten on the head." He said local police soon would tire of their "burdensome illegal duties."

Gov. Orval Faubus
... the big test today

All Quiet On Little Rock's School Front

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — Four Negroes stolled calmly to and from classes at two high schools Friday as Little Rock ended its third day of integration.

Police kept an eye on the situation, but no protests were heard, no taunts or insults directed at the Negroes.

Gov. Orval E. Faubus indicated Friday, for the first time, that he might use state police and troops if there are further integration disorders. Previously, the governor said emphatically he would never use his powers to enforce integration.

No Resentment.

At Hall High School, in a fashionable residential area, three Negro girls entered and left without a sign of resentment. Effie Jones, Estella Thompson and Elsie Robinson were hardly noticed.

The situation was the same at Central, where 16-year-old Jefferson Thomas is the only Negro student.

Faubus told a news conference he had been prepared to send state police and Arkansas National Guardsmen into action Wednesday if local authorities had been unable to quell a segregationist demonstration.

About 200 foes of racial mixing advanced on Central behind flags that day but police broke up the march. Officers used billy clubs on the paraders and turned fire hoses on them. More than a score of arrests were made.

Faubus did not say what kind of future trouble might spur him into ordering out soldiers and state troopers.

He blocked integration of nine Negroes at Central in September, 1957, with Guardsmen. Later, the Negroes attended under the protection of federal troops.

Swipe At Police.

Faubus took a swipe at Police Chief Gene Smith, who led the officers who stopped the segregationist march on Central.

After saying he could not do what Smith had done, Faubus added: "I couldn't go out and beat people on the head because of their beliefs."

Little Rock's Schools Calm

First Full Week Of Term Opens Without Incident Despite Integration

By KENNETH JOHNSON

From The Commercial Appeal Little Rock Bureau

LITTLE ROCK, Aug. 17. — High school classes started their first full week's schedule without incident Monday following Wednesday's reopening of the four schools, two of them in-

Times 8-18-59

Four Negroes—a boy at Central and three girls at Hall—were in attendance as police again guarded against disorders. The school area police force had been reduced sharply from Wednesday's opening, but there appeared to be more suad cars.

Attendance Increases

Supt. Terrell O. Powell said Monday's attendance was up 113 over Friday's. Monday's attendance was 2,596 compared with a registration of 3,100 in all four high schools. Attendance has increased every day.

If there was to be any wholesale request for application of a 1958 "separation-by-classroom" law, it hadn't materialized.

John A. McLeod, an attorney, last week disclosed he had asked the school board not to assign his Hall High daughter to classes attended by Negroes. Monday, Supt. Powell said he had received only one other request since then to apply the law—also at Hall. There had been no such requests at Central.

Act 7 of 1958, which the board has said it will follow and which Negro spokesmen have threatened to attack with new legal action, says a child cannot be compelled to attend classes with a child of another race.

Police Action Protested

Resentment against police dispersal of demonstrators Wednesday at Central continued to be voiced in segregationist circles.

Mrs. Dale Alford, wife of Representative Dale Alford (D., Ark.), asked Mayor Werner Knoop and members of the City Manager Board to investigate what she called "brutal force" used by police.

Mrs. Margaret Jackson, head of the Mothers League of Central High, made a similar request over the week end.

tegration of the all-white Dollarway School were reported in circulation.

Three Negro children sued in federal court for admission to Dollarway School on the outskirts of Pine Bluff. On Aug. 4, U.S. District Judge Axel J. Beck of Elk Point, S.D., ordered the Dollarway School Board to admit the Negroes when the fall term begins Sept. 8.

Judge Beck, on temporary assignment in Arkansas, ruled the board had misapplied the state pupil placement laws in a "cover-up to conceal its segregationist attitude."

Under the placement laws — used by the Little Rock School Board to control desegregation—students may be assigned to schools for numerous reasons but not race.

Stay Denied

The Dollarway board asked Judge Beck for a stay of his integration order but today he denied the motion.

The petitions being circulated in the Dollarway district ask Faubus for "relief from illegal federal court orders" and urge him to use all forces at his command to permit local control of school affairs. A spokesman for the distributors said the petitions would go to the governor later this week.

Faubus was vacationing in norrh west Arkansas and could not be reached for comment.

Schools Closed

Faubus was vacationing in north public high schools last year to avoid integration but a federal court recently declared unconstitutional the state law he used.

A new, moderate school board assigned six Negroes to once-white high schools for the 1959-60 term —three to Central and three to Hall.

The three Negro girls assigned to Hall have gone to school without trouble since opening day. So has Jefferson Thomas, the only Negro boy assigned to Central. A Negro girl placed at Central found she had enough credits to graduate and another girl still is going to summer school in Chicago.

New School Race Mixing Storm Rises

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Aug. 17 (AP)—School integration proceeded uneventfully in Little Rock today but a storm over racially mixed classes gathered at nearby Pine Bluff.

Despite unrest claim— All reported quiet in L. R. schools

News Miami, Fla. Times 8-18-59 P. 19

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Aug. 18—(AP)— Despite a segregationist's claim of unrest among students, a Negro youth went to integrated Central High School today without encountering trouble.

Three Negro girls sauntered peacefully into Hall High, the other integrated school.

School officials denied that 16-year-old Jefferson Thomas, the only Negro at Central, had been in fights with white students. The boy, a senior, also denied it.

A segregationist minister made the claim.

THOMAS SAID he was jeered and hooted at by a small group of white pupils as he left school yesterday. It was the first such incident reported at 1200-pupil Central since public high schools opened Wednesday.

A few minutes after Thomas entered Central, a car with a Kentucky license tag passed the school and the driver shouted:

"Are the jigaboos going to school there?"

Someone among the few spectators, mostly tourists and newsmen, replied "Yes" and he drove off.

The Negro girls at Hall have had no trouble.

Ted L. Lamb, school board secretary, said Supt. of Schools Terrell E. Powell had assured him no disciplinary problems had arisen in the schools, in connection with fighting or other incidents.

THE DOLLARWAY School Board at Pine Bluff announced it is appealing to the Eighth U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals at St. Louis its request for a stay of the desegregation order. Federal Judge Axel J. Beck, who also issued the directive, denied the stay yesterday.

PETITIONS WERE circulated in the Dollarway District calling on Gov. Orval E. Faubus to "use all the forces at your command" to halt entrance of three Negro students to the all-white Dollarway High School as Beck ordered. The petitions were to be presented to Faubus later this week.

Dollarway is set to open Sept. 8.

Lee Parham, Dollarway School Board president, said the board had "absolutely nothing" to do with the petitions. He said the board would begin today to prepare for assigning students to Dollarway under a pupil-placement law. This law, designed to minimize integration, also was used by the Little Rock School Board.

But Judge Beck told Dollarway, in his ruling, that it had misapplied the law in a "cover-up to conceal its segregationist attitude."

IN CONTRAST to the jeering incident at Central, three Negro girls at Little Rock's Hall High have had no trouble.

The Rev. Wesley Pruden charged in a telegram to Mayor Werner Knoop and the city board of directors last night that unrest permeated Central, and that fights had occurred between Thomas and white pupils.

Mayor Knoop said he had passed Pruden's message on to the board of directors, but added that he believed the minister—past president of the segregationist Capital Citizens Council—had erred in not directing the note to school officials. Pruden also asked permission for a committee of white parents to inspect Central.

KNOOP ALSO PASSED on to the board a plea from Mrs. Dale Alford, wife of an Arkansas congressman, that the board investigate a police rout of segregationists who marched on Central last Wednesday. She charged the police acted brutally.

Faubus used National Guardsmen to keep nine Negroes out of Central in 1957 before the guard was federalized and paratroopers sent in to enforce integration. Then he closed the high schools last year, but the law he used to do so has been truck down by a federal court.

Mrs. L. C. Bates, state president of the NAACP, received a reply yesterday to her telegram to President Eisenhower asking for protection. The reply, from Gerald D. Morgan, deputy presidential assistant, said the matter had been turned over to the Department of Justice.

Private school opens for registration

FRONT ROYAL, Va., Aug. 18—(AP)—The Warren County Educational Foundation, which ran a segregated high school for white children last year during an integration crisis, opened a two-day registration for the Fall term today.

Foundation officials have indicated they will go ahead with plans to run the school a second year if as many as 650 to 700 students register.

Whereas tuition last year was free, the foundation has said it would charge $220 this year.

County school officials wound up a three-day registration period at the Warren County High School yesterday. Two hundred ninety-eight white students registered, along with 18 Negroes.

The public high school has an enrollment of 1050 when it was closed last September to avoid court-ordered integration.

Houston system pleads for time

HOUSTON, Aug. 18—(AP)—Houston school trustees told a federal judge yesterday immediate desegregation of the South's largest segregated school system could not be made "without irreparable injury to all the school district."

The board pleaded for more time to comply with Judge Ben Connally's 1957 order to "desegregate with all possible speed."

It said it has two integration plans under study. Neither, it said, could be adopted without holding a referendum election or the district would stand to lose $5 million annually in state aid.

The report also cited classroom shortages and what it called the academic lag of Negro students behind whites.

The board acted in response to an order by Judge Connally two months ago to submit a progress report with respect to its compliance to his 1957 ruling. The five-volume report ran 373 pages.

MRS. L.C.(DAISY) BATES URGES PROTECTION FROM PRESIDENT EISENHOWER

Appeal Made To Eisenhower

NAACP LEADER ASKS PROTECTION

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — An integration leader whose home has been the target of bombs, bullets and bricks has appealed to President Eisenhower for protection.

But integration of two high schools here continued peacefully.

At Gettysburg, Pa., the temporary White House withheld comment on the telegram. Acting Press Secretary Wayne Hawks said it had not been seen by the President. Hawks said the telegram was addressed to the White House in Washington where it was not received until this mornnig.

If the usual procedure is followed, Hawks said, the telegram will be referred to Atty. Gen. William P. Rogers.

WOMEN ARRESTED IN LITTLE ROCK OUTBREAK— A woman demonstrator (center) begs policemen to turn her loose after they arrested her in the outbreak of anti-integration violence at Little Rock, Ark. But her pleas fell on deaf ears. The officers marched her off to jail along with the woman dressed in white at left. The outbreak erupted two blocks from Central High School in which a Negro boy has enrolled. These two women were among the 24 persons arrested in the violence. (AP Wirephoto).

Mrs. L. C. Bates, president of the Arkansas chapter of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, sent Eisenhower a telegram Thursday. She said her pleas for aid from local authorities were futile.

There was no immediate comment from officials at the temporary White House in Gettysburg, Pa.

Four Negroes return to Central High School today to round out the first school week. Their attendance provoked no incidents Thursday and no disturbances were reported inside the police-patrolled schools.

Mrs. Bates has led the integration movement here for the past years. Her plea for protection came after her house guard and two other Negroes were arrested by state police.

Mrs. Bates, at a press conference, related a list of incidents which have occurred at her home in southwest Little Rock—bombs thrown on the lawn, shots fired at the house and bricks hurled through windows.

"In the face of all this," she said, "we have begged for protection by city and county law enforcement authorities — but to no avail. In all the assaults on our home there never has been a single arrest of any offender or suspect."

One of the Negroes arrested was Ellis Thomas, 48, father of Jefferson Thomas, a 16-year-old senior and the lone Negro at Central.

Only a few persons stood around outside Central when Thomas attended Thursday. Four white youths were arrested for carrying weapons in the vicinity and disobeying police orders to move. Four others were questioned but released later.

At Hall, located on a pine-tree-studded hillside in the upper-income Pulaswi Heights district, three Negro girls went to classes in a peaceful atmosphere. The girls are Effie Jones, 17, and Elsie Robinson and Estella Thompson, both 16. They report no trouble. A white student said they sat by themselves, away from other pipils, when possible.

More Telegrams To D.C. Urged; Chief Smith Is Censured

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (SNS)—A telegram from Mrs. Daisy Bates, Arkansas NAACP president, to President Eisenhower asking for "protection" after the arrest of guards at her home Saturday had received an announcement from the White House, according to press information.

The announcement said that the matter had been turned over to the Attorney General and the Justice Department.

Meanwhile, Mrs. Bates urged all Negroes to send telegrams to President Eisenhower to insure "basic protection and freedom from fear of violence."

State police had arrested Isaac Mullen, 42, a special deputy sheriff who guarded Mrs. Bates' home; Dr. Garman P. Freeman, 35, a dentist, and Ellis Thomas Sr., 46, father of one of the four students attending integrated high school classes.

MOTHERS BLAME CHIEF

While the city of Little Rock remained quiet as the first 1959 week end of school integration began, the Central High School Mother's League accused Police Chief Gene Smith of using "Police brutality" in breaking up an anti-integration demonstration.

Segregationists are angry because Smith and his policemen used billy clubs and fire hoses to break up the demonstration when Central High School was integrated Wednesday.

Mrs. Margaret Jackson, president of the league, sent a telegram to Mayor Werner Knoop asking that Smith and the city's board of directors appear at a public meeting to answer charges of brutality.

She asked that the meeting be called immediately.

"We want to ask who gave Gene Smith the right to use such brutal force against such unarmed people who were peaceably assembled in protest of the integration of Central High," Mrs. Jackson said.

"He went too far in clubbing two men over the head without any provacation."

MONDAY NIGHT MEETING

Mayor Knoop said he would have to take the request up with the city directors. He said there was a meeting Monday night, and it might be brought up then.

Smith said he had "no comment" on the charges.

There has been no disorder since police broke up the demonstration shortly before Central opened its doors for the first time since 1957. Governor Orval Faubus closed the high schools last year. But both sides of the integration controversy warned that there was more trobule to come.

Before Faubus left for a weekend fishing trip, he told newsmen that people will not come to Little Rock for "a long, long time." He said police handled the demonstration like the Russians handled the Hungarian revolt.

Minnijean Finds Happiness Here

Little Rock Negro Learns to Forget She's Colored

By SHEILA GALLAGHER,
World-Telegram Staff Writer.

Minnijean Brown, the 17-year-old Negro girl who last year was expelled from Central High School in Little Rock, Ark., smiled broadly today and said, "I guess I'm happier now than I've ever been before in my life."

A scholarship student for the past year at the New Lincoln School, 31 W. 110th St., a private interracial school, she will be graduated June 6.

"The kids at this school are the most wonderful I've ever met in my life," she said. "There's no trouble here at New Lincoln and no prejudice. After a while I stopped thinking I'm a Negro and that girl is white and the one over there is Jewish. I'm telling the truth when I say this is the first time I've ever been completely accepted for what I am. And what a feeling it is!"

'Average Work.'

Minnijean has been doing what she calls "average work" at New Lincoln. "But," she added, "I've had to keep my nose to the grindstone.

"The education I'm getting here is so superior to what I got in Little Rock. Some things I'm just beginning to learn now most of the kids here knew way back in junior high school."

"It's true," said Dr. John J. Brooks, director of the New Lincoln School, "that Minnijean has had to work hard. But she's done beautifully and lived up to all our expectations.

"By the time she is graduated," Dr. Brooks added, "she will have been with us almost a year and a half. During this period she has grown a great deal and has made an excellent social adjustment to both the school and city."

Will Take Up Nursing.

Hoping to be able to spend some part of her life helping others, she has decided to take up nursing — preferably in New York City. Under no circumstances she added matter-of-factly will she resume her education in her home state. "My memories there are too bitter."

She was expelled from Little Rock's Central High School because of what school officials called her repeated involvement in racial incidents. Minnijean said she did no more than to answer back after intolerable provocation.

"I took abuse from them," she recalled. "I was kicked twice. I was called all kinds of unmentionable names but I always walked away and laughed at it. But finally I couldn't. I just got mad one day and called one girl who continually harassed me 'white trash.' That did it. The next thing I knew I was kicked out of the school."

'What a Difference.'

"What a difference it was," she recalled, "my first day of school at Little Rock and my first day at New Lincoln. At Little Rock the school was surrounded by troops and police and there was a mob of 1000 people outside all shouting at us 'Go home, You're not wanted here.'"

When she arrived at New Lincoln she was met by about 50 of her classmates. They knew she had been through a lot so they didn't ask her questions right away. "Now every once in a while," Minnijean said, "we get into discussions about the whole racial question—but they are peaceful talks."

Eisenhower Called

Little Rock NAACP Asks 'Protection'

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP)—An official of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People called on President Eisenhower Thursday night for protection at the end of Little Rock's second day of high school integration.

Mrs. L. C. (Daisy) Bates, state president of the NAACP, made the appeal. Her personal bodyguard and two other Negroes had been arrested by state police for having firearms.

One of the Negroes was Ellis Thomas, the 48-year-old father of the Negro boy who integrated Central High School.

The boy, Jefferson Thomas, walked in and out of the school Thursday unharmed, but eight white boys were arrested in incidents near the campus.

WHITES ARRESTED

Four white boys were arrested just as he walked out of the school at the end of classes. Police found what they thought was a pistol in the car, but it turned out to be a toy.

Before the Thomas boy reported to the school shortly before 1 p.m., four other white boys were picked up. Three were taken into custody when they drove up in a car bedecked with Confederate flags.

Across town from Central, three Negro girls entered and left Hall High School in fashionable Pulaski Heights for the second day without trouble.

CHARGES POLICE

Mrs. Bates charged police and federal authorities in Little Rock had declined to give her "minimum physical protection." Her house was fired on from a speeding car the night before two of Little Rock's four public high schools were opened to limited integration.

Mrs. Bates' bodyguard—43-year-old Isaac Mullens—was released without charge but Thomas and Dr. Garland P. Freeman, the third Negro, were charged with carrying concealed weapons. They were released on bond.

The state NAACP head charged Gov. Orval E. Faubus and the state police with trying to coerce her organization. She said she thought Eisenhower should be aware of the "Communist-type police tactics involved."

In her telegram to the President, Mrs. Bates told of incidents of bomb blasts at her home, shots fired and rocks and bricks thrown through her windows.

LONE NEGRO

Thomas went to Central alone. A score of white students were sitting on the steps of the 1,400-pupil school when he arrived. They did not even look at him as he went in.

He was accompanied to class Wednesday by Elizabeth Eckford, 17, another of the three Negroes assigned to Central by the Little Rock School board. She is not expected to return because she has earned enough credits through correspondence courses to enter college. The third Negro assigned to Central, Carlotta Walls, is in summer school at Chicago.

Police found a brass-weighted rubber hose, a tire tool and a wrench in the flag-decorated auto carrying the three white youths.

At Hall, the only sign of protest occurred when two white girls drove by in a convertible plastered with anti-integration banners. Police ignored it.

The three Negro girls, Effie Jones, 17, and Elsie Robinson and Estella Thompson, both 16, did not report any trouble inside Hall. A white student said they sat by themselves, away from other pupils, when they could.

Gov. Orval E. Faubus, who cautioned segregationists against violence shortly before the demonstration near Central Wednesday secluded himself.

Segregationist leaders had little to say. Margaret Jackson, president of the Mothers League of Central High, told newsman: "What is there left for the vanquished to say? Except that in a police state, the billy clubs and the guns are mightier than the spoken word."

The Rev. Wesley Pruden, a Baptist minister and vociferous segregationist, said a fund he heads would defend 24 persons arrested in Wednesday's violence. Most were charged with loitering and disturbing the peace.

LEGAL ACTION

Amis Guthridge, attorney for the segregationist Capital Citizens Council, said it was considering legal action over the street fight near Central. He said it might involve trying to prosecute the police.

Mrs. Bates angrily criticized the arrest of the three Negroes. She said the police were supposed to be giving "us protection, not arresting us."

She had reported the men to the missing persons bureau. She charged they were held incommunicado overnight, but one man was allowed to call his family Thursday morning.

Mullen is an honorary deputy sheriff and Mrs. Bates said he was entitled to carry a pistol. Police said he would not be charged with carrying concealed weapons, like the other two, but his commission would be picked up.

White Attorney Invokes Law

John A. McLeod Jr., a white attorney, announced he has invoked the law to keep his 15-year-old daughter, Ann Lane, from studying in the same classes with Negroes. The girl attends Hall High School, where three Negro girls are assigned.

The law simply provides that no student will be forced to attend classes with members of another race.

"It's no different from a ruling by the United States Supreme Court in the case of McLaurin vs. the Oklahoma Board of Regents," Branton said. "The court ruled that a Negro once admitted to an integrated school could not be segregated within the school."

School officials said they would follow the law as long as it was not ruled unconstitutional. If a white student asks not to be put into class with a Negro student, the request will be granted.

Branton said McLaurin was admitted to the University of Oklahoma to study for a doctorate, but was required to sit in a segregated section of a cafeteria and the library, and in one instance in an alcove off of a classroom.

Unconstitutionality Claimed

"The Supreme Court ruled it it is the individual's right not to stand in line with a Negro or study next to him if he so wants, but for the state to impose a restriction is unconstitutional," Branton said.

Integration at Central and Hall High School opens Monday for the second week. Negro students are attending classes with white students, and using the same facilities in the school. They report they are "merely being ignored."

There has been no incident since Little Rock police broke up a demonstration Wednesday at Central with fire hoses and billy clubs.

NAACP Warns Of New Battle

Will Resist Any Move To Segregate Classes In Little Rock Schools

By United Press International

LITTLE ROCK, Aug. 16. — The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People promised Sunday to fight any attempt to segregate students in integrated schools.

Wiley Branton, Arkansas attorney for the NAACP, said if the Little Rock School Board tries to conduct segregated classes under provisions of a 1958 state law, he would take it into court.

MRS. I.C. (DAISY) BATES URGES PROTECTION FROM PRESIDENT EISENHOWER

Arkansas NAACP Head Asks Ike for Protection

Asserts Local Authorities Won't Supply Guard

Picture in Sec. 1, Page 1

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — The president of the Arkansas chapter of the NAACP Thursday appealed to President Eisenhower for protection.

Mrs. L. C. Bates said in a telegram to the President that local and federal authorities have declined to provide the "minimum physical protection that we have requested."

"Now state police have begun to arrest and harrass the upstanding citizens who have provided us with volunteer protection," the telegram said.

She obviously referred to the arrest Wednesday night of the father of one Negro student attending Central High school, an honorary deputy sheriff who helped guard her home and one other Negro man.

REPORT GUNS IN CAR

State police said guns were found in the car carrying the three men.

The telegram to President Eisenhower said:

"Dear Mr. President: Despite repeated bombings, attacks by gunfire and rocks, and other assaults on our home — attacks provoked b ythe fact that we have stood steadfast for this community's compliance witn the federal law—both local and federal authorities have declined to provide the minimum physical protection that we have requested.

"Now state police have begun to arrest and harrass the upstanding citizens who have provided us with volunteer protection, leaving us defenseless before those who constantly threaten our lives. I appeal to you, President, to provide the basic protection that will give us the freedom from fear to which citizens of our free American society are entitled."

THREE ARRESTED

State police arrested the Negro men near Mrs. Bates' home Wednesday night. The men are Ellis Thomas Sr., 48, father of Jefferson Thomas, a Central student; Isaac Mullen, 43, house guard for Mrs. Bates, and Dr. Garland P. Freeman.

Police said Thomas and Dr. Freeman would be charged with carrying concealed weapons. Mullen will not be charged because he is an honorary sheriff, officers said.

Mrs. Bates issued a statement saying she thought it important that "the American people and the President of the United States himself be made aware of the Communist-type police state tactics involved and of the fact that the governor of this state and his police agents now have embarked on a desperate effort to coerce and intimidate us into submission."

BOYS' PISTOL TOY

Earlier Thursday, four white boys were arrested in front of Central High. Police found a pistol, at first thought to be real, in their car. Later, detective Capt. Albert Haynie said the pistol was a toy and the boys probably would be released.

Three white boys also were seized as they rode a flag-decorated auto past Central. Then another white youth was arrested when he refused police orders to leave the school area.

Second-day integration in the two integrated Little Rock High schols, Central and Hall, was peaceful.

Jefferson Thomas, 16-year-old senior, is the only Negro at Central.

The placid atmosphere Thursday contrasted vividly with the uproar near Central Wednesday, when club-swinging police charged into a parade of howling segregationists and stopped its advance on the school.

Across town from Central, three Negro girls entered and left Hall High School for the second day without trouble.

LONE BOY IGNORED

Thomas went to Central alone.

A score of white students were sitting on the steps of the 1,400-pupil school when he arrived. They did not even look at him as he went in.

He was accompanied to class Wednesday by Elizabeth Eckford, 17, another of the three Negroes assigned to Central by the Little Rock School board. She is not expected to return because she has earned enough credits through correspondence courses to enter college. The third Negro assigned to Central, Carlotta Walls, is in summer school at Chicago.

Police found a brass-weighted rubber hose, a tire tool and a wrench in the flag-decorated auto carrying the three white youths.

BANNER-DRAPED CAR

At Hall, the only sign of protest occurred when two white girls drove by in a convertible plastered with anti-integration banners. Police ignored it.

The three Negro girls, Effie Jones, 17, and Elsie Robinson and Estella Thompson, both 16, did not report any trouble inside Hall. A white student said they sat by themselves, away from other pupils, when they could.

Gov. Orval E. Faubus, who cautioned segregationists against violence shortly before the demonstation near Central Wednesday secluded himself.

Segregationist leaders had little to say. Margaret Jackson, president of the Mothers League of Central High, told newsman: "What is there left for the vanquished to say? Except that in a police state, the billy clubs and the guns are mightier than the spoken word."

DEFENSE FUND AID

The Rev. Wesley Pruden, a Baptist minister and vociferous segregationist, said a fund he heads would defend 24 persons arrested in Wednesday's violence. Most were charged with loitering and disturbing the peace.

Amis Guthridge, attorney for the segregationist Capital Citizens Council, said it was considering legal action over the street fight near Central. He said it might involve trying to prosecute the police.

A state police car was following a taxi from Mrs. Bates' house Wednesday night when the three men in an automobile tailed the police. The patrolman said the Negroes forced their car to a curb and Mullen got out, approached and said: "Who is y'all?"

The arrests followed the discovery of arms in the Negroes' car.

FAUBUS APPEALS

Attorneys for Faubus made an expected legal move Thursday. they filed notice in U.S. District Court that the governor would appeal to the U.S. Supreme Court from a recent three-judge decision declaring a state school-closing law unconstitutional.

Faubus used the law to close Little Rock's four public high schools against court-ordered integration in the 1958-59 term. The three-judge federal court knocked it out along with a law which permitted state school money to follow an integration-displaced pupil.

Arkansas NAACP Head Asks Ike for Protection

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Aug. 13 (AP)—The President of the Arkansas chapter of the NAACP today appealed to President Eisenhower for protection.

Daisy Bates said in a telegram to the President that local and federal authorities have declined to provide the "minimum physical protection that we have requested."

"Now state police have begun to arrest and harrass the upstanding citizens who have provided us with volunteer protection," the telegram said.

She obviously referred to the arrest last night of the father of one Negro student attending Central High School, an honorary deputy sheriff who helped guard her home, and one other Negro man.

State police said guns were

Guns in Car

found in the car carrying the three men.

The telegram to President Eisenhower said:

"Dear Mr. President: Despite repeated bombings, attacks by gunfire and rocks, and other assaults on our home — attacks provoked by the fact that we have stood steadfast for this community's compliance with the federal law — both local and federal authorities have declined to provide the minimum physical protection that we have requested.

"Now state police have begun to arrest and harrass the upstanding citizens who have provided us with volunteer protection, leaving us defenseless before those who constantly threaten our lives. I appeal to you, Mr. President, to provide the basic protection that will give us the freedom from fear to which citizens of our free American society are entitled."

Near Bates Home

State police arrested the Negro men near the Bates home last night. The men are Ellis Thomas Sr., 43, father of Jefferson Thomas, a Central student; Isaac Mullen, 43, house guard for Ruby Bates, and Dr. Garland P. Freeman.

Police said Thomas and Dr. Freeman would be charged with carrying concealed weapons. Mullen will not be charged because he was an honorary sheriff, officers said.

Earlier today, four white boys were arrested in front of Central High. Police found a pistol, at first thought to be real, in their car. Later, Detective Capt. Albert Haynie said the pistol was a toy and the boys probably would be released.

A trio of white boys also was siezed as they rode a flag-decorated auto past Central. Then another white youth was arrested when he refused police orders to leave the school area.

Second-day integration in the two integrated Little Rock high schools, Central and Hall, was peaceful.

Vivid Contrast

The placid atmosphere today contrasted vividly with the uproar near Central yesterday, when club-swinging police charged into a parade of segregationists and stopped its advance on the school.

Across town from Central, three Negro girls entered and left Hall High School for the second day without trouble.

Thomas went to Central alone. A score of white students were sitting on the steps of the 1,400-pupil school when he arrived. They did not even look at him as he went in.

He was accompanied to class yesterday by Elizabeth Eckford, 17, another of the three Negroes assigned to Central by the Little Rock School Board. She is not expected to return because she has earned enough credits through correspondence courses to enter college. The third Negro assigned to Central, Carlotta Walls, is in summer school at Chicago.

Police found a brass-weighted rubber hose, a tire tool and a wrench in the flag-decorated auto carrying the three white youths.

At Hall, the only sign of protest occurred when two white girls drove by in a convertible plastered with anti-integration banners. Police ignored it.

The three Negro girls, Effie Jones, 17, and Elsie Robinson and Estella Thompson, both 16, did not report any trouble inside Hall. A white student said they sat by themselves, away from other pupils, when they could.

Gov. Orval E. Faubus, who cautioned segregationists against violence shortly before the demonstration near Central yesterday, secluded himself.

Segregationist leaders had little to say. Mrs. Margaret Jackson, president of the Mothers League of Central High, told newsmen:

"What is there left for the vanquished to say? Except that in a police state, the billy clubs and the guns are mightier than the spoken word."

GOV.FAUBUS FLAYS POLICE FOR HALTING RIOTS

POLICE ABUSE CHARGED

Faubus Flays Police For Halting Riots

LITTLE ROCK — (UPI) — Gov. Orval E. Faubus accused Little Rock police Friday of breaking up an anti-integration demonstration at Central High School Wednesday the same way the Russians suppressed the Hungarian revolt.

Nevertheless, Faubus said at a news conference if the Little Rock police had failed to handle the demonstration, he would have ordered the state police and National Guard to take over.

Four Negroes attended integrated classes at Central and Hall High Schools Friday in complete peace. It was the third day of "voluntary" integration in two of Little Rock's four high schools.

Police and firemen broke up the demonstration that Faubus was talking about with nightsticks and high pressure hoses and arrested 24 demonstrators. There hasn't been any trouble since.

FAUBUS GOING FISHING

Faubus said the director of state police told him it looks "relatively quiet" and he is leaving Little Rock for three or four days to go fishing.

He said he will order the state police and National Guard to take over in the future if local police can't handle segregationist demonstrators.

Faubus denounced as a "grandstand play" a plea of Mrs. L. C. Bates to President Eisenhower for protection. Mrs. Bates is the Arkansas President of the National Association for Advancement of the Colored People and leads the integration drive in Little Rock.

Mrs. Bates' telegram to Eisenhower reached the White House Friday, but there was no comment on it.

She telegraphed the President late Thursday after state police arrested for carrying concealed weapons three Negroes who, she said, were "volunteer guards" of her home.

DOESN'T FAVOR DEMONSTRATIONS

They were Dr. Garman P. Freeman, a dentist; Isaac Mullen, 42, who had a deputy sheriff's commission to guard her home, and Ellis Thomas Sr., 45, father of Jefferson Thomas, the Negro student attending Central.

"There certainly was no harrassment on the part of state police and under the laws of this state anyone carrying weapons illegally will be prosecuted," Faubus said.

As to the situation at the integrated schools, Faubus said:

"Of course, it's quiet now. It's quiet in Hungary. The burdens of police Chief Gene Smith have just begun. So have the burdens of those who give Gene Smith his orders.

But he said he does not think more demonstrations will do any good.

Little Rock Police Abuse Is Charged

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Aug. 15 (UPI)—The Central High School Mother's League today accused Police Chief Gene Smith of using "police brutality" in breaking up an anti-integration demonstration.

Segregationists are angry because Smith and his policemen used billy clubs and fire hoses to break up the demonstration when Central High School opened integrated Wednesday.

Mrs. Margaret Jackson, president of the league, sent a telegram to Mayor Werner Knoop asking that Smith and the city's board of directors appear at a public meeting to answer charges of brutality.

She asked that the meeting be called immediately.

"We want to ask who gave Gene Smith the right to use such brutal force against such unarmed people who were peaceably assembled in protest of the integration of Central High," Mrs. Jackson said.

"He went too far in clubbing two men over the head without any provocation."

Monday Meeting

Mayor Knoop said he would have to take the request up with the city directors. He said there will be a meeting Monday night, and it might be brought up then.

Smith said he had "no comment" on the charges.

There has been no disorder since police broke up the demonstration shortly before Central opened its doors for the first time since 1957. Gov. Orval Faubus closed the high schools last year.

But both sides of the integration controversy warned that there was more trouble to come.

Before Faubus left for a weekend fishing trip, he told newsmen that peace will not come to Little Rock for "a long, long time." He said police handled the demonstration like the Russians handled the Hungarian revolt.

Urges Telegrams

Daisy Bates, Negro integration leader, urged all Negroes to send telegrams to President Eisenhower to insure "basic protection and freedom from fear of violence."

Smith showed reporters a stack of letters he has received since he broke up the demonstration. The majority of the letters were favorable.

Twenty-four persons were arrested Wednesday, and two of them were clubbed by police. Another was whacked in the ribs with a billy club. Police restrained about 500 persons.

"A policeman is to use only the force that is necessary to subdue a person," Mrs. Jackson said. "If a man is merely standing in a crowd . . . and he is not resisting arrest, then a billy club is very unnecessary."

Mrs. Jackson said the city directors should be at the meeting too, because Smith was at the high school under their orders.

Buyers' strike in Little Rock called failure

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Aug. 15—(AP)—An economic boycott called as an anti-integration action appeared a failure Saturday.

The buyers' strike started Monday, two days before high school integration, which began on a note of brief violence but continued peaceably afterwards.

Amis Guthridge, attorney for the Capital Citizens Council, called the boycott after charging the Main Street merchants with aiding integration. The merchants supported a moderate stand on the school issue.

He said Saturday he still feels it has been "generally effective." But a Chamber of Commerce official and officials of a merchant's group both said the boycott had not even been noticed. The manager of a large department store said there had been no signs of business falling off. Streets were crowded with shoppers.

No rallies planned

GUTHRIDGE SAID he didn't know of any protests or rallies planned by segregationists.

As spokesman for the Citizens Council, Guthridge had planned a press conference in connection with the boycott, but called it off at the last minute Saturday.

"Our board has been drawing up concrete approaches to this thing," he said. "I'm deferring any comment until we get our plans thoroughly worked out."

Four Negroes return Monday to Central and Hall High Schools. All said their attendance so far has provoked no open hostility from white students.

Gov. Orval E. Faubus said Friday Little Rock has not seen the last of its integration trouble. He added that he was ready to use state police and National Guardsmen if "anything bad" broke out.

LITTLE ROCK
NAACP FILES SUIT
(PUPIL PLACEMENT LAW)

NAACP Files Little Rock Suit

Sunday Star
Washington D. C.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Aug. 8 (AP).—Attorneys for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People sought today to knock out Little Rock's screen against integration—the State's pupil-placement law.

8-9-59

The attorneys filed a motion in United States District Court asking that the Little Rock School Board be required to admit all Negro students to public high schools according to "prescribed school zones"—the school district in which they live.

P. 8-A

If granted, this would mean that 60 Negroes would attend formerly white high schools—Central, Hall, and Technical. Forty-eight enrolled at Central, five at Hall and one at Tech.

6 Assigned by Board

The school board, using the placement law, cut to six the number of students assigned to white schools; three to Central and three to Hall. The rest were assigned to Horace Mann High School for Negroes.

Asked if the board would fight the motion, School Board President Everett Tucker, jr., replied:

"I don't guess we have any choice."

Mr. Tucker said any pupil not satisfied with an assignment could request re-assignment and the board "will give full and prompt consideration to all such requests in the manner specified in the regulations."

Federal Judge Alex J. Beck of Elk Point, S. D., ruled here last week that the pupil-placement law was constitutional on its face.

Schools Open Wednesday

The high schools are to open Wednesday—a month ahead of schedule. They were closed all last year by Gov. Orval E. Faubus to stop integration. But Gov. Faubus' school-closing law since has been declared unconstitutional by a Federal court.

The motion filed today carried the names of two Negroes who attended Central in the violence-ridden fall of 1957—Thelma Mothershed and Melba Patillo—and also that of William J. Massie, jr. All three applied for admission to white schools but were sent to Horace Mann.

The motion asked an order restraining the board "from refusing to admit, enroll . . . (all) Negro students who present themselves for admission to such of the Little Rock senior high schools as they may be entitled to enter pursuant to prescribed school zones."

Court Action Date Not Set

No date was set for court action on the motion, filed by Thurgood Marshall of New York and Wiley Branton of Pine Bluff, Ark.

Hours before the motion was received by mail at the Federal courthouse, a segregationist leader voiced a new threat against the impending integration.

Amis Guthridge, attorney for the Capital Citizens Council, vowed that a "buyer's strike" would be called "if one Negro even attempts to attend a white high school."

He directed his ire at Main street merchants, whom he charged "are working as a team to make the parents of Little Rock submit (to integration) regardless of their own or their children's feelings."

The Little Rock Chamber of Commerce, which last winter officially went on record in favor of reopening the high schools, refused to comment on the statement.

LITTLE ROCK- NEGRO STUDENTS

Negroes at Little Rock Find Students Friendly

Interview story Thurs. 8-13-59
Washington, D.C.

By DR. BENJAMIN FINE
North American Newspaper Alliance

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Aug. 13.—The Negro students who went to the white schools yesterday found a friendly atmosphere in the classroom. They were not molested in any way.

P-8-H

An interview with the four girls and one boy who broke the segregation barrier here disclosed that all went smoothly and quietly. Three girls were admitted to the formerly all-white Hall High School. There are Elsie Robinson, 16, a sophomore; Estelle Thompson, 16, a junior, and Effie Jones, a senior.

Jefferson Thomas, 16, a senior, entered Central High School. In a surprise, last-minute development, Elizabeth Eckford, 17, walked into the school with Jefferson. However, Elizabeth went to visit the guidance counselor to find out whether she has enough credits to enter college. If so, she will not enroll at Central.

Normal Day, They Say

"It was a normal day," the students all agreed. "Nothing exciting happened."

"Two white girls were very friendly to me," said Effie Jones. They helped me with my program card and talked to me."

Estelle, whose father is a lumber worker and who wants to be a social worker, found that the white students were pleasant enough. "No one jeered at us or said anything unkind," she said. "We weren't scared a bit."

The three girls arrived at 9:28 a.m., just two minutes before the bell rang. They walked slowly up the winding path and climbed the steps to the ranch-type sprawling school built two years ago. "I'll have to learn my way around," Effie said. She plans to attend college, although she is not sure what she'll do later. "Everything seemed so strange. "I'm sure I'll make many nice friends at school," Elsie, who plans to be either a nurse or a recreational worker, added. "I've never been treated better any place."

Teachers Were Nice

The teachers were "very nice," the Negro students agreed. "I didn't have much to do with them, since it's the first day, but they acted real friendly," all three of the Hall students said happily.

A similar story came from the two Negroes who went to Central High. Elizabeth had gone through the roughest days two years ago. She was hooted at, insulted and made miserable in many ways. But she stuck it out on a matter of "principle."

"It wasn't like that at all today," she said. "Every one was nice to me. The guidance counselor gave some friendly advice and good help. I'm not sure whether I have to continue this term. After I pass my exams in my correspondence courses I may have enough credits to enter college this fall. But I wanted to come today. I didn't want Jeff to go into the school all alone. He needed company."

And as for Jefferson: "I'm not nervous anymore. It wasn't strange any more. I'd been through it before. No one bothered me at all."

Proud of His Son

Ellis Thomas, father of Jefferson, is proud of his son. The experience at Central did not leave a scar, the father said.

"Jeff has not bitterness in his heart," Mr. Thomas, who has been deacon at the Arch Street Baptist Church for the last 15 years, continued. "He is kind and trusting. He'll never do anything to hurt anyone. He's an active church worker you know."

Two blocks from Central High, as near as the police would permit them to go, a crowd of segregationists yelled, jeered and screamed against integration. The police had to use their billy clubs and fire hoses to keep the crowd from spilling onto the school

NAACP Tells Baptist Leaders Little Rock Forced Legal Move

NEW YORK.—The filing of papers in court in behalf of Little Rock Negro students was necessary in order that their legal rights under a Federal court order would not be waived the NAACP asserted here last week.

Dr. J. H. Jackson, president of the National Baptist Convention, Inc., wired Roy Wilkins, NAACP executive secretary, expressing regret "at the filing of suit at this time against Little Rock school board on student placement question."

"The struggle for democracy in education is not only a legal question," Dr. Jackson wired, "but is also a question of constructive human relations and good will. We must not sacrifice the latter in meticulous contention for the former."

The NAACP reply voiced its "distress" at the release of Dr. Jackson's telegram to the daily press "in the light of the readily available factual data on the Little Rock situation." It cited the headline in a New York morning paper, "Negro Hits NAACP" and stated, "We can imagine the elaborate and enthusiastic displays in the southern dailies."

Pointing out that the Little Rock school board had failed to assign the remaining Negro students who had attended Central High in 1957-58 under an order of the Federal court, Secretary Wilkins wrote, "unless legal action was undertaken in behalf of these students, their rights—already determined—would have been waived. Under the original plan approved by the Federal court, school officials were to allocate children to the high schools on the basis of attendance areas . . . and officials were not to change the original plan without prior approval of the court. The papers filed last week were for the purpose of discovering whether or not the original plan had been followed."

The NAACP declared its wholehearted agreement with the Baptist leader that "constructive human relations and good will" are part of the struggle, but asserted that "white Southerners themselves have made legal action more necessary than ever through enactment of hundreds of laws . . . to circumvent the Supreme Court ruling and to force Negro citizens to engage in long court battles in behalf of their children."

Yancey Count, N. C., where 27 Negro children must travel 80 miles a day for schooling, and where the school board has denied a petition of parents for integration, was cited by the NAACP letter as a flagrant case where the "white officials of that county have not employed 'constructive human relations and good will,'" thus forcing Negro parents to take legal action.

"We join in the fervent hope," the NAACP letter said, "that justice and good will will stimulate corrective action in the school desegregation field. However, having before us abundant evidence that . . . our die-hard opponents have not dealt fairly in good faith on basic issues, we stand ready to assist with legal advice to any Negro citizens who requests our aid in securing or vindicating his constitutional rights."

The NAACP letter hailed the support the organization has received from the National Baptist Convention, Baptist clergymen and lapmen, recalling Dr. Jackson's personal invitation to Executive Secretary Wilkins to address the 1956 convention in Denver.

"We very much hope that we may continue to enjoy this support," the letter said. "I welcome further discussion in the interest of making clear to friend and foe alike the unity I am sure exists on the fundamental issue, irrespective of the diferences of opinion on the particular situation in Little Rock."

Attys. Want Admission On School Zone Basis

Little Rock, Ark. — Attorneys for the National Association for the Adancement of Colored People this week sought action to invalidate Little Rock's pupil placement law after it was announced that only 6 of the sixty Negro pupils enrolled in the citys 3 formerly all-white high schools would be accepted.

Federal Judge Axel J. Beck of Elk Point, South Dakota, ruled here last week that the pupil placement law was constitutional on its face. As in the Alabama testing of the law, it was ruled constitutional if it is not used to discriminate because of race or color.

The NAACP attorneys filed a motion in the United States District Court which asked that the Litle Rock School Board be required to admit all the Negro students according to the school districts or zones in which they live. The schools involved are Central, Hall and Technical.

Using the pupil placement law, which NAACP officials have asserted is a screen to prevent integration, the school board assigned 3 Negro students to Hall and 3 to Central. The rest of the registrants were assigned to the all Negro Horace Mann High school.

Everett Tucker, Jr., president of the Little Rock school board expressed surprise over the NAACP action. He said that the board had advised the NAACP that "the course being followed was proper under the existing situations."

Tucker indicated that the board would fight the motion by the NAACP. He also stated that any pupil not satisfied with his assignment could re-contact the board and be given full and prompt consideration of his case.

White School Closed

Tucker also expressed the view that "Negroes who were the principal victims of the school closing, should be gratified that the School Board is making it possible for Negro children to resume their interrupted education."

This point is debateable, however, since the T. J. Raney private segregated white high school, to which dedicated segregationist from all over the world contributed money, closed on August 4 because it was "flat broke." This development also left Little Rock's white students without a school.

The school was in the midst of a $435,000 building program and more than 1,200 high school students had enrolled for the fall semester. Land had been broken for a modern school, including a football field and field house.

Said Dr. T. J. Raney, president of the board and for whom the school was named, "and in so doing we have completely depleted our funds." Raney, a physician, said the "spontaneous financial support the board had expected failed to materialize."

School Zones

The motion filed by the attorneys asked an order restraining the board from refusing to admit or enroll Negro students who present themselves for admission to such of the Little Rock Senior High schools as they may be entitled to enter pursuant to prescribed school zones.

2 Negroes Enter Central; Police Hold Back Crowd

Club-Swinging Cops Halt March in Little Rock

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — Two Negroes integrated Central High School Wednesday as club-swinging police held back a crowd of jeering segregationists.

Elizabeth Eckford, 17, and Jefferson Thomas, 16, walked quietly into the massive school to join 1,400 white students.

A block away, nearly 400 white men, women and children milled at an intersection where violence exploded only an hour earlier.

Some in the crowd had taken part in a march on Central from the state Capitol. Gov. Orval E. Faubus told a segregationist rally there that nothing was to be gained by fighting in the streets.

Police Chief Gene Smith and a score of patrolmen met the marchers—200 strong—just before they reached Central.

24 PERSONS ARRESTED

He shouted for the paraders to disperse but his order brought yells of defiance and cries of "you cowards."

Swiftly, officers closed with the marchers. Several men were beaten over the head with billy clubs. A fire truck was standing by and Smith had it turn hoses on the crowd.

The demonstration wavered and broke. Later it formed again and was reinforced by others who booed and catcalled at police.

At least 24 persons were arrested. Three were teen-age girls, hauled kicking and screaming to police cars. One demonstrator, who said he had been clubbed, was hospitalized.

Inside Central, classes went on peacefully and the two Negroes ended their first day without incident. They walked out of the school, waited on a corner for their car but when it failed to show they called a taxicab.

Only scattered remarks were heard from white students. One boy urged a girl to kick the Negroes as she walked past them. Another girl told the Negroes while they were waiting for their ride that "it's not polite to stand in the streets."

All of the four public high schools are on half-day basis this week with full schedules beginning Monday.

Central was the second high school integrated Wednesday. In the morning, three Negro girls entered Hall High School uneventfully. Tech High School, a small vocational school where no Negroes were assigned by the school board, started classes without incident. So did the all-Negro Horace Mann High School.

The four high schools opened nearly a month ahead of schedule. Faubus shut them against court-ordered integration during the 1958-59 school year.

NO WORDS PASSED

The school board, determined to obey federal integration mandates, assigned three Negroes to Hall and three to Central for the next term.

Sixty Negroes registered for once-white high schools but the board assigned the other 54 to Horace Mann High School under a state pupil placement law.

Only Thomas was expected to appear at Central Wednesday. A spokesman for the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People said recently that the Eckford girl had enough credits for graduation and the third Negro assigned to Central, 16-year-old Carlotta Walls, was at summer school in Chicago.

A few white students stood on the lawn in front of Central as Thomas and Elizabeth Eckford approached the entrance. No words were passed.

The Eckford girl and Thomas were among the nine Negroes who integrated Central two years ago amid other segregationist violence. President Eisenhower sent federal troops to the school that year and the Negroes attended classes under military guard.

FAUBUS CAUTIOUS

Elizabeth Eckford was the first Negro to appear at the massive school when it was first integrated on that morning of Sept. 4, 1957. She was turned back then by state guardsmen posted at the school by Faubus.

A mob surging in the street before Central screamed taunts and threats at her then. Wednesday, there was silence as she walked across the campus with Thomas.

The segregationist rally on the Capitol lawn Wednesday morning was orderly. A thousand persons displayed anti-integration placards, sang "Dixie" to the strains of a phonograph in a sound truck.

Faubus showed up an hour after the rally began. He was cheered wildly during and after a brief speech. The governor told the segregationists he was behind them, but cautioned against violence.

LED BY SOUND TRUCK

"Let us continue the struggle, and never grow weary," Faubus said, "But let us do this in a way of which our posterity can be proud."

The words had no effect on some.

Led by the sound truck, still blaring "Dixie," the march to Central got under way.

The marchers chanted, "2-4-6-8, we don't want to integrate." Five men bearing American and Arkansas flags headed the parade. A boy pranced along, playing a military charge call on a bugle.

Smith and his officers — some hurriedly summoned from Hall High School—waited near Central.

Shouting his orders for the marchers to halt, Smith said, "I'm giving you this one chance to get out of the way."

They kept coming. The police moved in. Clubs were swinging.

Six men were pulled out of the crowd and shoved into patrol wagons. Smith ordered the fire hoses turned on.

HALL HIGH QUIET

Resistance broke. Hoses played on the street but demonstrators regrouped on sidewalks.

Two boys began walking up and down the street, waving American flags. The crowd cheered. Police arrested them.

Police warned that anyone insulting them would be arrested. Laughter and insults greeted this. More arrests were made, including three teen-age girls.

By midafternoon the crowd had dwindled to less than a hundred.

The violence at Central was in sharp contrast to what happened at Hall High School. Only a few spectators there watched three Negro girls walk in.

They were Effie Jones, 17, and Estelle Thompson and Elsie Robinson, both 16. They were all new to integration, and so was Hall High School.

Hall's classes ended at noon. One of the Negro girls said there was "no trouble worth reporting" inside the school.

Faubus called the school board and Smith traitors and puppets of the federal government in a last-hour surprise appearance on television Tuesday night.

SOLON'S CHILD PRESENT

Faubus had no immediate comment on Wednesday's violence.

One of those carrying a sign at the segregationist rally was Ann Alford, 8-year-old daughter of Rep. Dale Alford (D-Ark). Her mother, who accompanied her, expressed happiness over the big turnout.

Alford, a diehard segregationist, ousted veteran Rep. Brooks Hays in last November's 5th Congressional District election. He charged Hays with being too moderate on the racial issue.

Everett Tucker Jr., president of the school board, earlier had said Little Rock was at the crossroads Wednesday.

He said the action of the people of Little Rock would determine whether it would again take its place of leadership in the South or continue to be held up as a "symbol of bigotry and defiance of constituted authority."

The federal government watched the school situation but took no part. Integration was first ordered by a federal court three years ago.

troops if there are further integration disorders. Previously, the governor said emphatically he would never use his powers to enforce integration.

At Hall High School, in a fashionable residential area, three Negro girls entered and left without a sign of resentment. Effie Jones, Estella Thompson and Elsie Robinson were hardly noticed.

The situation was the same at Central, where 16-year-old Jefferson Thomas is the only Negro student.

Faubus told a news conference he had been prepared to send state police and Arkansas National Guardsmen into action Wednesday if local authorities had been unable to quell a segregationist demonstration.

PRIVATE HIGH SCHOOL
LITTLE ROCK

Private High School Folds in Little Rock

Washington, D.C.
Post p. A10
Aug 7
Used 8-5-59

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Aug. 4 (AP)—The integration front in Little Rock today saw:

• The last of the all-white private schools fold because of lack of money.

• A Federal judge uphold state pupil-placement laws being used to reopen the four public high schools to token integration.

• Legality of Gov. Orval E. Faubus' plan to integrate only two of the high schools called "iffy" by the School Board's attorney.

Raney High School was closed by the Little Rock Private School Corp. because, as its president, Dr. T. J. Raney, said, "We are broke."

Raney was the largest of three private all-white schools started last fall after Gov Faubus closed the public high schools to stop integration enforced by Federal troops in the 1957-8 term.

The decision to close Raney came unexpectedly. Registration of 1235 pupils there for the new term and plans for a new building had indicated it would open again.

U. S. District Judge Axel J. Beck of Aberdeen, S. D., upheld two state pupil-placements acts as constitutional on their face.

His decision, handed down here, came in an order for the Dollarway School near Pine Bluff, Ark., to admit three Negro pupils. Beck said the Dollarway School Board had misused one of the placement acts to conceal its pro-segregation attitude.

Herschel Friday Jr., attorney for the Little Rock School Board, said Faubus' plan to integrate only two of the high schools probably could pass a Federal court test only if all parties concerned agreed to it. He doubted that would happen.

Faubus has proposed to integrate Hall High School in fashionable Pulaski Heights and Horace Mann, leaving Central and Tech all white.

Both segregationists and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People have attacked both the Governor's and the School Board's integration plans.

The law Faubus used to close the schools last Sept. 12 has been thrown out by a Federal court and the School Board has been ordered once more to integrate the schools.

New Weapon In Little Rock School Integration Situation

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — A brand new weapon was unlimbered in the Little Rock school battle today—segregated classes in an integrated school.

School officials re - scheduled classes for Ann McLeod, one of 700 white students at Hall High, so she won't have to sit with any of the three Negro girls who integrated Hall last week.

Ann's father, attorney John A. McLeod Jr., invoked a little-noted state law to get segregated classes for his daughter. School officials agreed the law, passed with a batch of other segregation measures in the 1958 special legislature, was valid. The law says no student can be forced to sit in the same classroom with a person of another race.

An attorney for the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, Wiley Branton of Pine Bluff, said the NAACP would go to court to fight any attempt to segregate Negro students in class. He said the U. S. Supreme Court had ruled in an Oklahoma case that a Negro, once admitted to an integrated school, could not be segregated within the school.

School Board Secretary Ted L. Lamb said McLeod's request was the only one received so far. He said he hoped not many others would follow.

Four Negro pupils joined white classmates at two public high schools today in the start of Little Rock's first full week of integration.

The atmosphere was peaceful at Central and Hall high schools. Police stood guard.

1958 State Law To Be Honored

Little Rock Schools Would Segregate Classes In Integrated Units

By United Press International

WASHINGTON, Aug. 16. — School Board President Everett Tucker Jr. said Sunday Little Rock school would honor a 1958 Arkansas law permitting segregated classes within integrated schools.

The law has been invoked by a Little Rock attorney on behalf of his 15-year old daughter. The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People has said it would test the statute in court if it is honored.

'We'll Abide By It'

Appearing on the television program, Face the Nation, Mr. Tucker said of the law: "As long as it is on the books, we'll abide by it."

He said he did not know how long it would take for the law to get into the courts. But he said he did not anticipate that the legal fight would cause any problem in the day-to-day operations of the integrated schools in the meantime.

Asked what would happen if parents of all white children at the integrated schools sought segregated classes, Mr. Tucker said, "I assume we'd have to go along."

Mr. Tucker, who described himself as a segregationist, declined to say whether he would "welcome" a test of the law. He said merely he was "confident" that it would be tested.

Legal Choice Cited

Mr. Tucker said that while he favored separation of the races, he believed that legal choice now was some degree of desegregation or no public school at all.

He said he felt it was possible for Little Rock to open schools on an integrated basis this year because of a "complete change in City Hall," a new police chief, new police uniforms and higher paychecks. He said it all had "worked wonders" and improved morale.

Asked about Governor Orval Faubus' comment that the Little Rock School Board has "betrayed" the people, Mr. Tucker said Governor Faubus, up for re-election, has asked the people to remedy the situation at the polls.

Mr. Tucker said the Little Rock board already has gone through two elections. While its present members were not "overwhelmed by a great mandate," he said, they were elected.

Students Ignore "Sleeper Law In Little Rock

LITTLE ROCK, Ark.—School officials reported Monday that apparently white students are ignoring the opportunity to use a state law which would keep them from attending classes with Negroes.

And 42 miles south of Little Rock segregated schools lost another battle, when the Dollarway School near Pine Bluff was brought closed to integration by a federal judges action.

Everett Tucker Jr., president of the Little Rock School Board, had said Sunday that a sleeper" law providing for segregated classes in integrated schools would be honored.

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People quickly announced, however, that if it is applied to cause discrimination to the four Negro students enrolled in Central and Hall high schools, it will be attacked in court.

The application of the law-one of a package of segregation bills passed in 1958 is the newest tactic in the integration battle. The law provides simply that no student will be forced to attend classes with members of another race.

BROUGHT IT IN TO OPEN

But officials said there was only one request to invoke the "sleeper" statute on Arkansas law books as the school went into the second week.

John A. McLeod Jr., a white attorney, brought the virtually unnoticed statute into the open. He announced he invoked it to keep his 15 - year - old daughter, Ann Lane from having to study with Negro students.

The girl is a student at Hall High School, where three Negro girls have been assigned. He said he wanted other parents to be aware of it and use it if they wished.

REFUSES DELAY

Judge Axel J. Beck refused meanwhile to give the school a delay in an injunction forcing the school near Pine Bluff to accept three Negros when it opens Sept. 8. He said as long as the Negro students lived in the Dollarway area, they should be admitted to the school.

Segregation leaders say they have information that two of the Negroes have decided against any attempt at integration, and the third "might pull out too,' before school opens."

On another front Mrs. Dale Alford, wife of the U. S. representative from Little Rock, sent a letter to Mayor Werner Knoop demanding action on charges of brutality brought against police chief Gene Smith by segregationists who are angry at him for using billy clubs and fire hoses to break up a demonstration Wednesday at Central High school.

Knoop said he might bring the request up Monday night with the city directors aldermen.

FIRST INCIDENT

Meanwhile, the first open harassment of Negro students attending integrated classes broke out at Central High School Monday.

A group of white students jeered at Jefferson Thomas as he walked out of the school and stood waiting on a street corner for a car to pick him up and take him home.

The three Negro girls attending Hall High School walked to and from school undisturbed.

"SLEEPER LAW"
1958 STATE LAW . . .

Judge OK's School Law in Arkansas

Little Rock, Ark., Aug. 4 [Special]—Reopening of public high schools in this city with token segregation and without competition from private, all-white schools such as were operated last year apparently was assured by developments here Tuesday.

One was a United States District court ruling that Arkansas' 1959 pupil-placement law, under which the school board plans to reopen the schools, is "constitutional on its face," and the other was an announcement that privately-operated Raney High school is going out of business.

"Assure Equal Rights"

Judge Axel J. Beck of Aberdeen, S. D., sitting in the United States District court here, upheld the pupil-placement law with an observation that its provisions "assure equal rights to all children in any Arkansas school district."

The school board relied on this law in its recent assignment of three Negroes to Little Rock's Central High school, three others to the city's Hall High school, and 54 to the city's all-Negro Horace Mann High school. This disposed of applications from 60 Negroes seeking assignment to white schools.

The decision to discontinue Raney High school was announced by Dr. T. J. Raney, president of the Little Rock Private School corporation. He said, "We are out of money."

Contributions Fail

Raney High was the largest of three private schools established to handle some of the white students displaced when Gov. Orval Faubus shut Little Rock's four public high schools against court-ordered integration last fall. The other two, set up by churches, had previously been discontinued.

Raney High operated in the 1958-59 school year with 750 pupils and was financed with contributions of $297,540. No tuition was charged. Applications for enrollment from 1,200 pupils for the coming fall term had been received. Officials said they needed $435,000 for 1959-60 operation.

"Since it appears the Little Rock public high schools will be open," Dr. Raney said, "and since spontaneous support has failed to materialize, we find no alternative but to release our students so they may register at the public school of their choice."

Orders Integration

Gov. Faubus, who had conferred with Dr. Raney before the foldup of Raney High was announced, commented: "You can't operate a school without money."

Racial school integration in Arkansas won another victory in another decision by Judge Beck Tuesday.

Ruling on a case arising from the failure of the board of Dollarway School district, near Pine Bluff, Ark., to assign Negro pupils to an all-white school, Judge Beck ordered the board to admit three Negroes for the coming term.

The judge said the Dollarway board and school officials had maintained a "rigid racial segregation policy in all of its schools," and accused the board of using a 1956 pupil-placement act as a "cover-up" for this policy.

ARKANSAS

Faubus' Authority Challenged

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Jan. 12 (AP)—Gov. Orval E. Faubus said today he saw no chance of Little Rock's closed schools reopening soon. Simultaneously, the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People asked a Federal court to nullify Faubus' authority and reopen the schools.

While Faubus was holding a press conference prior to the formal opening of the 1959 Arkansas Legislative session, an NAACP attorney, Wiley Branton of Pine Bluff, was filing a motion in United States District Court seeking to have Faubus' state-law power declared unconstitutional.

Removal of the Governor's authority to close the schools would pave the way for court action seeking to reopen them.

The NAACP sought to have a 3-judge court pass on the validity of the Arkansas anti-integration acts and then order the reopening of the schools. The latter action would presume that the Federal judges would strike down the Arkansas laws as invalid.

The lengthy NAACP motion also sought to have all members of the State Board of Education and all state fiscal officers made a party to its court action, obviously attempting to head off Faubus' plans to use State money in support of Little Rock's private, segregated high school.

The school, Raney High School, was founded after the Governor closed the four public high schools last September and has been financed by public contributions. Faubus has said the Legislature will be asked to pass laws designed to make it possible to give State aid to the private high school.

The NAACP motion, encompassing all of these requests to the Federal judiciary, has not been set for hearing.

Faubus' stand-pat statement about the closed high schools included a disclosure that he would seek three pieces of anti-integration legislation from the General Assembly, which convened today.

The Governor declined to say what form the new legislation might take. In the past, he has said he felt a package of segregation laws passed at an August, 1958, special legislative session was adequate to handle the integration problem.

Under one of these laws, Faubus closed the city's four high schools last Sept. 12 after the United States Supreme Court refused a delay in court-ordered integration.

Discussing a ruling by U. S. District Judge John E. Miller of Fort Smith, who on Saturday gave the Little Roock School Board 30 days to produce a workable integration plan, Faubus said he thought School Board members would be removed from office if they attempted to reopen the schools on an integrated basis.

Bennett Offers Series Of Bills On Integration

Arkansas Attorney General Goes Over Old Ground In Some Measures

15 PRESENTED IN HOUSE

Part Of Package OK'd Last August — Alabama Pupil Placement Is Copied — NAACP Is Prime Target

From The Commercial Appeal
Little Rock Bureau

LITTLE ROCK, Feb. 4.—Fifteen separate measures designed as further state barriers against integration and activities of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People were introduced in House of Representatives today.

Drafted by Atty. Gen. Bruce Bennett, the bills range from proposals to draft a new pupil placement law to forbidding the NAACP to practice law in Arkansas. They were introduced without prior notice.

Some of the measures would re-enact bills adopted during the August special session of the General Assembly, when Mr. Bennett offered a package of seven bills. Some are similar to segregation proposals already acted on in this three-week-old session.

Similar Bill Passed

For instance, about the time the bills were introduced Wednesday, the House approved a measure by Representative George W. Davis of Sevier County which is similar to Alabama's pupil placement law. The vote was 81 to 1.

One Bennett proposal would rewrite as Arkansas law the Alabama placement law "in its entirety," Mr. Bennett said. His proposals were introduced separately by various House members.

The Alabama pupil placement law has been upheld by the United States Supreme Court "on its face," but the court warned it would be invalidated if applied with discrimination.

One of the attorney general's proposals also would make it unlawful for anyone to solicit or urge "nonconformance with the established traditions, customs and usages" of the state. He said this bill is designed to prevent Negro demonstrations such as those in Oklahoma City restaurants last year. The General Assembly already has approved a similar measure this session.

Disposal Provided

The newest proposal would authorize the state, or any city or county, to sell, lease "or otherwise dispose of property" in cases where integration threatened public swimming pools, parks, playgrounds or golf courses.

Two proposals aimed against the NAACP, which the attorney general has been in litigation against for two years, would prohibit a nonprofit organization from engaging in political activity and from practicing law as a corporation in the state. The NAACP is a non-profit organization.

Would Clear Title

Still another of the package bills would clear the title to property being used by the Thomas J. Raney High School here. Raney High was organized after Gov. Orval Faubus closed Little Rock high schools last year. It has functioned since as a segregated, privately-supported school.

Coinciding with House introduction of the bills was routine Senate approval of a resolution by Senator Max Howell of Little Rock urging Congress to draft an amendment to the United States Constitution to give states "exclusive control" over their public schools.

Senator Howell said, "This is one sure way we could get something done about the school situation."

Issues Shape Up For Legislature At Little Rock

Arkansas Assembly Will Convene At Noon Today For 62nd Session

ASSESSMENT IS TOPIC

Revision Bills May Be First Major Legislation— Faubus To Tell Program Tomorrow

By KENNETH JOHNSON
From The Commercial Appeal
Little Rock Bureau

LITTLE ROCK, Jan. 11. — Arkansas legislators started arriving here Sunday for Monday's opening of the 62nd General Assembly, with some expecting assessment revision bills to be the first major legislation attempted.

Whether Judge John E. Miller's integration ruling of Saturday will prompt new segregation legislation remained to be seen.

There was some speculation the new integration order might encourage a previously rumored move to introduce legislation to abolish the public school system.

LITTLE ROCK

May Be In No Hurry

The chief reaction, however, appeared to be that since Judge Miller gave the new Little Rock School Board additional time to comply with integration — and also left the door open to come up with a new integration plan if it desires—there will be no immediate legislative action on the integration issue.

Some legislators met Sunday afternoon with Atty. Gen. Bruce Bennett in a discussion of the communist probe he headed several weeks ago. Meeting with him were members of a legislative council committee which sponsored the communist hearings. Mr. Bennett is preparing a report to the legislature.

There also was the prospect of the House being asked to rule on whether one of its new members should be seated. A last summer's contest in Searcy County involving State Representative Dewey L. Massey of Marshall may provide that controversy.

Mr. Massey, defeated by one vote by incoming Representative Ezra Horton, indicated Sunday he would attempt to keep Mr. Horton from being seated. A House investigation of the contest would have to be undertaken if his request was acted upon.

Monday's proceedings for the most part, however, are expected to be largely routine. Both House and Senate will convene at noon to get organized, and then will settle down to await Tuesday's third term inaugural speech by Gov. Orval Faubus.

Faubus Speaks Tomorrow

The Governor will outline his legislative program in Tuesday's address, although he has given advance indications he doesn't plan to offer a "major program."

Representative Eugene Fleeman of Manila, who's slated to be named House speaker, said Sunday that judging from talk he has heard assessment bills will be among the first introduced in the new 60-day Assembly.

Some counties have expressed dissatisfaction with the reassessment program set up in 1955, and there may be attempts to repeal it. Governor Faubus has declared himself against repeal.

Mr. Fleeman said he wasn't necessarily for repeal, but that he believed some revisions in the law were needed. An East Arkansas delegation, including some property owners from Mr. Fleeman's own county, called on the Governor last week to discuss the reassessment issue.

Faubus To Tell His Aims Today At Joint Session

Inauguration Address By Governor Expected To Set Assembly Keynote

REASSESSMENT ACT HIT

Proposal Seeking Repeal Of Law Is Offered On Opening Day — Some Racial Bills Slated

By KENNETH JOHNSON
From The Commercial Appeal
Little Rock Bureau

LITTLE ROCK, Jan. 12. — A proposal calling for repeal of the state's reassessment law and abolishment of the agency which administers it got the Arkansas Legislature off to a controversial start Monday.

The measure was introduced in the House along with several other major bills even before the Assembly had heard Gov. Orval Faubus' inauguration address, which is expected to set the keynote for most legislative action this session. The Governor will speak at 11 Tuesday morning before a joint House-Senate session.

State Representative N. B. Murphy of Namburg, a new House member from Ashley County, is author of the assessment repeal bill. He asked that the law be repealed, that the Assessment Co-ordination Department be abolished and that assessment problems be transferred back to a tax division of the Arkansas Public Service Commission.

Faubus Against It

Governor Faubus, who has said he is against repeal of the reassessment law, is expected to outline his views on that issue Tuesday — as well as on other questions facing the Assembly.

Representative Murphy's bill bore out previous speculation that an attempt would be made to abolish the assessment program which is shaping up as a major issue before this Assembly.

Also introduced were measures dealing with income tax credits, city financing authority, labor union regulation and one which revived an old issue—proposed exemption of seed and fertilizer from the state sales tax. All were introduced in the House.

Meanwhile, the Senate received what spokesmen there described as the longest bill ever introduced in that body. It was a 449-page proposal introduced by the Senate Insurance Committee and drawn up by the State Insurance Department. It calls for a "comprehensive revision, consolidation and classification" of insurance laws of the state.

Salary Bills Offered

Both bodies submitted appropriation measures to cover legislators' salaries and expenses of the session. The Senate appropriation totals $145,410, the House $284,045. All bills are yet to be voted upon.

The House elected Representative Eugene Fleeman of Manila as its new speaker while Senator Roy Riales of Mena was named president pro-tem of the Senate. Lt. Gov. Nathan Gordon of Morrilton is the regularly presiding Senate officer.

The Legislature, according to Governor Faubus, will get some segregation measures, but they hadn't yet put in an appearance. The Governor said at a press conference he plans three segregation bills but wouldn't specify what they will contain. He gained adoption of six bills, including a school-closing law, at an August special session which he called to deal with the continuing integration crisis.

LITTLE ROCK'S UNREST LAID TO COMMIES

N.A.A.C.P. Also Blamed in Legislative Report

Little Rock, Jan. 16 (AP) — A state legislative committee charged Friday that Arkansas racial unrest was deliberately engineered by the Communist party.

A report by a special education committee of the Arkansas legislative council on its recent probe of alleged subversive activities also accused the National Association for the Advancement of Colored people of being a captive of the communist apparatus.

Mrs. L. C. Bates of Little Rock, president of the Arkansas chapter of the NAACP, denied that the organization had any links with subversives.

Takes Word of Hoover

"I think I would prefer taking the word of J. Edgar Hoover [director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation and the justice department about our organization," she said. "They have clearly given us a clean bill of health many times."

The committee report covered the findings of a three day hearing at Little Rock last month.

Principal witnesses at the hearing were J. B. Matthews of New York, a former aid of the late Sen. Joe McCarthy and Manning Johnson of New York, a Negro who said he once belonged to the Communist party. Matthews and Johnson testified they believed the south's integration troubles were partly brought on by subversives.

None Testify for N. A. A. C. P.

No N. A. A. C. P. members were summoned to testify at the hearing, which was conducted by Arkansas Atty. Gen. Bruce Bennett. The attorney general is an outspoken foe of the N. A. A. C. P.

The education committee's report contended "there has been and now is subversion present in the racial unrest in our state."

"The committee is convinced that the racial unrest in Arkansas was deliberately planned by the Communist party," the report added. "The N. A. A. C. P. appears to have been heavily infiltrated with subversives and, wittingly or unwittingly, is now a captive oft he communis apparatus."

Call Group Subversive

Bennett, who released the report to newsmen, said he believed it was the first time any investigating agency had found the N. A. A. C. P. "subversive."

The 32 page report, largely a summation of proceedings at the hearing, said "this committee has found that the incident which occurred at Little Rock on Sept. 2, 1957 [the beginning of the integration crisis at Central High school] was not something that just happened overnight."

"It was planned, schemed, calculated, and had as its motivating factor the international communist conspiracy of world domination squarely behind the entire shocking episode."

Puts Guards at School

Little Rock's integration crisis — still unresolved — flared when Gov. Orval E. Faubus surrounded Central High with state guardsmen who prevented the entry of nine Negro students. The guardsmen were withdrawn after a federal court enjoined Faubus from interfering with integration and the Negroes entered under federal troop guard.

Rather than see the school integrated again last September, Faubus closed all four Little Rock public high schools. They are still closed.

Bid To Open Little Rock Schools Fails

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP)—A federal judge refused Tuesday to permit the reopening of Little Rock's closed public high schools on a temporarily segregated basis.

U. S. Dist. Judge John E. Miller's ruling left the tangled legal situation here stalemated at least until the constitutionality of Arkansas' anti-integration laws is decided.

School Board President Ed. L. Kinley Jr. said the refusal of the board's request killed all hopes of reopening the high schools this term, either segregated or integrated. They were shut by Gov. Orval E. Faubus in September before classes began.

The board sought to reopen the schools segregated while working out a new integration plan to replace one which caused Faubus to shut the schools. The new plan would have been submitted to the court by Aug. 15.

Brownell told Ike he could use troops in Little Rock

WASHINGTON—It is now official. President Eisenhower called in U.S. troops to put down disturbances in Little Rock, Ark., only after legal advice from then Attorney General Herbert Brownell Jr. The first official document of the legal advice was published by the State Department last week.

"The grave constitutional issues involved," said Mr. Brownell in the formal summary of legal advice to the President during the Little Rock crisis, make it "advisable that this advice should be made into a permanent record."

President Eisenhower sent troops to Little Rock in Sept., 1957, and Federalized the Arkansas National Guard after being advised by Brownell that it would not be "reasonable or effective in the circumstances" to use U.S. marshals, special deputies or the FBI.

3 on Little Rock Board Expect Schools To Open

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP)—Three Little Rock school board members think the city's four closed public high schools will be operating in September with some degree of integration.

Ted L. Lamb, a member of the six-man board Wednesday confirmed reports that he, Everett Tucker Jr. and Russell Matson Jr. had predicted this in a series of informal meetings with principals and teachers at various schools here during the past two weeks.

Ed L. McKinley Jr., president of the board, and members Ben Rowland Sr. and Traffic Judge Robert Laster did not accompany the others to the meetings.

Lamb, Tucker and Matson are considered foes of Gov. Faubus' stand in the integration dispute. The Governor attacked them as "integrationists" during a hotly contested school board race last December.

McKinley and the remaining two board members are considered staunch advocates of the attitude taken by Faubus, who prohibited the schools from opening last fall in a maneuver aimed at averting court-ordered integration.

Tucker skirted a direct answer to a question about whether McKinley, Rowland and Laster had been asked to attend the meetings.

He said, however, "the other members would have been welcome to come if they wished to."

Tucker emphasized that the meetings were informal and "completely unofficial."

Speed Integration, Little Rock Ordered

U.S. Judge Gives School Board 30 Days For Action

BY JOHN HASLAM

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (UPI) — Federal District Judge John E. Miller Saturday gave the Little Rock school board 30 days in which to initiate steps to integrate its four closed high schools.

There was little agreement among members of the board, however, as to how and when they could comply with the order.

Board President E. I. McKinley, Jr., said he had no idea what the members would do. Their next regular meeting is Jan. 29, McKinley said, but he promised to call a special meeting if he was requested to.

On one extreme was Robert W. Laster, Jr., a dedicated segregationist. He said the power to open the schools had been taken from the board by a state law.

On the other extreme was Ted Lamb, a moderate, who hoped the schools could be opened by late January.

In between, Everett A. Tucker Jr., said for the first time, the board has a timetable upon which to operate. He added, however, the board will have to rely on its attorneys as to "what our powers are."

Laster referred to a law passed by the Legislature last August permitting the governor to close any school facing integration, and making it a misdemeanor to violate the law.

"The power to open the schools was taken away from us by the Legislature," Laster said. "I won't speculate what will happen in a situation like this, but I don't see how the court can order me to commit a crime."

Wiley Branton, a Pine Bluff, Ark., Negro attorney, said the state law is no defense.

"If they (the school board) think state statutes are a defense, let them go into court," Branton said. "But in the meantime, they should go out there and open those schools."

Branton is the Arkansas attorney for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. The NAACP is not a party to the case, but Branton has represented the Negro children.

Judge Miller's order was the outgrowth of a mandate from the Eighth U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals at St. Louis. It enjoined the board from transferring school properties for operation of a segregated school.

The appeals court mandate did not direct Judge Miller to order the schools opened.

"However, the mandate does direct that the school directors shall take such affirmative steps as the district court may direct to facilitate and accomplish the integration of the Little Rock School District," Miller said.

Board At Little Rock Asks School Opening

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP)—The Little Rock School Board asked federal court permission Wednesday to reopen Little Rock's four closed public high schools on a segregated basis while it works out a plan for compliance with court orders to integrate.

The board promised a plan acceptable to both the court and residents of the school district by Aug. 15.

Board President Ed I. McKinley Jr., said the schools could be opened by next Monday if the court approves the request and Gov. Orval E. Faubus will return control of the schools to the board.

Faubus, reached at Foreman, Ark., where he was attending a plant dedication, said he would be glad to discuss reopening of the schools under the board's proposal.

"However, I cannot comment at length on the plan until I have studied the actual petition," he said.

The board's request was filed for consideration of U.S. Dist. Judge John E. Miller, who on Jan. 10 ordered the board to show it was taking positive steps toward implementing a plan of integration in the closed schools and called for a report within 30 days. Wednesday's petition serves as this report.

Miller said he would set a hearing on the petition as soon as possible.

"But I don't see how I'll be able to get to it before the week of Feb. 2 because of the press of other court business," he said.

The board, elected Dec. 6 after the previous board resigned en masse, said that it had never had jurisdiction over the high schools, which Faubus closed Sept. 12 to forestall integration.

"This board is acting in good faith and with all possible speed," McKinley said. "We simply do not feel it is possible at this time to operate the high schools under the old plan of integration which has been rejected by the people."

He referred to an election late in September, when Little Rock residents voted overwhelmingly to keep the schools closed rather than reopen them integrated."

The old plan, submitted by the former board and upheld in a long series of federal court decisions, calls for gradual integration beginning at the high school level.

It has been stymied by the school closings.

Little Rock Board Asks More Time

Would Open Schools Next Month On Segregated Basis

By LLOYD HOLBECK

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — (UPI) — The Little Rock school board decided Wednesday to ask Federal District court to allow it to open the city's four closed public high schools on a segregated basis by Jan. 26 and to let the board assume full responsibility of the schools.

The board promised to come up with some plan to operate the schools under decisions of the U.S. Supreme Court not later than next Aug. 15. The board did not indicate if the plan would be for operation of the schools on an integrated basis, but it scuttled the Blossom plan of gradual integration.

Wednesday's action was in reply to a recent order by Federal District Judge John E. Miller to develop a plan within 30 days to operate the schools integrated.

"Eager" For A Solution

Gov. Orval E. Faubus kept the schools closed last September to prevent their mixing the race.

The state president of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People immediately objected to the board's plan to reopen the schools.

"It certainly would not be acceptable," said Mrs. L. C. Bates. "We would fight it in court."

Wiley Branton, Pine Bluff Negro attorney for the NAACP, was not immediately available for comment.

The board said it was both willing and eager to explore "with deliberate speed" all avenues which would lead to a lasting solution and one which would be acceptable to the court.

The board said calmness could be restored to the restive Little Rock situation only by:

Permitting the district to operate all closed schools on a segregated basis;

Permitting the board to ask Faubus to return the closed schools to its jurisdiction;

And permitting the board to open and operate the schools segregated at the earliest possible time — Jan. 26, the date of the start of the next school term.

Won't Promise Integration

One member of the board, Municipal Judge Robert W. Laster, refused to commit himself to a possible plan of integration being presented next August. He voted with four others, however, to approve the request to Federal District court.

One of the six members was out of town.

"I would like to be assured that what we do is acceptable to the people," Laster said. I don't want to commit myself to a plan of integration in August. I plan to do just the opposite."

Board President Ed I. McKinley, elected to the board unopposed and as a segregationist, said the governor had indicated he would approve the plan.

"I'm confident it will meet with the governor's approval," McKinley said.

He had discussed the plan with the governor.

Didn't Consult NAACP

McKinley said he had not discussed the proposal with officials of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, the leaders in the movement in September, 1957, to get nine Negro students into Central High under armed guard.

"The idea is to restore calmness and dignity to the board," McKinley said. "You can't proceed under a gun and accomplish anything."

The action was the first by the board that was elected last December to replace the old school board which had resigned en masse the month before. The six-member board is equally divided between outspoken segregationists and moderates.

The board's report called the court's attention to the fact that it had been in office only since last Dec. 16. It said the new members have acted in good faith and "with all deliberate speed" in making its report.

Little Rock Board Asks School Bias Delay

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — (UPI) — The Little Rock school board decided to ask Federal District court to allow it to open the city's four closed public high schools on a segregated basis by Jan. 26 and to let the board assume full responsibility of the schools.

In a special election called last Sept. 27 by the governor, the voters of the school district balloted 3-1 against integration of the public schools.

Little Rock Board Seeks To Reopen Four Schools

Little Rock, Ark., Jan. 21 (AP)—The Little Rock School Board Wednesday asked Federal Court permission to reopen Little Rock's four closed public high schools on a segregated basis while it works out a plan for compliance with court orders to integrate.

The board promised a plan acceptable to both the court and residents of the school district by [illegible].

Board President Ed I. McKinley, Jr., said the schools could be opened by next Monday if the court approves the request and if Governor Orval E. Faubus will return control of the schools to the board.

Faubus said he would be glad to discuss reopening of the schools under the board's proposal.

Hearing To Be Set

"However, I cannot comment at length on the plan until I have studied the actual petition," he said.

The board's request was filed for consideration of United States District Judge John E. Miller, who on January 10 ordered the board to show it was taking positive steps toward carrying out a plan of integration in the closed schools and called for a report within 30 days.

Miller said he would set a hearing on the petition as soon as possible.

"But I don't see how I'll be able to get to it before the week of February 2 because of the press of other court business," he said.

Federal Judge To Act This Week In Little Rock Integration Fight

'Struggle Can't Go On and On'

Little Rock, Jan. 6 (U)—Federal Judge John E. Miller said Tuesday that the long legal struggle over integration at Little Rock "cannot go on and on and on," and promised to issue an order by week's end on a mandate of the United States Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals.

The mandate of the St. Louis court directed him to prevent leasing of the City's four closed high schools and to order immediate "affirmative steps" by the School Board to integrate the four high schools, closed by Governor Orval Faubus to block integration.

"There comes a time when we must settle on some course of action," said Judge Miller. "This kind of litigation cannot go on and on and on."

But in the hearing an attorney for a new School Board indicated he expects further court action, and after the court session an attorney for the National Association for The Advancement of Colored People predicted more legal maneuvering.

Herschel Friday, the lawyer for the School Board, asked Judge Miller not to define exactly what affirmative steps it should take to comply with the mandate and asked for more time so the new board can become acquainted with the integration controversy.

Wiley Branton, a Pine Bluff Negro attorney for the N.A.A.C.P., said he thought the Circuit Court was taking into consideration an order of Governor Faubus closing the City's high school.s

"I think the order means this," Branton said: "The District Court should say to the School Board and its superintendent, "You go out there and carry out the plan of integration. . . . . You can do this only by having your schools open."

Justice Department attorney Donald P. MacGuineas said, "I think it should be made plain the Circuit Court was not confining its order to leasing. I certainly hope the School Boardintegration mandate directs that understands they cannot sit backthe District Court's order apply and say, 'We're sorry, the Gov-either to the original board or ernor has closed the schools.'" its "successor."

Integration Case May Be Delayed

Little Rock School Board Considering Plea For Hearing Tuesday

By KENNETH JOHNSON

From The Commercial Appeal Little Rock Bureau

LITTLE ROCK, Jan. 3.—The new Little Rock School Board may ask for a delay in proceedings in Tuesday's scheduled hearing before Federal District Judge John E. Miller on the integration dispute.

Ed I. McKinley, board chairman, said Saturday the final strategy was up to the board attorney, Herschel Friday, but that the board was considering a delay plea.

Judge Miller has scheduled the hearing to receive suggestions or arguments on how to proceed under the integration mandate issued some two months ago by the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals.

Want More Time

Mr. McKinley referred to a motion entered last week by Wiley Branton, Negro Pine Bluff attorney representing the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, that the new school board be named party to the long-pending litigation, in place of the previous school board. The previous board has asked to be dismissed as party in the litigation.

"We believe we're entitled to at least a few days' delay to give us more time to figure out what pleadings we should make in the case," said Mr. McKinley. The new board so far has entered no written arguments or motions in the litigation.

The board chairman pointed out that Judge Miller first must rule on Branton's motion to put the new board officially into the case. That's considered a formality, however, since the

The school board, once officially in the case, is expected to plead an inability to act if faced with an integration order. Board sources have pointed out they couldn't carry out an integration order at this time because the public schools still are closed here under a state school-closing law voted by an August special session of the Legislature, and invoked Sept. 12 by Gov. Orval Faubus.

Court Test Argued

A court test of the school-closing law first would have to be made to clear up that point, they have argued privately.

A motion for a delay, however, would precede any pleadings based on the school-closing law, Mr. McKinley indicated Saturday.

About 80 per cent of the 3,600 displaced students have found other means of continuing their studies—either at two private schools opened here, at public schools elsewhere or by correspondence courses.

Little Rock High School Integration Order Near

Struggle Cannot Go on and on, Says US Judge

By PAUL NEWMAN

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (UPI)—Federal Judge John E. Miller said Tuesday that the long legal struggle over integration at Little Rock "cannot go on and on and on" and promised to issue an order by week's end on a mandate of the United States eighth circuit court of appeals.

The mandate of the St. Louis court directed him to prevent leasing of the city's four closed high schols and to order immediate "affirmative steps" by the school board to integrate the four high schols, closed by Gov. Orval Faubus to block integration.

"There comes a time when we must settle on some course of action," said Judge Miller. "This kind of litigation cannot go on, and on and on."

SEES MORE MANEUVERING

But in the hearing, an attorney for a new school board indicated he expects further court action and after the court session an attorney for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People predicted more legal maneuvering.

Herschel Friday, the lawyer for the school board, asked judge Miller not to define exactly what affirmative steps it should take to comply with the mandate, and asked for more time so the new board can become acquainted with the integration controversy.

Robert W. Laster, a member of the school board, challenged the right of the district court to order the schools opened because of the Arkansas law closing the schools.

He said a state statute is valid until declared void by a court of competent jurisdiction and the law is therefore still valid. This, he said, if the district court orders the schools open, the board would be guilty of a violation of the state law.

"Can this court tell me to commit a crime?" he asked.

ORIGINAL SUIT ATTACKED

Laster said after the hearing he planned to adopt an argument of attorney Kenneth Coffelt.

Coffelt, representing Mrs. Margaret Jackson, president of the Central High Mothers League, attempted to intervene in the case but was turned down. He argued the original suit to integrate the schools was not any good, because the Negro children did not prove $3000 or more damage to get federal jurisdiction.

He said the circuit court of appeals threw out a case of Mrs. Jackson because it did nit state such damages. That suit fought the authority of President Eisenhower to send troops to Little Rock.

If that rule applied to the other case, it should apply to the Negroes' case, too, he argued.

Miller refused to discharge the federal government as a party to the case, as asued by the school board, and made the new school board, elected Dec. 6, a party to the suit.

WITH NEW DEADLINE

4 Of 5 Little Rock Students In School

BY JOHN STARR

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — This is high school education in Little Rock today:

Hastily opened private schools. Correspondence courses. Or long bus rides to out-of-town schools.

Despite these handicaps to learning, four out of five of Little Rock's 3,300 high school students are continuing their studies.

A few, finding it more profitable to take jobs, have given up their studies completely. Another small number considers the free time a lark.

All attended Little Rock's four public high schools which Gov. Orval E. Faubus closed last September rather than integrate as ordered by federal courts.

A week ago a U. S. district judge in Little Rock laid down a 30-day deadline for the school board to come up with a plan for integrating the closed high schools in the city.

Their closed schools apparently have brought home the importance of education. But have their attitudes changed on integration, in the face of these hardships?

Here are some representative comments:

LIKE NEW SCHOOLS

Beverly Burks, a sophomore in private and segregated Raney High School, which was opened by the Little Rock Private School Corp., says:

"I'll never go back to Central as long as Raney is open."

She attended Central High School last year, which then had eight Negro students.

"It (Raney) is smaller, more friendly. You get to know everybody. And most everybody out there is in agreement on integration—we don't want it."

Billy Owen, 16, also attended Central last year. But this year, along with 50 other students, he rides a chartered bus daily to Hazen High School, 50 miles from Little Rock.

He has to leave home at 6:30 a. m. and doesn't return until 5 p. m. "It's worth it, though," he says. "An education is worth anything you have to go through to get it."

Billy says he would not return to Central this year, even if it were reopened. He intends to go to Hazen next year "if they'll let me."

Students who criticize their new schools or the closing of the old ones, refuse to permit use of their names. One of these is a 16-year-old Negro girl, a sophomore, who says:

"IT'S UNFAIR"

"I don't think it's fair. I wasn't involved in this controversy. I was very happy at Horace Mann (the Negro high school) and wanted to stay there. I don't think it's right that we should suffer for what others have done."

Another, a 14-year-old white girl who would have been a sophomore at Central this year, says:

"The way I see it, I'm being deprived of my constitutional right to attend public school. I wish they'd get this argument settled so kids could plan their futures."

Neither girl is enrolled in any school. Each is studying at home, without any hope of receiving credit for her work.

Gayle Manor, 17, a senior, also is remaining out of school.

"I'm missing one of the most precious things in life, my senior year in high school," she says. "But I'm resigned to it. I have enough credits and am taking a correspondence course so I can enter the University of Arkansas this summer."

Gayle says she would prefer to have Central open, even if it is integrated.

John Thomas, 18, also would be a senior at Central, but he does not plan to return to school at all.

QUITS SCHOOL

"I'd have gone if the public schools were open," he says. "But I plan to become a carpenter, and I've already begun my apprenticeship, a year earlier than I would have.

"I don't think this has hurt me much, and I'll get to be a journeyman just that much sooner."

But all except those who gave up their studies completely have learned "just how valuable education is," says W. C. Brashears, who came out of retirement to head the Little Rock Private School Corp.'s Raney High.

In most cases, he says, interest and application by the teen-agers the Little Rock School District payroll.

While most students have found a way to continue studies, they have met only the first phase of their problem. For those who want to go on to college there remains the question of whether their credits will be accepted at most colleges and universities.

Those attending classes have been forced to augment classroom instruction with correspondence courses and tutoring to prepare for rigorous college entrance exams.

CAN'T MAKE COLLEGE

"I don't doubt there will be a lot of students who will be unable to qualify for college," says one school official who asks that his name not be used. "By this I mean students with the funds and the inclination to go to college who could get in with an acceptable diploma but who never will be able to pass an entrance exam."

The private schools offer only the basic courses — English, mathematics, science, history—not Latin and other languages which colleges also like on high school transcripts. The Raney school, only one of the private institutions being set up as a permanent facility, plans to offer college preparatory courses, but they are a year away.

"I don't apologize for this school," Brashears says. "I think we've made marvelous progress in the eight weeks we've been open. And someday we'll be a school any student would be proud of. But you can't do it in eight weeks. I've opened new schools before, when the groundwork was well laid in advance and it still took time to get things operating smoothly."

Brashears is sure his school will be accredited as soon as it has been operating long enough to make application. Accreditation could be a saving factor for the school, only one of the private institutions which charges no tuition because it would mean eligibility for state funds. So far the school has operated on money raised by donation—about $265,000—but this will not continue indefinitely.

STATE MONEY PAID

One of the segregation laws under which Faubus closed the schools provides for withholding state money from closed schools and transferring it—at the rate of $176 per year per student—to accredited schools which displaced students might attend. Other public schools already are receiving this money for Little Rock students they have accepted.

One thing is certain: the massive public resistance to school closing forecast by President Eisenhower has not developed in Arkansas. Only the Women's Emergency Committee to Reopen Our Schools is working openly against Faubus.

On the other hand, officials of segregation groups continue to say they would rather have the schools closed indefinitely than accept integration.

Daisy Bates of Little Rock, Arkansas president of the NAACP whose eligibility to attend Central this year brought the school closing, are taking correspondence courses. The other two transferred to schools outside the community.

"It disturbs me that almost half of the Negro children still are unable to get into any school," Daisy Bates says. "But I've talked with many of their parents and they agree that an interruption in their education is a small price to pay for the eventual victory."

FAUBUS PROPOSES STUDENT-AID PLAN

Advocates Direct Payments for Those Who Refuse Integrated Schooling

Special to The New York Times.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Jan. 1[3] —Gov. Orval E. Faubus pro posed in his third-term inaugu ral speech today that Arkansas allow students to collect tuition payments rather than attend public schools.

He called for the adoption of a state constitutional amendment and a law embodying this principle as the means of averting court-ordered racial integration. He also proposed a law to permit private school teachers to participate in the state's teacher retirement system.

Mr. Faubus said his plan to provide student-aid payments would make it unnecessary for the state to abolish the public school system to avoid integration.

The plan provides for elections in which the voters of a school district could authorize payments of local funds to students who did not choose to attend the public schools. The state would then give each student his pro-rata share of state aid money to the district.

Mr. Faubus said his proposed amendment would provide for "local option on the district level, when the people are faced with the problem of forced integration." He declared that it was a "just, workable and feasible substitute" for the present public school financing system.

Stresses Local Option

"It will avoid the step taken in some states—that of providing for state-wide abolition of the public school system," he said. "Its main purpose is to make possible the continued local and state support on a segregated basis where the people choose."

Under the plan the voters of Little Rock could set up local aid payments for Raney High School, the private all-white school established after the Governor closed the city's four public high schools.

Suits filed in state and Federal courts challenge a 1958 law under which the state is authorized to pay private schools into which Little Rock students have transferred. Raney High has not received any state money, but it would be eligible for the payments after it was accredited by the state.
